SALIHOTRA. A muni of ancient days. Vyāsa had once lived in his āśrama. There was a tree near the āśrama which had outlived time. A drink of the water in the pond here quenches hunger and thirst. The tree and the pond were created by the power of Śālihotra’s tapas. The Pāṇḍavas, during their life in exile in the forest, visited this place in the company of Ḥīḍimbi and quenched their hunger and thirst by drinking water from this pond. (M.B., Southern text, Chapter 154).
Śālihotra was an adept in śaivasāstra (science about horses). To bathe in the tirtha called Śālīśūrya created by the muni is to derive the same result as that of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 27 and Chapter 83, Verse 107).

ŚALIKA. A divine mahārāṣṭra. He met Kṛṣṇa once on his (Kṛṣṇa’s) way to Hastināpura and had a talk with the lord. (M.B. Udyoga Pava, Southern Text, Chapter 83).

ŚALIPIṆDA. A nāga born to Kaśyapa-parājñāpati of his wife Kadrū (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 14).

ŚALIŚĪRAS. A Devagandharva, son of Kaśyapa-parājñāpati by his wife Muni. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 4).

ŚALISŪRYA. A holy spot in Kurukṣetra. It is said to have been the place where muni Śālihotra lived. To bathe at this place is to derive the same result as that of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 10).

ŚALMALI. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was the grandson of Kuru and son of Avikṣt. He had seven brothers. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

ŚALMALIDVIPA. One of the seven islands.
1) General. Śalmali island, which is double in extent of Plākṣa island is surrounded by Iκṣura (sugar-cane juice) ocean on all four sides of it. There are seven mountains there which produce gems and they are seven boundaries which separate the regions. Just like this, there are also seven rivers there. The seven rivers are Yoni, Tovā, Viṭṭha, Candrā, Muktā, Vīmocani and Nirvṛtī. Mere remembrance of the seven rivers is sufficient to annihilate all sins. Here people divided into the four classes live. Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras here are called Kapilas, Arunās, Pitas and Kṛṣṇas. These devout people worship Viṣṇu in the form of Vāyu by sublime yajñās. Devas are ever present on this most beautiful island. A tree named Śalmali which gives mental comfort grows in this island. The island is surrounded on all four sides by an ocean of Surā (liquor). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 4).

2) Śalmali island and nāgastra. See under Nāgastra.
ŚĀĻŪKİṆI. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. To bathe in the Daśāvātārtha there, is to derive the same benefit as performing ten aśvamedhas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 13).

ŚALVA I.
1) General information. The lover of Ambā (g.v) the daughter of the King of Kaśi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 16 that this Kaśaṭriya King Śālva was born from a portion of Ajaka the younger brother of Vṛṣṇaparvā.
2) Other details.
(i) Śālva was the ruler of the city named Saubha. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 61).
(ii) He was present at the Svayyamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186 Verse 15).
(iii) He was present at the sacrifice of Royal consecration (Rājaśūya) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 9).
(iv) At the death of Śīṣupāla, King Śālva became angry and besieged Dvārakā. In the battle which followed Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Śālva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 15 to 22).

(v) Śālva had several friends such as Damaghọs, Aṅgā, Kalिगa, Mālvā, Kekaya, Vaṅgā, Magadhā, Kosala, Koṅkaṇa, Hēhaya, Cola, Pāṇḍya, Keraḷa and others. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

ŚALVA II. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, stating that three Śālvas and four Madras were born to Bhadrā from the dead body of her husband Vyūṣṭiśāva. (See under Bhadrā II). Here, ‘Śālvas’ means the rulers of Śālva. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 26 that the people of Śālva fled to the south in fear of Jārāsandha. Satyavān, the husband of Sāvitrī, was a native of Śālva. It is also mentioned that the soldiers of Śālva who joined the army of the Kauravas fought against the Pāṇḍavas. There were Śālvas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas also. Mention is made in Droṇa Parva, Chapter 154, that the Śālvas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, attacked Droṇa, the teacher.

(1) This king attacked the vast army of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle-field of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 1).

(2) The elephant of this Śālva was as big as a mountain and belonged to the family of elephants called Mahābhādra. (Śalya Parva; Chapter 20, Verse 2).

(3) Duryodhana had honoured this low caste King Śālva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 2).

(4) Śātayaki killed this king Śālva; and Dhrṣṭadyumna killed his elephant in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 4).

ŚALVA IV. In Uttarā RMāyaṇa a Śālva, who was a contemporary of Kuśadāvāja, is mentioned. Kuśadāvāja once approached this king Śālva and requested for some financial help. But the covetous Śālva did not give any help. So Kuśadāvāja performed a sacrifice to obtain wealth and prosperity. Sītā was born from that sacrificial fire. (Uttara RMāyaṇa).

ŚALVA V. A story occurs in Brahmapurāṇa, describing how Renukā, the wife of Jamadagni, was infatuated at the sight of a handsome Śālva, and how this event subsequently led to her death. (See under Renukā).

ŚALVASIṆI. An ancient place in South India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 61).

ŚALVAYANA. A king in ancient India. He ran away to South India with his brothers and attendants in fear of Jārāsandha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 27).

ŚALYA. A king who gave advice and leadership to the Kauravas. He ruled over the Madra or Bālhiṅka kingdom. Mādrī, wife of Pāṇḍu was Śālva’s sister. Yet, in the great war he stood firmly on the Kaurava side and died at Kurukṣetra. The following role lie played in the Bhārata story.

(1) At the instance of Bhīṣma he gave his sister Mādrī in marriage to Pāṇḍu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).

(2) He was present at the wedding of Draupadi in the company of his sons Rukmāṅgada and Rukmaratha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 18).

(3) At the Svayyamvara of Draupadi he withdrew from stringing the bow, owning defeat. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 28).

(4) Bhīma defeated him at the wedding of Draupadi. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 23).

(5) During his triumphal tour of the west, Nakula befriend his uncle Śalya, and entertained him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

(6) He participated in Yudhishtīra’s Rājasūya yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 7).

(7) Śisūpāla once opined that Śalya was nobler than Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 14).

(8) He presented a good sword and a golden jar to Yudhishtīra on the occasion of his coronation. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 9).

(9) When Dharma-putra went to Hastināpura to play the game of dice, Śalya was found to have arrived there earlier. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 24).

(10) Before the great war began he visited the Pāṇḍavas and blessed them. Moreover he agreed to act as Karṇa’s charioteer and render him impotent so that the Pāṇḍavas could become victorious. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 8).

(11) Śalya joined the Kauravas in the great war with an aksauhini (a particular division of soldiers). (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 16).

(12) Śalya wished that Yudhishtīra won the war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 79).

(13) On the first day of the war he fought a duel with Yudhishtīra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 28).

(14) Śalya killed Uttara, the Virāta prince. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 35).

(15) He defeated Sāṅkha, another Virāta prince. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 35).

(16) He fought with Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 62).

(17) Bhīmasena defeated Śalya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 27).

(18) He fought with Yudhishtīra again. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 20).

(19) Nakula and Sahadeva attacked Śalya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 26).

(20) Sahadeva defeated Śalya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 51).

(21) Śalya attacked Śīkhaṇḍī. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 27).

(22) In the battle that followed he attacked the whole lot of Pāṇḍavas and wounded Yudhishtīra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 30).

(23) Bhīma and Arjuna fought with Śalya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 115 and 114).

(24) Śalya fought a duel with Yudhishtīra for the third time. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 40).

(25) He fought with Nakula. (Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 31).

(26) Abhimanyu and Śalya fought with each other. (Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 78).

(27) Afterwards in a club-fight with Bhīma, Śalya got defeated. (Drona Parva, Chapter 15).

(28) He fought again with Yudhishtīra. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15).

(29) In the fight with Abhimanyu he fell down unconscious. (Drona Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 36).

(30) Abhimanyu defeated him again. (Drona Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 14).

(31) He fought for the fifth time with Yudhishtīra. (Drona Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 99).

(32) Afterwards he clashed with Arjuna as the protector of Jayadratha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 145, Verse 9).

(33) He killed Śātanīka, brother of Virāta. (Drona Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 30).

(34) When Drona was killed Śalya ran away from the battlefield. (Drona Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 11).

(35) Śrutakirti attacked Śalya. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 10).

(36) Duryodhana insisted upon Śalya acting as charioteer of Karṇa. At first Śalya got angry about the suggestion, but finally he took up the charioteer-ship. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 32).

(37) As the charioteer of Karṇa Śalya cried down the former and praised Arjuna. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 33).

(38) Karṇa threatened to kill Śalya. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 40).

(39) Śalya cried down Karṇa by relating to him the story of the swan and the crow. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 41).

(40) When Bhīma wanted to cut off Karṇa’s tongue Śalya reminded him of Arjuna’s vow and thus made Bhīma retract from his plan. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 50; Mahābhārata, Daśākītyāpyaṭha).

(41) When Karṇa attempted to kill Nakula, Sahadeva and Yudhishtīra, Śalya prevented him from doing so. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 21).

(42) He consoled Karṇa, who got alarmed by the prowess of Bhīma. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 8).

(43) Śalya comforted Duryodhana, who grieved over the death of Karṇa. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 10).

(44) As desired by Duryodhana, he assumed charge over the army as its commander-in-chief. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 28).

(45) He fought a fierce battle with Bhīma and Dharma-putra. (Śalya Parva, Chapters 11 and 12).

(46) Dharma-putra defeated Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 63).

(47) In the battle that followed, Śalya was killed by Yudhishtīra. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 52).

(48) Among the souls of those killed in battle beconked to the surface of the Gāṅgā, Śalya’s soul also was present. (Āṣramāvāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 10).

(49) Samhīḍha, brother of Prahāda and son of Hiraṇyakaśiṇipu was another birth of Śalya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 6).

(50) Synonyms used in the Mahābhārata for Śalya: Ārtāyani, Bālīkapaṇgava, Madrādhipa, Madrāja, Madrājanādhipa, Madraka, Madrārarā, Sāvūra etc.

ŚALYAHARANI. See under Mṛtasānjīvāni.

ŚALYPARVA. An important Parva of the Mahābhārata.

SAMA I. Son of the Vasu called Aah. Aah had, besides Sama, three sons called Jyoti, Sānta and Muni. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 28).

SAMA II. One of the three sons of Dharma-deva, the other two being called Kāma and Harṣa. Sama’s wife was Prāpti. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 32).

SAMA. A populous centre in front of the Puṣkara island (Puṣkara-advīpa). In Purānic days there were thirtythree regions in this centre. Devas such as Vāmana, Airāvata, Suprātika, Añjana and so on dwell here. The people of this place live by inhaling the breath coming from the noses of these gods. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32).

SAMĀDH. The state when the soul (ātmā) and the mind become one. When the soul and the mind mingle with each other as salt and water, it is Samādhi (contemplation). (For more details see under Yoga).

SAMĀDHICHEṬTI. A Vaiśya who became learned and abstemious by the grace of Devī. The story of this Vaiśya, who ran away from the cruel and wicked treatment that he had suffered from his wife and children, and took to spiritual knowledge by the force of circumstances was told to Janamejaya by Vyāsa. After telling several stories about the kind regard of Devī towards those who worship her with devotion, Vyāsa continued as follows:

During the time of Śvārociṣa Manu, there lived a King named Suratha. Because of his liberality and truthfulness he had very few enemies. While he was ruling over the kingdom known as Kolāpura, once the low caste people of the mountains fought a battle with the King. Though the army of the low castes was small it was the King who sustained defeat. He returned to the palace thoughtful. He had no peace of mind. So he went to the forest to get peace. After travelling for a long time on horse-back, he reached the hermitage of the sage Sumedhas. Forgetting himself in the peaceful stillness of the hermitage, the King got down from the horse and sat under a tree. The hermit Sumedhas came there and talked with the King. The King told his story to the hermit, who invited the King to live with him. Thus the King lived in the hermitage eating fruits, roots etc.

The King found it difficult to reconcile himself with the purity and simplicity of the hermit’s surroundings. He always thought of his wife and children. He was troubled in mind by thinking that the money kept in the treasury would be wasted by others. Thus thinking about many things, with a troubled mind, the King was sitting under a tree near the hermitage once when he saw another man coming towards him, with a troubled mind like himself. They talked with each other. The new-comer said to the King “I am a Vaiśya. My name is Samādhiceti. My wife and children love wealth. They want to take possession of my wealth and to waste it. But I was against it. I did not favour unnecessary expenditure. They resolved to remove the obstacle from their path, and began to make preparation for it secretly. I understood it and fearing death I ran away from the house.”

As soon as the king heard this story he said his own story to the Vaiśya. The Vaiśya continued. “Oh! Still, my mind is troubled. I am worried about my wife and children. They will be put to much difficulty if I am not there to look after them. Who is there to support them without me? All the children are lean. My wife also is likewise, lean. They are all always ill. What will they do without me? While I think of all these things I have no peace of mind at all.”

Suratha: “What a fool are you! You yourself have said that all your children are wicked and cruel. Moreover they and their mother joining together had been trying to murder you. Why do you feel so miserable about such a wife and children?"

When the King had finished saying thus much, Sumedhas came there. To remove the darkness of illusion from their minds, the hermit taught them the Nine-lettered Mantra (spell) with prayer and meditation. Thus giving them the mantra, the teacher hermit advised them to go to the bank of the river and select a suitable place and worship Devī with devotion and concentration of mind. Accordingly they went to the bank of the river and selected a pure and solitary place, and concentrating their minds on Devī, began to meditate and worship her taking only very little food. Thus engaged in deep meditation they spent two years. One day in a dream Devī appeared to them. She was clad in red clothes, and wore beautiful ornaments. They were full of joy on seeing the goddess. The third year of the penance was over. But Devī did not appear directly before them. In the third year they took only water. They finished the fourth year without seeing the goddess. They decided to do severe penance. Their intention was to offer their bodies to Devī. So they made a triangular cavity, with three parts each having an extension of 1 ½ ft. and made the walls of the cavity firm and kindled a large fire in it. The King and the Vaiśya began to cut pieces of flesh from their bodies and offered to Devī in the fire, and with the blood coming from the body they performed sacrifice to Devī. Instantly Devī appeared before them and asked them what boon they wanted. The King wanted to get his kingdom back. Devī said, “You return home. Your enemies shall leave the kingdom. Your ministers will fall at your feet and beg your pardon. You can rule over your country for ten thousand years. After that you will take rebirth as Ṣāvārya Manu, the son of the Sun.”

What Samādhi Ceti wished was a life of self-renunciation. Devī gave him the wisdom and knowledge to renounce everything he had and to live a life of complete abstinence. Then Devī disappeared. The King returned to his kingdom and resumed his rule. Ceti renounced everything and wandered about immersed in meditation on Devī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

SAMĀNGA I. A cowherd who had been looking after the cattle of Durvodhana. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 2).

SAMĀNGA II. An ancient hermit. Once this hermit talked to Nārada, about his comfortable life. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 286, Verse 5).

SAMĀNGA III. A river. Because Aṣṭāvakra bathed in this river, his bents were straightened. (See under Aṣṭāvakra).

SAMĀNGA IV. A country in South India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 60.

SAMANTARA. A country in India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 50.

SAMANTAPAṆCAKA. A holy tīrtha (bath) founded by Para’urāma.

1) General information. See under Para’urāma, Para 7.
2) Other details.
(i) Para'urāma made here five rivers through which blood flowed. There, with hands dipped in blood, he offered oblations to the manes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 4).
(ii) By the blessings of the ancestors of Paraśurāma this place became a holy bath. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 9).
(iii) At the ending and the beginning periods of the two yugas Dvāpara and Kali, the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas fought the great battle at this place. Because of that this place got the name Samantapañcaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 13).
(iv) It was according to the advice of Balabhadra that this place was selected as the battlefield. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 5).
(v) Duryodhana was killed at Samantapañcaka. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 40).

ŚAMARA
One of the hundred sons of Pṛthuṣeṇa, a King of the Bharata dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SAMARATHA. A brother of King Virāśa. He was a prominent helper of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42).

SAMASAURABHA. A Brahmin who was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 9, that he was a guest at the snake-sacrifice of Janamejaya.

ŚĀMATHA. A learned brahmin. He once gave Yudhiṣṭhira a description of the yajña performed by King Gaya, son of Amūrtaraya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

ŚĀMAVEDA. See under Veda.

ŚAMAVEGAVASA. A country of South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 16).

ŚĀMBA I. The son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his wife Jāmbavati.

1) Birth. A story about the birth of Śambha, occurs in Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 4, as follows:

Children were born to Rukmiṇī and the other wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. But Jāmbavati alone did not give birth to children. Jāmbavati was filled with sadness when she saw the children of her co-wives. One day she went to the presence of Kṛṣṇa and requested him to give her a son like Pradyumna. Hearing this, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the mountain where the hermit Umapanyu did penance and making the hermit his teacher, according to his advice, did penance before Paramaśiva. He did penance for the period of a month holding a skull and a hermit’s rod. He did penance in the second month, standing only on one leg and drinking water alone. In the third month Kṛṣṇa did penance standing on the toes using only air as food. When the penance was continued for six months in this state, Paramaśiva appeared as Śambha (Ardhanārīśvara) and asked what boon he wanted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa expressed his wish. Siva said that Jāmbavati would get a son. Soon Jāmbavati gave birth to a son. The child was named Śambha.

2) Marriage. Śambha married Lakṣaṇā, the beautiful daughter of Duryodhana. Hearing about the Svayamvara marriage of Lakṣaṇā, Śambha went to Hastinapura and took her by force from among the various Kings who were present there. Duryodhana and the others captured him. This news reached Dvārakā through Nārada. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra went to Hastinapura and rescued Śambha and took the bride and the bridgroom to Dvārakā. Ten sons, beginning with Sumitra were born to Śambha by his wife Lakṣaṇā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

3) Prabhāvati abducted. Prabhāvati was the daughter of Vrajañābha, the King of Supuranagari. Śambha, with his brother Pradyumna entered the city Supura in the guise of drama-actors with a view to kidnap the beautiful daughter of Vrajañābha. They produced four performances such as ‘Rambahābhisāra’ and three other dramas and earned the praise of everybody in Supura. In this way they got access to the palace of the King, and when the time suited, they took away Prabhāvati to Dvārakā. (Harivānśa, 2:93).

4) The delivery of an iron rod. Once some Yādavas with Śambha at their head abused Kaśyapa and some other hermits who came to Dvārakā. They cursed the Yādavas, in consequence of which Śambha gave birth to an iron pestle, which caused the extermination of the Yādavas. (See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 39, Sub Para 2).

5) The curse of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śambha was extremely handsome, and even the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa fell in love with him. Under the circumstances Śambha tended to become wicked. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the unnatural attachment between his wives and Śambha, from Nārada and cursed Śambha that he would become a leper, and cursed his own wives, that they would be carried away by thieves and plunderers. Accordingly Śambha became a leper and the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa were carried away by the Ābhiras, after the submerging of Dvārakā.

After a few years, according to the advice of Nārada, Śambha began to worship the Sun, at a place called Śambapura in the basin of the river Candrabhāgā, to get recovery from leprosy. A brahmin also was brought from Kuśa (Kuśa) island to perform the fast and vow correctly. (Śambha 3; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brāhma Parva, 66.72; 73.126; Skanda Purāṇa 4.2.48; 6.213).

6) Other details.

(i) Śambha was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Chapter 185, Verse 17).
(ii) Among the Yādavas, who brought the dowry, when Arjuna married Subhadrā there was Śambha also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 31).
(iii) Śambha learned archery from Arjuna. After this he was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 34).
(iv) Śambha was one of the seven great chariot-fighters of Dvārakā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).
(v) Śambha was present at the Rājasūya (royal consecration-sacrifice) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).
(vi) Śambha was defeated in the battle he fought with Kṣemavṛddhi the minister of Śilva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 60).
(vii) Śambha killed the asura Vegavān in a battle. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 17).
(viii) Śambha participated in the marriage of Abhimanyu conducted at the city Upaplavya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22).
(ix) Śambha came with Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Hastinapura and took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 3).
(x) When the Yādavas died by hitting one another with the iron pestle, Sambha also was killed. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 44).
(xii) After his death, Sambha entered the group of Viśvadevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

SAMBHA II. A Brahmin scholar. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra started for the forest towards the close of his life, the people bade him farewell. This Brahmin stood among the people and spoke words of consolation. (M.B. A.-ramavāśika Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13).

SAMBHARA I. An asura.
1) General. Various Purāṇas refer to this leader of the asuras as having played a prominent part in the deva-asura war. After many such wars he was killed by Śiva.
2) Sambhara's magic power. He possessed marvellous magical powers. Once while fighting with him, the Devas were non-plussed by his magical powers, and they hid themselves in a forest. Sambhara was pleased and he roamed about freely without any fear and burnt the palaces of the protectors of the world. The Devas left their homes and disappeared in disguise. The Devas began killing those whom Sambhara had appointed as army-chieffains. To counter this attack by the Devas, he created three powerful asuras by his powers of magic. The three asuras called Dama, Vyāla and Ghaṭa began killing the warriors of the Devas, and the Devas told Brahmā at Satyaloka about the depredations of the asura. Brahmā encouraged them for further fighting, and the three asuras were killed and Sambhara ran away and hid himself. (Jñānavāśīṣṭha Sthiti-prakāraṇam).
3) Sambhara in Rgveda. There are various references to Sambhara in the Rgveda. He was King of the Dasyus. He had mastery over hundred cities. The forts and trenches in those cities were very strong. The forts are referred to as Aśvamayī, Āyaśi, Satabhūji etc. in the Rgveda. The chief enemies of the Aryans were the race of people called Panis in the city. There is a hint about the killing of Sambhara in Sūkta 17, Anuvāka 8, Maṇḍala 1 of the Rgveda.
4) Other information.
(i) Sambhara was Kaśyapaprajāpati's son by his wife Danu.
(ii) Daśaratha had, at the request of the Devas defeated Sambhara in a war fought in Devaloka. (See under Daśaratha, Para 5).
(iii) Indra, on another occasion, defeated Sambhara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 43).

SAMBHARA II. An asura.
He was the son of Hiranyākṣa and brother of Śakuni, Dvīmūrdhā, Śaṅku and Ārya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 17). Sambhara, who was a great adept in magic, was killed in the company of his wife Māyāvaīti, by Pradyumna, the son of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (See under Pradyumna).

SAMBHALA (SĀBHALA, SĀMBHALA). A village famed in the Purāṇas. According to Mahābhārata Mahāvīruṇa will incarnate as Kalki in this village. (For details see under Kalki).

SAMBHAVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty, son of Īrjā and father of Jārāsandha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).

SAMBHAVA I. An asura.

SAMBHAVA II. A Sub-Parva of Ādi Parva (Chapters 65-139).
SAMBHUKA. Dhrūva's wife. The couple had two sons called Śiṣṭi and Bhayva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

SAMBHULI I. Grandson of Tvaṣṭā, son of Kaśyapa by Surābhī. Tvaṣṭā had a son called Viśvarūpa who begot fourteen sons of whom Hara, Bahuṛūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājīta, Vṛṣṇakapi, Sambhū, Kapardi, Raivata, Mrgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapāli these eleven sons of Viśvarūpa form the Ekaḍā-arudras. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SAMBHU II. One of the three sons of Ambariṣa, the other two being Viṣṇu and Kṣetumā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Sambhū never tasted meat in his life. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 65).

SAMBHU IV. A Rākṣasa, the son of Vidyujjihva by Śūrpaṇakhā. Sambhū, who was engaged in tapas in Daṇḍaka forest when Śrī Rāma visited the forest was attracted by the beauty of Sītā and transformed himself into a tree to enjoy her beauty with his eyes. Laksmaṇa, who was falling down trees to build an āśrama felled this tree also, which disappeared immediately leaving behind the dead body of a Rākṣasa. It was the corpse of the Rākṣasa and Rāma comforted Sītā and Laksmaṇa by revealing the fact to them. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa. Aranyakāṇḍa).

Uttara Rāmāyaṇa contains a story of how Devavatī (or Vedavatī) daughter of Kuśadhvaja once cursed Sambhu. Devavatī was born from the mouth of Kuśadhvaja (son of Bṛhaspati) while he was learning the Vedas. Sambhū wanted to marry the child when she was grown up, but Kuśadhvaja did not consent to it, and Sambhū, in retaliation, killed Kuśadhvaja in his sleep. Next morning Devavatī awoke from sleep to see the dead body of her father. She cursed Sambhū. Her curse was a contributory cause for the death of Sambhū by Laksmaṇa.

SAMBHU V. An agni, which occupies a status equal to that of a brahmin well-versed in the Vedas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5).

SAMBHU VI. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukminī-devi. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

SAMBHU VII. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was one of the eighty sons of Ugrasena. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SAMBHUTA. A King, son of Trasadasyu and father of Anaranya. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 88, Verses 74-75).

SAMBHUTI I. Wife of Marici, son of Brahmā. The couple had a son called Paurnāmāsa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

SAMBHUTI II. Wife of Jayadratha. The couple had a son called Vijaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SAMBUKA. A Sudra muni. During the reign of Śrī Rāma a great number of children died in the country and many parents wept before the king about the loss of their offsprings. According to Vasiṣṭha's advice Rāma enquired whether anybody indulged in actions not proper to his station in life. Śrī Rāma surveyed the country from the air in a Vimāna, and during the survey he found Sambuka, the Sudra muni hanging with his head down and inhaling smoke from a fire lit under him. Thus, having found out that the tapsa by that Sudra was the reason for the children's death, Rāma ... killed Śambūka immediately. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarākāṇḍa).

SAMEDI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

SAMGATA (SĀNGATA). A King of the Maurya dynasty. He was the son of King Suyaśas and the father of King Sālīśūraka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

SAMGAVA (SĀNGAVA). The supervisor of the cattle-shed of Duryodhana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 228 that this Saṅgava helped Duryodhana in the fight which ensued at the time of the great procession conducted by the Kauravas, to the Pāṇḍavas in the forest.

SAMGHA (SĀNGHAM). An organisation formed in olden days for the cultivation of Śentamils (classical Tamil literature), which took its origin in south Drāväḍa land in the 4th century B.C. The Pāṇḍyas set up three Saṅghams for the promotion of this literature, the first one in southern Madura. When the city was swept by erosion of the sea they set up the second Saṅgham at Kapāṭapura. When Kapāṭapura also was destroyed by the sea, the third Saṅgham was founded in Drāväḍa Madura. The first Saṅgham was called Mūtarcāṇkam, the second Itāicāṇkam and the third one Kaṭāicāṇkam. Reliable information about the first two Saṅghams is not available. But, there are reasons to believe that a Saṅgham called Kaṭāicāṇkam flourished for about six hundred years from 2nd century B.C. to the close of the 4th century A.D. (History of Kerala Literature by Ullūr, Part 1, Page 47).

The Pāṇḍyan King had built at Madura a hall (maṇḍapa) for the poets and scholars of the third Saṅgham to assemble together to produce their works. Even to this day there exists a temple called Saṅghattārkovoīl at the south-western corner of the outer sector of the Sundarēsvara temple. There the idols of Sarasvatī and of the forty-nine poets of the Saṅgham are being worshipped even today. The growth and influence of the Buddhist and the Jain religions and also that of the Pallava royal dynasty, contributed to the downfall of the Saṅgham. The Saṅgham poets have written many excellent books. According to legends, Agastyaam is a text on grammar of the first Saṅgham and Tolkāpyam of the second Saṅgham. There were authoritative text books on music written by the last poets of the Saṅgham. But, none of these books has been unearthed yet. Again, references are found to dramas like Muruval, Jayantam, etc. They too have not yet been found out. Five mahākāvyas (Epic poems) and five short Kāvyas also belong to Saṅgham works. Puranāṅnūru, Akanāṅnūru, Patiṭṭippatttu, Aini kurunūru, Kalittokai, Kuruntokai, Paripāṭal and Naṭṭinai are included in the Saṅgham work called Eṭṭuttokai. Most of them are collections of many compositions. The authorship of the four hundred songs in Puranāṅnūru is distributed among nearly 160 poets. Aini Kurunūru contains five hundred songs by five poets. These five hundred songs were collected by the scholar, Kāṭalūr kīzhār, on the orders of the Cera King, Cer aislernūpozhai. Patiṭṭippatttu is a collection of songs composed by ten poets in praise of the Cera Kings. But, only eight of these from two to nine are available yet. Patiṭṭippattu comprised of the follow-
1) General. A muni. He remained with herds of cattle and performed tapas feeding himself on the foam from the mouth of calves drinking their mother’s milk. He was the father of Śrīṅgī, who cursed king Parikṣit, who once threw a dead snake on the neck of Śamkha. The curse was that he would die within seven days of the incident by snake-bite. For details see under Parikṣit, Para 3).

2) Other information.

i) Śamkha worships Indra in his court. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 16).

ii) Śamkha too was present on the occasion when Vyāsa called up and showed Janamejaya the souls of dead kings. (Āvamedhikā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 8).

ŚAṂĪKA II. (ŚAṂĪKA). A great warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty and one of the seven maharathis in Dwārakā. He was present at the wedding of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 58).

ŚAMITIṆṆAYA. One of the seven great heroes, who fought in chariot, in the clan of the Yādavas. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 58).

ŚAṂĪVRKṢA (ŚAṂI TREE). (For the connection between this tree and fire see under Agni, Para 12).

ŚAṂJṆĀ. Wife of Sun (Sūrya).

1) Birth. Śaṃjñā was the daughter of Viśvakarman according to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (Part 3, Chapter 2) and of Tvaṣṭā according to Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva (Chapter 66, Verse 35). Most of the Purāṇas refer to Śaṃjñā as the daughter of Viśvakarman.

2) Separation from husband. Śaṃjñā lacked the power to put up with the heat of Sūrya. She once went into the forest to perform Tapas after deputing her companion, Chāyā, to serve her husband. Śaṃjñā left her three sons Manu, Yama, and Yami also in the charge of Chāyā, who in the guise of Śaṃjñā served Sūrya. He took her to be his wife and begot three children, Śaṃjñā-cara, (another) Manu and Tapaṭi of her. Chāyā once got angry and cursed Yama, son of Śaṃjñā. Then it was that Śaṃjñā realised that she was not his wife. Sūrya felt very sad at this separation from his wife and went to the forest in search of her. He knew, by the power of his meditation, that Śaṃjñā was doing tapas in the guise of a mare. Then he assumed the form of a horse and begot of the mare the Āvīnikumāras and Revanta. The Āvīnikumāras named Nāṣasya and Darsa, were born through the mare’s (Śaṃjñā) nose. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 17).

3) Reunion. Sūrya brought Śaṃjñā back with him. She complained to her father Viśvakarman, that life with Sūrya was impossible on account of his excessive heat, and so Viśvakarman ground Sūrya on his drilling machine and reduced his heat. But, only 1/8 of the heat (effulgence) could be so reduced, and it was with that fraction of effulgence that Viṣṇu’s disc (cakra), Śiva’s trishūla (trident), Kubera’s puspakavimāna and Subrahmanya’s weapon called Śakti were made. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Part 3, Chapter 2; Harivamṣa, Chapter 41 and Bhaviṣya Purāṇa) For details see under Tapati.

ŚAMKHYĀ. In ancient India digits up to 19 were in vogue. Bhāskaracārya the great mathematician, has in his work, “Līlāvati”, given the following names to the nineteen digits.
SAMŚAPTAKAVADHAPARVA. A sub-Parva of Droṇa Parva comprising Chapters 17-32.

SAMŚAṬI. Wife of the Agni called Pavamāna. The couple had two sons called Sabhya and Āvasathyā. (Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 51, Verse 12).

SAMŚRUTYA. One of the Vedāntist sons of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55).

SAMŚṬHĀNA: A region in India mentioned in the Purāṇas. Armies from this region protected Bhīṣma during the great war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51).

SAMUDRAKATĪRTHA. A holy place near Arundhati-vaṭa. He who bathes here and fasts for three days will derive the same benefits as those of performing the a’vamedha yajña and gifting away of thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 81).

SAMUDRANIṢKUṬA. An urban area in India famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49).

SAMUDRASENA. A Kṣatriya king. He was a wise man, well-versed in Economics. He was the rebirth of Kāleya, an asura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 54). Bhīṣmasena defeated this Samudrasena, during his regional conquest of the east. Samudrasena was killed by the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 67).

SAMUDRAVEGA A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 63).

SAMUDRONMĀDA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

SAMŪHA. An eternal Viśvadeva (god concerned with offerings to the manes). (Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 30).

SAMĪVAHA. A wind which moves the aerial chariots of the Devas. According to Vyāsa there are seven winds. While once he was teaching his son Suṣa Vedas, a storm blew and the teaching had to be stopped for some time. Then Suṣa asked his father about winds, and Vyāsa answered as follows: There are seven vāyus (winds). The first one called Pravaha moves the clouds. The second one, Avaha, causes thunder while the third vāyu, Udvaha, converts sea-water into vapour and causes rain. The fourth one Satvaha moves clouds in the sky. The clouds are the aeroplanes of the Devas. The fifth is Vīvada, which gives form and shape to the clouds. The sixth Vāyu, Parivaha, keeps Ākāśagāṇa motionless while due to the action of the seventh Vāyu, Parivaha, the souls travel. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 329).

SAMVARĀNA. A king of the lunar dynasty. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśu thus: Brahmā—Atri-Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Puru - Janamejaya - Pracināv - Manasyu - Vītahyaya - Sūndu - Bahudhī - Saṃyati - Rahovādi - Bhadrāśva - Matināra - Santuodhā - Dūṣyanta - Bharata - Bhṛhatkṣatriya - Hasti - Ajamiḍha - Rkṣa - Saṃvarāna. 2) Marriage. Saṃvāraṇa married Tapati, daughter of Sūrya. (For details see under Tapati). 3) Other information. (i) King Pāñcāla once attacked and subdued him. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 37). (ii) He gave up the throne in fear of the enemy and went and lived on the banks of the river Śindhu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 39). (iii) To regain his kingdom he appointed Vasiṣṭha as his priest. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 42).

(iv) He got back the kingdom by Vasiṣṭha’s help and then he performed a Yajña with the latter as high priest. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 45). (v) A son called Kuru was born to him by Tapati daughter of Sūrya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 48). (vi) He was a devotee of Sūrya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 12).

(vii) No other king more handsome than he had yet been born. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 15). (viii) Once there was no rain for twelve years in his kingdom. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 172, Verse 38). (ix) He is one of the kings to be remembered at dawn and at dusk. (Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 54). (x) Words like Ajamiḍha, Ārka, Paurava, Pauravanandana and Rkṣaputra have been used in Mahābhārata as synonyms of Saṃvāraṇa.

SAMVARTA. Son of Āṅgiras. 1) General. Āṅgiras had eight sons called Brhaspati, Utathya, Saṃvārta, Payasya, Śaṇti, Ghora, Vīrāpa and Sudhanvā. (Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 30). Saṃvārta was the third among the sons and he lived on inemical terms with his eldest brother Brhaspati. When once Brhaspati forsook king Marutta it was Saṃvārta, who managed for the king his yajña. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 29). 2) Other information. (i) Saṃvārta is a member of Indra’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19). (ii) He lives in Brahmā’s court and worships him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 12). (iii) He once got conducted at Plāksāvataraṇa tirtha for King Marutta a yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 13).

(iv) Saṃvārta and Brhaspati disliked each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 38; Sānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 29). (v) He was one of those who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 9). (vi) It was he, who recited the praises of Śiva to king Marutta so that the latter got gold. (M.B. Southern text, Āvemedha Parva, Chapter 8). (vii) Once he paralysed Indra’s Vajrāyuḍa. (Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17). (viii) He was he, who invited and got down Indra to the yajña conducted by Marutta. (Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 25).

SAMVARTAKA I. A nāga born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 10).

SAMVARTAKA II. An agni, which is burning always on mount Mālyavān. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 27).

SAMVARTAVĀPī. A holy place (tank). Those, who bathe there will become handsome (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 31).

SAMVRTTA. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 13).

SAMVRTTI. A Devī, who worships Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 49).

SAMYAMA. A son of the Rākṣasa called Śataśriga. He was killed by Sudeva, chief of the army of Ambariṣa. (Mahābhārata, Southern Text, Sānti Parva, Chapter 98).
SAMYAMANA I. Another name of King Somadatta. (Bṛhaspa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 33).

SAMYAMANA II. A king of Kāśi. By nature non-attached to worldly things and very righteous, he studied Śākhyā and Yoga from Pañcatāthā and went into the forest renouncing everything. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 1).

SAMYAMANI. Another name of Sala, son of Somadatta. (Bṛhaspa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 11).

SAMYAMANI. The name of Yama's Capital city. (See under Amarāvati).

SAMYĀNIPĀTA. A particular measure of distance. If a strong man throws a thing the distance between the man and the spot where the thing thrown by him falls is called Śamyānipāta. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 9).

ŚAMYĀPRĀSA. A sacred place on the banks of river Sarasvati. Here Vṛṣṇa once built an aśrama and lived there. (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

ŚAMYĀTI I. Third son of Nahuṣa, his other sons being Yati, Yavātī, Ayātī and Dhrūva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 30).

ŚAMYĀTI II. A king, who was the great-grandson of emperor Puru and son of Prācinavā. Āsmāki, born of the Yadu dynasty was his mother. He married Varāṇī daughter of Drśadvān and a son called Aharīyātī was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 14).

ŚAMYODHAKANṬAKA. A Yakṣa, an attendant of Kubera. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Chapter 14, Verse 21).

ŚAMYU I. The eldest son of Bṛhaspati. This agni (Śāryu) is worshipped in Cāturāsya and aśvamedha yajñas. Satyā, daughter of Dharmadeva was Śāryu’s wife, and to the couple were born a son and three daughters. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 2).

ŚAMYU II. An acārya. He is believed to have a special method of performing yajñas. (Satapathbrāhmaṇa).

SANAKĀDI (S). Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra, the four Sages.

The Sanakādis are the mental sons of Brahmā. When they stood in the form of infants they were asked to create subjects. But they were the incarnation of ‘Sattvā’, (the attribute of purity), and so were not prepared to undertake creation. Even at the age of four or five the four of them learned the Vedas, and travelled together. They were celibates for ever. While the Sanakādis were travelling thus one day they reached Vaikuṇṭha, and cursed Jaya and Viṣṇya who showed disrespect towards them. (See under Jayavijayas).

It is mentioned in some places that the Sanakādis were the reincarnations of portions of Mahāviṣṇu. Once Brahmā praised the reincarnations of Viṣṇu.

It is clear that the Kumāras (Sanakādis) had taken incarnation before the present Brahmā began the work of creation. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1; Skandha 7; Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

SANANDANA I. A hermit who was one of the Sanakādis.

SANANDANA II. A disciple of Śaṅkarācārya. (For further details see under Śaṅkarācārya, Para 6).

SANĀTANA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16, that this hermit shone in the court of Yudhīśthira.

SANĀTANA II. One of the Sanakādis.

SANATKUMĀRA. One of the Sanakādis.

SANČĀRAKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 74).

SANDAMŚA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

ŚANDHĀMARKA. The two rśis called Šaṅdha and Marka, who were priests of the asuras and whose presence made them invincible. The Devas enticed the two priests to their side by offering them Soma and thus rendered the asuras powerless. When the Devas after some time, began a yajña, Šaṅdha and Marka approached them for the promised Soma, but the Devas did not keep their word, and the disillusioned Śandhāmarkas were driven out of the yajña hall. (Taittirīyasāṁhitā, 6, 4, 10).

ŚANDHĀNAKARAṆI. (See under Mṛṣaṇājīvini).

ŚANDHYĀ I. The previous birth of Arundhati, wife of Vasiṣṭha. (For more details see under Vasiṣṭha Para 1, Sub-Section 1).

ŚANDHYĀ II. Mother of the giantess Śālakaṭāṅkā. It is stated in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa that this Śālakaṭāṅkā, the daughter of Śandhya was married by the giant Vidyutkeśa.

ŚANDHYĀ III. Time of union or conjunction. There are three Śandhyās in a day. These are morning śandhyā (Prātaḥśandhyā), noon śandhyā (Madhyahna śandhyā) and evening śandhyā (Śaśāṇ śandhyā). The meeting time of night and day, is morning Śandhya, the joining time of the first half and the second half of the day, is noon (Madhyahna śandhyā), and the joining time of day and night, is evening Śandhya (Śaśāṇ śandhyā). Brahmins should keep the three Śandhyās properly. The morning śandhya is of three kinds. Good, Medium and Bad. When the morning stars are seen and the sunrise is approaching it is good morning; when the stars are not seen and the sun is not risen it is medium śandhya and the morning time after the sunrise is bad Śandhya. In sāyaṇasandhyā also there is this difference of time, as good, medium and bad. The time till the sunset is good; the time after the sunset and before the rising of the stars is medium and the evening after the rising of the stars is bad. In the Vedas it is metaphorically mentioned that Brahmins are trees, and the three sandhyās are their roots, the Vedas, their branches and the rites and rituals ordained in the Vedas their leaves. From this it is clear that Brahmins should on no account leave unobserved, worship at these three sandhyās. The Brahmin who does not observe these three sandhyās carefully will, in his life time, become a ṣūdra and after the death, will be born again as a dog. Moreover the Brahmin who does not do the three evening, morning and noon worship, will have no right to conduct any other Vedic rites.

After the sun-rise and sun-set, within three nāzhikas (a nāzhika-24 minutes) the morning and evening worship should be finished. There is atonement ordered for morning and evening prayers conducted after the stipulated time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

ŚANDHYĀ V. The presiding Devatā of dusk. She is called Praćīṇyādevi as well. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 16).

ŚANDHYĀKARANANDI. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 12th century A.D. A poetic work of this author.
is “Rāmapālacarita”. This book is about the king Rāmapālā, who ruled over Bengal at the end of 11th century A.D.

SANDHYĀRĀGA. The red colour seen in the sky in the evening is Sandhyārāga. Rāgini the daughter of Himavān did penance to obtain Paramaśīva as husband. The Devas took her before Brahmā, who said that she was not able to bear the radiance of Śiva. Hearing this opinion Rāgini got angry and Brahmā cursed her and changed her into Sandhyārāga. (See under Pārvatī).

SANDHYĀVALI. Sandhyāvali was the wife of King Rukmaṅgada. (See under Dharmāṅgada).

SĀNDILĪ I. A daughter of Dakṣa. She was married by Dharmadeva and a Vasu called Anala was born to the couple. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 17).

SĀNDILĪ II. A yogi famed in the Pūrāṇas. She once cursed Garuḍa as a result of which he lost his feathers. (For details see under Garuḍa).

SĀNDILĪ III. A very chaste Devī living in Devakāla. She once taught Śumana, the Kekaya princess the duties of a chaste woman. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 8).

SĀNDILYA I. A great mahāraṣṭha. Some details about him are given hereunder.

(1) King Satānīka and his wife Viṣṇumati, who had no issues approached the mahāraṣṭha in great sorrow. As a result of eating rice given by the mahāraṣṭha Viṣṇumati became the mother of a son, who became in later years famous as emperor Sahasrānāka. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhabalabaka, Taraṅga 1).

(2) A member of Yudhiṣṭhīra’s court. (Sāhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 17).

(3) He had an ascetic daughter. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 5).

(4) He once opined that the gift of a mere ox-cart was equal to the gift of water in a golden pot. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 19).

(5) He visited Bṛhaṭa on his bed of arrows. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 6).

(6) King Śumanyu once gave the mahāraṣṭha plenty of food materials. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 173, Verse 22).

SĀNDILYA II. A mahāraṣṭha born in the dynasty of Kaśyapa, son of Marīci. As Agni was born in the family of the mahāraṣṭha it came to be called ‘Śaṇḍilayagotriya’ (born in the family of Śaṇḍilaya). King Śumanyu once gave him food and other edible things. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 22).

SĀNDILYA III. A King, a great devotee of Śiva. As a youth he became a philanderer with the result that the honour of women was in jeopardy. The King being a devotee of Śiva even Yama could not punish him. At last, when Śiva came to know of the immorality of his devotee he cursed the King to be turned into a tortoise for thousand years.

SĀNDILYA IV. A mahāraṣṭha, who desired to worship Viṣṇu not in the Vedic method for which purpose he even wrote a book to propagate non-vedic principles. For the above sinful action he had to live in hell and at last he was born as Jamadagni of the Bhṛgu dynasty. (Vṛddhaharītasṛtmi, 180, 193).

SĀNDILYA V. A mahāraṣṭha whose Bhaktisātras (Aphorisms on devotion) are as famous as those of Nārada. He taught bhakti in a scientific way (by Śaṇḍilaya science).

SĀNDIPANI. Preceptor of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrā Rāma from whom they learned all the Vedas, art of drawing, astronomy, gāndharva Veda, medicine, training elephants and horses and archery. (For details see under Kṛṣṇa, Para 12).

SĀNTI (SANAISCARA-SATURN).

1) General. Sānti is the son of Śūrya by Chāyā, the maid-servant of Śaṇṭi. Śūrya had three sons by Chāyā, Manu, Tapatī and Sānti. (See under Chāyā).

2) Other information.

(i) Sānti worships Brahmā in Brahmaśabha. (Sāhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(ii) Sānti is very effulgent and intense in his form and character. When Sānti threatens the star Rohini, great disasters occur on earth. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 8).

(iii) Sānti will incarnate as Manu in the coming Yuga. (Śaṇṭi Parva, Chapter 349, Verse 55).

(iv) Sānti is one of the planets to be daily worshipped. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 17).

(v) In the battle between Śiva and Tripura, Sānti mounted in a chariot clashed with Narakāśura. (Bṛhaṭa, 6th Skandha).

SĀNIYA. A country in south India famous in the Pūrāṇas. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhṛṣṭa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63.

SĀNJAYA I. Minister of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

1. Birth. Śaṇṭiṣja, who was equal to a hermit, was born as the son of Śūla from a portion of Gāvalaṅga. (Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 93).

2. The boon of Śaṇṭiṣja. Śaṇṭiṣja who was born within the circle of the friends of the Kauravas, became the minister of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The great work that Śaṇṭiṣja did in Mahābhārata was, telling Dhṛtarāṣṭra every thing that was taking place in the battle-field without leaving even the smallest events in the order of their occurrence. Śaṇṭiṣja was able to do this by the boon granted by Vyāsa.

When the armies of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas pitched their camps on either side of the battlefield, Vedavyāsa came to Hastināpura and saw Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Dhṛtarāṣṭra heard about the preparations on either side for the battle. He did not like to go to the battle-field and seek for himself the events of the battle. He said so to Vyāsa. Then Vyāsa called Śaṇṭiṣja to him and said “Śaṇṭiṣja shall see all the events of the battle directly. He shall have such a divine inward eye.” Vyāsa continued. “O king! Śaṇṭiṣja has inward eyes. He will tell you everything about the battle. He will be knowing all. Whenever he thinks of it he will see everything that takes place in the day and in the night in open, and in secret. No weapon will cut him and no weariness will affect him. He is the son of Gāvalaṅga and will come away unhurt from the battle.”

Because of this blessing Śaṇṭiṣja used to inform Dhṛtarāṣṭra of all the events in the battle at the time of the occurrence. Śaṇṭiṣja informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the news up to the death of Duryodhana. When Duryodhana was killed the cry of Aśvathāmā grow louder. Śaṇṭiṣja who heard this cry early in the morning, ran to the battlefield with a broken heart. With the death of Duryodhana the boon of inward eye given to Śaṇṭiṣja by Vyāsa was lost. (M.B. Bhṛṣṭa Parva, Chapter 2; Saupīṭka Parva, Chapter 9).
3) Other details.
(i) Sañjaya stood as the host in the Rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, and received the guests and showed them hospitality. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).
(ii) When the Pāṇḍavas were defeated in the game of dice and were sent to the forest Sañjaya came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra andreviled him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 5).
(iii) Vidura got angry because the Pāṇḍavas were sent to live in the forest, and leaving the Kauravas he also went to the forest. Knowing that Vidura was in the Kāmyaka forest, Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Sañjaya and brought Vidura back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 5).
(iv) Śri Kṛṣṇa and the others vowed at the Kāmyaka-vana to kill Duryodhana. Sañjaya gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra a detailed description of that Vow. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 15).
(v) Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Sañjaya to learn about the welfare of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after completing the forest life and Pseudonymity. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 1).
(vi) Sañjaya went to the court of the Pāṇḍavas and gave the message of Dhṛtarāṣṭra to them. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 25).
(vii) Sañjaya who had returned from the court of the Pāṇḍavas, informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the news and reproached him much. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11).
(viii) Sañjaya repeated the message of Arjuna in the court of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 40).
(ix) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who the prominent helpers of Yudhiṣṭhira, were. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50).
(x) Sañjaya advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to put Duryodhana under control. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 54).
(xi) Sañjaya gave Duryodhana a description of the horses and the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7).
(xii) Sañjaya repeated the message of Arjuna to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 66).
(xiii) Sañjaya described to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the greatness of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 68-70).
(xiv) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra the fact that the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas had pitched their tents in the battlefield of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 159, Verse 8).
(xv) At this time Vṛṣa came there and gave Sañjaya the boon that he would see directly every thing that took place in the battlefield and would inform Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 10).
(xvi) Sañjaya informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the good qualities of the earth, the island of Sudarśana, the death of Bhīṣma, and so on. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva; Droṇa Parva).
(xvii) Sañjaya gave the names of every one who was killed on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 5).
(xviii) Sañjaya reported to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about those who died on the side of the Pāṇḍavas also. (Karṇa, Parva, Chapter 6).
(xix) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra about those who were alive on the side of the Kauravas. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 7).
(xx) Śāyānaka took Sañjaya as a captive. (Śāyāna Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 57).
(xxi) Due to the blessings of Vyāsa Sañjaya escaped from the captivity of Śāyānaka. (Śāyāna Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).
(xxii) Sañjaya consoled Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Śrī Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 23).
(xxiii) Yudhiṣṭhira entrusted Sañjaya with the duty of post-war-reconstructions. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 11).
(xxiv) Towards the close of his life Sañjaya went with Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī to the forest. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 8).
(xxv) On the first day of this journey to the forest, they reached the basin of the river Ganges. On that day Sañjaya made the bed for Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 19).
(xxvi) Sañjaya introduced the wives of the Pāṇḍavas to the hermits. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 25).
(xxvii) On reaching the forest Sañjaya observed complete fast for two days. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 13).
(xxviii) Sañjaya always walked close behind Dhṛtarāṣṭra and in places of ups and downs he led the King by the hand. (Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 16).

4) The End. While Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others were walking along the forest a jungle-fire was seen. Instantly it encircled them. Dhṛtarāṣṭra cried out to Sañjaya to run for his life. But Sañjaya did not like to forsake them in that danger. Dhṛtarāṣṭra said that since they had left home and country there was no wrong in dying by jungle fire. At last yielding to the compulsion of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Sañjaya ran away from the jungle-fire. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī died in the wild-fire. Sañjaya reached the basin of the Ganges and informed the hermits of the death of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others, and then went to the Himālayas. (M.B. Āśrama-vāsika, Chapter 37, Verse 19).

SAÑJAYA II. A prince of the country called Sauvīra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 10, that it was this prince Sañjaya who carried the flag and walked in front of Jayadratha, on his journey to carry away Pāṇcāli. In the fight which ensued Arjuna killed this Sañjaya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

SAÑJAYA III. Another prince of the country of Sauvīra. Vidulā was the mother of this prince. This prince once ran away from the battlefield and by the instigation of his mother went to the battlefield again. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1 6.

SAÑJAYANTI. An ancient city of South India. Sahadeva, during his regional conquest of the south sent his messengers to this country and conquered it easily. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 70, that Sahadeva got tribute from this country.

SAÑJAYAYĀNAPARVA. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 30 to 32 of Udyoga Parva.

SAÑJĪVA. A character in the Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).
The jewel in the head of serpents. There is a tradition among the poets that this jewel is the basis of the serpent's life. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Asvamedhihika Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 42, stating how Babhrvāhana brought Arjuna to life by Sañjīvanami. (For details see under Babhrvāhana.)

SAÑKĀLPA. One of the sons born to Dharmadeva by his wife Sañkalpā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

SAÑKĀLPA. A daughter of Daśaka. Dharmadeva married the following ten daughters of Daśaka, i.e. Arundhati, Vasu, Yami, Lamba, Bhānū, Marutvatī, Sañkalpā, Muhurta, Sādhya and Visvā.

SAÑKARA I. A synonym of Śiva.

SAÑKARA II. A simpleton, who was killed by his wife. This brahmin had a very mean wife called Kalipriyā. After killing her husband she left the place with her paramour. But, wild animals killed him on their way in the forest. In all, repentance Kalipriyā returned home and after worshipping the corpse of her husband she observed Kārttikeya vrata at the instance of certain women. Thereby she got absorption from sin and attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahmakhaṇḍa, Chapter 10).

SAÑKARĀCĀRYA.

1) General. The spiritual and philosophical preceptor of India. Śrī Sañkara was born in the village of Kālaṭi on the banks of the holy river Periyār, also called Cūṟṇa and Pūrṇa. According to certain scholars he was born in 509 B.C. while certain others contend that he saw the light of day in 84 A.D. Yet others place his date of birth in various periods between 509 B.C. and 84 A.D. Whatever that may be, the great ācārya is believed to have lived only for 32 years.

2) Birth. The name of Sañkara’s father was Śivaguru and that of his mother Āryāmbha. This nambūḍiri couple had no issues for a long time. So they went to Trīśivaperūr (Trichur) to worship Śiva in the famous Śiva temple there. The idol in that temple is known as Vṛṣācaḷēvarā and Vatākkunāṭha also. Ere long Lord Śiva blessed them with a son. The belief is still held that, pleased with the prayer of Śivaguru and Āryāmbha Śiva himself was born as their son. The child began exhibiting extraordinary intellectual powers. At the age of five the boy Sañkara was invested with the sacred thread. By the time he was eight years old he had earned deep erudition in the Vedas, Śāstras, Purāṇas, epics (iṭḥāsas) etc. His father was no more by then and on the mother devolved the duty of bringing the child up.

3) Crocodile-attack. The boy showed no taste for or interest in childish plays, but evinced a tendency towards a life of renunciation. This attitude of the son pained the mother much and she wanted her son to get married. But, the boy did not like the idea. As fate would have it, an incident which proved to be a turning point in the boy’s life occurred soon. One day the mother and her son were bathing in the Periyār, when a crocodile caught hold of the boy. He cried aloud, and the mother got greatly alarmed. There was a custom for one to take to sannyāsa, irrespective of circumstances, when danger or death threatened one, and that is called ṣāpatsannyāsa. Sañkara prayed to his mother for permission to take to sannyāsa at that moment when his end was near, and willynilly the mother granted permission. All at once the crocodile, which had so unexpectedly attacked him, disappeared equally unexpectedly. The boy came out of the river absolutely unhurt. The decision to take to sannyāsa was taken once for all. Sañkara assured his mother, before he started on a tour of the country, that he would be present at her bedside during her last days and also that he would duly perform her obsequies.

4) In the presence of the preceptor. Sañkara, who then was not even seven years old, started for the north in quest of a preceptor, and on the banks of the Narmadā he saw Govinda - bhagavatpāda, the disciple of Śrī Gauḍapāda. The Bhagavatpāda was sitting in a cave surrounded by many wise people. Sañkara approached and requested him to admit him as a disciple and grant him sannyāsa. Sañkara’s prayer was granted.

5) Controlled flood. A wonderful thing happened while Sañkara was living at the āśrama. The Narmadā was in spate and the huts on its banks were about to be submerged in water. People got alarmed. Then Sañkara put his kamanḍalu (vessel which sannyāsins keep with them for water) and chanted the Jalākarṣaṇa Mantra. (hymn to attract water). At once the water which had flooded the banks flowed back into the river. People and their huts were saved. Afterwards his Guru asked Sañkara to go to and live in Kāśī and write Bhāṣyas (commentaries) on the Prasthānaṭrayam, i.e. the Brahmasūtras, the Upaniṣads and the Gītā.

6) Padmapāda. Accordingly Sañkara went to Kāśī. It was there that he took as his first disciple Viṣṇuṣarmaṇ, a young man from the Cola region of the country. Sañkara called him Sanandana. Afterwards other disciples also came in. But, gradually jealousies cropped up in the ranks of the disciples. The other disciples of Sañkara thought that the latter was partial towards Sanandana and showed special affection and regards to him. Sañkara then decided to prove to the others that Sanandana was a disciple of exceptional talents and merits. One day Sañkara was bathing with his other disciples in the Gaṅgā, and he called Sanandana who was on the other side of the river to go to him. Sanandana walked on the surface of the water to his Guru, and as he took each step a lotus flower appeared beneath and held him up from sinking into the water. From that day onwards he came to be called Padmapāda, and his colleagues also realised his greatness.

7) Hastamalaka. Hastamalaka was one of the best disciples of Sañkara. There is a story about his becoming Sañkara’s disciple. He was born dumb. His father, Divākara took Hastamalaka to Sañkara believing that due to the blessing of the great Guru his son would gain powers of speech. Sañkara asked the dumb boy, ‘who are you?’ and the boy answered, ‘I am the soul, which has no relationship with the parts and attributes of body and mind and which is also entirely different from them’. There were certain verses, which the boy recited as answer to Sañkara’s question and each verse ended with ‘nityopalahindhīsvarūpohāṃātmā’ (I am the ātman and eternal knowledge, consciousness, is its characteristic). The boy’s answer pleased Sañkara, who took him as a disciple of his. The boy was given sannyāsa under the name Hastamalaka the meaning of which word is he who is in possession of knowledge like the gooseberry in one’s palm.
8) Toṭakācārya. Toṭakācārya was a disciple, who came soon after Hastāmalaka. The name Toṭakācārya has a story behind it. This disciple approached Śaṅkara with his request for discipleship in verse praising the latter. The verses were composed in the difficult toṭaka metre. The verses attracted Śaṅkara very much and he took the applicant as disciple. His real name was Kālānātha, but the Guru named him Toṭakācārya in view of his verses in that metre.

9) The Candalaguru. There is a story about Śiva going to Śaṅkara at Kāśī in the guise of a Candālā and Śaṅkara receiving him. One morning Śaṅkara, after bathing in the Gaṅgā, was returning to the Viśvanātha temple. A Candālā with his hunting dogs and a pot of liquor was advancing from the opposite direction of Śaṅkara, who asked the former to move away from his path. Immediately the Candālā asked, which, the body or soul, is to remove itself from the path? The body of everybody is composed of blood, flesh, bones etc; the constitution of it also is the same. But, the Ātmā is universal and omnipresent. Whom-which of the two-are you asking to move away from your path? Śaṅkara realised from the above answer that the Candālā was an extraordinary person. In fact, it was Śiva, who had disguised himself as a Candālā. Śaṅkara prostrated before him. Śaṅkara thought about God saying that he who had attained Brahman and the consciousness of oneness with all, was his Guru, whether he be a Brahmin or a Candālā.

10) Derisive of the grammarian. Śaṅkara has composed a hymn named Mohamudgara, in which he ridicules a grammarian. One day walking along a street in Kāśī Śaṅkara saw a grammarian learning by rote rules of grammar, and then he composed the very sweet and beautiful poem—Bhaja Govindam—to reveal the foolishness of the grammarian repeating the useless rules of grammar. By the very first verse of the poem Śaṅkara revealed the following truth: “Oh ! fool I worship Govinda (Bhaja Govindam) meditate upon Him. You meditate upon Govinda realising the truth that when death approaches, the grammatical sūtra “Ḍuṇḍu Kāraṇe” will not come to your aid.”

11) Saw Vyāsa. Śiva, when he appeared in the guise of a Candālā to Śaṅkara, had asked him to visit Badarikāśrama, and accordingly he went there and visited Vyāsa. It was there that Śaṅkara met his supreme preceptor, Govindapāda. He returned to Kāśī with the blessings of Vyāsa and Govindapāda and engaged himself in the writing of books.

12) Śaṅkara’s age. There is a legend about Śaṅkara’s life. Brahmacārī had allotted to him only eight years’ life. Before Śaṅkara left his house at Kālaṭi, a batch of sannyāsins including Agaṣṭya and Nārada came to the house. The sannyāsins, who were pleased with the reception accorded to them blessed Śaṅkara to live for sixteen years instead of the eight Brahmacārī had permitted him. While Śaṅkara was writing books at Muktimandapa at Manikarnikā Ghat in Kāśī Vyāsa came there one day in the guise of an old man, and there ensued a lengthy discussion between the two. Padmapāda recognised Vyāsa in the old man and told him and Śaṅkara thus: “How would there be peace and happiness in the world, if Śaṅkara, the incarnation of Śiva and Vedavyāsa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu quarrelled with each other?” As soon as his identity was revealed thus, Vyāsa admitted that Śaṅkara’s Bhāṣya on the Brahmasūtras was correct and blessed him to live for thirtytwo, instead of sixteen years.

13) Controversy between Śaṅkara and Manḍanāmisra. Pandits (scholars) view the controversy or discussion between Śaṅkara and Manḍanāmisra as the most important event in Śaṅkara’s life. Three incidents, Śaṅkara’s meeting Kumārilabhaṭṭa, his defeating Manḍanāmisra and his entering the dead body of another person—may be found in connection with the above controversy.

A: Meeting with Kumārilabhaṭṭa. Śaṅkara’s object was to expose the defects and draw-backs in Pūrvamāṁśā (the ritual part of the Vedas). Kumārilabhaṭṭa was the most competent person for a discussion on the subject. Śaṅkara, for this purpose, went to Prayāga from Kāśī. But, Kumārilabhaṭṭa was not in a condition fit for discussion. He was slowly burning himself to death in a heap of paddy husk set on fire. He courted this punishment voluntarily to atone for a wrong he had committed. Years back he had put on Buddhistic attire and studied the secrets of Buddhistic religion from its preceptors with the object of refuting that religion. Kumārilabhaṭṭa had great faith in Karmakāṇḍa, and he therefore, decided that it was his duty to make atonement for the wrong he had purposely done according to injunctions laid down in Karmakāṇḍa. Śaṅkara was very sorry to find Kumārilabhaṭṭa in this condition in which discussion could not be held with him on the defects of Pūrvamāṁśā. Kumārilabhaṭṭa directed Śaṅkara to the great scholar, Manḍanāmisra at Māhīṣmati for a discussion on Pūrvamāṁśā.

B. Manḍanāmisra defeated. When Śaṅkara reached Manḍanāmisra’s house a ceremony connected with obsequies was being conducted there. The door for entry to the house was closed. Śaṅkara, by his yogic power entered the home and revealed the object of his visit to Manḍanāmisra, who agreed to the proposal of Śaṅkara. Accordingly a debate began between the two. Bhāratidevi, wife of Manḍanāmisra and an erudite scholar in her own title acted as the arbiter in the discussion. Before the debate started she put a garland of flowers on the neck of both the contenders and announced that he would be considered as defeated in the debate the garland on whose neck began fading first. The debate continued for a number of days and the garland on Manḍanāmisra’s neck began showing signs of fading. According to the terms and conditions of the debate Manḍanāmisra acknowledged defeat. He accepted Śaṅkara’s discipleship.

C. Parakāyapravesta (Entering the dead body of another person). But, Bhāratidevi argued that it was not enough that Śaṅkara had defeated her husband in debate. She challenged him to defeat her as well, and Śaṅkara accepted the challenge. Many topics dealt with in the various Sāstras were debated upon and Śaṅkara won all those debates. Ultimately Bhāratidevi raised certain points connected with the science of sexual love in the course of her arguments. Śaṅkara admitted that he did not possess sufficient mastery over the subject as he had taken himself to sannyāsa even from infancy. But, he told her that if he was allowed necessary time for it he would debate on that topic also.
Bharatidevi granted him time for it and the debate was adjourned.

Saṅkara prepared himself for the study of the science of sexual love. Just at that time a King called Amaruka died. After asking his disciples to take especial care of his body Saṅkara entered by yogic power the dead body of Amaruka. The dead King came back to life and his people felt very happy about the mysterious happening. Saṅkara, who had thus entered the body of King Amaruka, lived in the palace enjoying all royal pleasures. He gained practical experience in the matter of sexual love from the queens in the palace. People found the resurrected King Amaruka to be better and more intelligent. The ministers suspected that the soul which dwelt in the body of the king was of some one else. Under the impression that it might be that of some yogin the ministers deputed agents to various parts of the country to find out if there was anywhere the dead body of a yogī, and they found out Saṅkara's body. It was about to be burnt on the pyre when the disciples of Saṅkara met King Amaruka at the palace and informed him about these developments. Immediately Saṅkara quitted his royal body and entered his own body now lying on the funeral pyre. He prayed to Śrīlakṣaṁnarāsinīḥa and came out from the burning pyre.

Saṅkara returned immediately to Maṇḍanāmśrā's house and the debate was started again. Bharatidevi realised that Saṅkara could not be defeated in topics related to the science of sex. Thus Saṅkara gained absolute victory in his debate with Maṇḍanāmśrā, who then requested the former to grant him sannyāsa and accept him as a disciple. Saṅkara did so. Bharatidevi too followed her husband in accepting sannyāsa.

14) Mother's death. Saṅkara now knew that it was time for his mother's death. According to his promise to her that he would be by her side at the time of her death Saṅkara returned to Kālaṭi. His mother expired, and he made arrangements for cremation. But his relations did not cooperate with him and argued that it was against the injunctions of the Śastras for a son, who had taken to sannyāsa, to perform the cremation etc. of his mother. At last, Saṅkara had to cremate his mother by himself without others' help. He made a pyre with plantain stems in the compound of his house, and cut his mother's corpse into pieces, carried the pieces to the funeral pyre and thus cremated the body.

15) Triumphant tour. After the cremation of his mother Saṅkara set out on his triumphal tour of the country. He is believed to have travelled throughout India three times. Wherever he went he gained friends and also made enemies. It was during these tours that he established the four mathas (centres) in the four regions of the country. Śrūgeri in the south, Jaganāthā in the east, Īvāra in the west and Badarīnāthā in the north were the four chief mathas established by Saṅkara and they continue to function even to this day.

The Siva, Viṣṇu and Devi temples and other Hindu religious institutions were found in India today very eloquently proclaim the achievements and unique reputation of Saṅkara. It is traditionally believed that Saṅkara brought five liṅgas from Kailāṣa and installed them in the five great temples. Muktaliṅga in Kedāra, Parālinga in the Nilakanṭha temple in Nepal, Mokṣa liṅga at Cidambaram, Bhogaliṅga in Śrūgeri and Yogaliṅga in Kāṇci are the five liṅgas installed by Saṅkara. The 'five-in-one' method of worship was also propounded by him. According to this system Ādiya, Āmbikā, Viṣṇu, Gaṇānātha and Maheṣvara are conjoinedly worshipped, special importance being given by the worshipper to his special deity. Saṅkara appointed one disciple of his each in each of the mathas as its head and these mathas play the most important role in the maintenance and propagation of the Advaita philosophy. The heads of these mathas during various periods have been reputed Vedāntists and noble souls. Jyotir-maṭha in Badarīkāśrama, Goverdhana pīṭha in Jagan-

16) His works. The literary compositions of Saṅkara may be classified into four divisions, viz, Bhāṣyas (commentaries), original works, hymns to various deities, and mantras.

Saṅkarāsvāmī. Father of UpavāraSa. (See under UpavāraSa).

Saṅkari. Wife of Varataṇu, the brahmin. (See under Varatana for the reason why the couple had no children in their next life).

ŚaṅkuKarna I. A muni, who lived at the sacred Kapardīvara tirtha in Vārāṇasī. There lived a brahmin in the temple there performing tapas. One day a lean and bony ghost, hungry and panting came to the brahmin. To the brahmin’s question the ghost replied thus: “In my previous life I was a rich brahmin. I looked after my family well, but did not worship Devas, guests or cows. Nor did I do any pious deed. But, one day I happened to worship Lord Viṣvānātha and touch his idol. Within a short period after that I died. You will please tell me the means, if any, for me to attain heaven.” SaṅkuKarna answered the ghost as follows:—“There lives no man on earth, who is more fortunate than your good self, who could touch and prostrate before Lord Viṣvānātha. That good fortune has led you to me. You bathe in this holy tirtha and you will lose your ghost-hood. The ghost, accordingly dived in the water and immediately rose up to heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).

ŚaṅkuKarna II. A nāga born in the Dhrāṭarāstra dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15).

SĀNTANAVA. A grammarian, anterior to Pāṇini. He has written a book called ‘Phīṣṣūtra’ about the svaras (Accents) in the Vedas. This book of 87 sūtras is divided into four Chapters called antodātām, ādyudātām, dvitīyodātām and Pāryāyodātām.

SĀNTANIKĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 9).

SĀNTANU (SĀNTANU). King Sāntanu, on a par with the Devas, was a great physician (Mahābhīṣak).

SĀNTANU (SĀNTANU). Son of King Pratīpa of the lunar dynasty.

(i) For previous life and birth as Sāntanu see under Bhiṣma, Para II.

(ii) Married life. (See under Bhiṣma, Paras 2, 3).

3. Other information.

(i) He was the second son of Pratīpa. His elder brother was called Devāpi, younger one Bālīkha and his mother Sunandā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61; Chapter 95, Verse 43).

(ii) He was called Sāntanu as things touched by both his hands used to become youthful.

(iii) Sāntanu became King as his elder brother Devāpi had, as an infant, renounced the throne and left for the forest. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 62; Chapter 95, Verse 45).

(iv) It was he, who brought to the palace and brought up Kṛpa and Kṛṣṇa, who were found in the forest as orphans. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 46).

(v) Sāntanu worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 25).

(vi) He attained heaven by doing tapas on Mount Arica. (Vana Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 19).

(vii) He is one of the Kings to be remembered both at dawn and dusk. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 58).

(viii) He was absolutely wedded to truth and he possessed great prowess. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 1).

(x) Synonyms used of him in the Mahābhārata:— Bharata, Bhāratagotpa, Bharatasattama, Kauravya, Kurussattama, Prātiṭpa etc.

SĀNTARAMA. A King of Kāśi. He was the son of King Trikalapala and father of King Raji. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SĀNTARDANA. The son of Dhṛṣṭaketu who was the King of Kekaya. He was present at the Rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SĀNTARJANA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

SĀNTI II. A King born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Dusyanta. He was the son of Nila, grandson of Ajamidha and father of Susānti. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SĀNTI III. Name of the Indra of the fourth Manvantara (Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 29).

SĀNTI IV. A mahārṣi. Son of Aṅgiras, he was called Atmeyu also. He had participated in the Yajña conducted by Uparicaravasu. (Śantī Parva, Chapter 336, Verse 8; Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 20; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 130).

SĀNTI V. A mahārṣi who was a disciple of the Rṣi called Bhūti, who did once go to participate in a yajña conducted by his brother Suvarccas, leaving matters connected with his āśrama with Sānti, who discharged his duties quite well in the absence of his master. One day when agni became very scarce in the āśrama he praised Agnideva, and noticing that the Deva was pleased Sānti requested him to bestow a son to the mahārṣi. Accordingly a son was born to Bhūti, who later on became famous as ‘Bhautyamanu,’ Bhūti, who was pleased with the devout life of his disciple (Sānti) taught him Śaṅgaveda. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa).

SĀNTIDEVA (SĀNTIDEV). Daughter of King Devaka. She was married by Vasudeva. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 96, Verse 130).

SĀNTIKALPA. One of the five sanhiṭā sections of the Athravaveda composed by muni Muñjīkēsa, the other four sections being nākṣatrakalpa, vedakalpa, sanhiṭākalpa and āṅgirasa kalpam. Nākṣatrakalpa contains rules for the worship of the stars; Vedakalpa contains the rites regarding Brāhman, the Ṛtik; sanhiṭākalpa contains the rules about mantras, and the Āṅgirasa kalpam deals with black magic and sāntikalpa.
contains rules about propitiating deities by offerings of horse, elephant etc.

SÁNTIPARVA. An important Parva of the Mahábhárata (See under Mahábhárata).

SANTURODHĀ. A king of the Páru dynasty. He was the son of Matinára. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 278).

SAŅU. A country of ancient India. (Mahábhárata, Bhisma Parva Chapter 9, Verse 43).

SANYÁSA (SANNYÁSA) One of the four stages of Brahminical life. The four stages are Brahmacarya (Religious student), Gárhasthya (householder), Vánaprastha (Forest-dweller) and Sanyásá (hermit or sage).
(For further details see under Ásrama).

Duties of a hermit. Manu has ordained that one should perform sanyásá (renunciation) at the fourth stage of life renouncing every tie with the world. After becoming a hermit he should travel daily alone. He should enter villages only for food. He should have renounced wealth. He should not acquire any wealth. He should be a sage filled with knowledge. He should have a skull as the pot for taking alms. He should sleep under trees. He should wear poor cloth and should be solitary.
He should consider everybody as equal. Having become a hermit he should not delight in death or life.

A hermit should put every step looking straight down to the earth. He should drink water filtered by cloth.
Words and deeds should be pure and true. The shells of water-gourd (pumpkin), wooden pots and earthen pots are the Vaíśuváya sign of hermits. A hermit should beg for food daily from houses where no smoke comes out, where pestle is placed and where there is no charccoal, and after all have taken food and the pot for preparing food is placed upside down.

It is said that the food got by hermits by begging is of five types. They are Mádhukára (collected alms), asánkápta (unlimited), Prákaprápta (prepared much earlier), Ayáçítama (got by not begging) and tákálka (for the time being). In whichever stage of life he may be, he should be staunch in that stage and should perform the duties with honesty.

If by ignorance a hermit engaged himself in killing animals by day or night, to remove the impurity and get purity, he should bathe and perform six prápyámas (restraints of the breath) daily. The hermit should discard his body made of five elements.

The signs of duty are, resolution, forbearance, selfres-trainment, not robbing, cleansing, control of sense-organs, modesty, knowledge, truth, not resorting to anger, and so on. Hermits are of four grades, such as Kuṭíoteca, Bahúda, Hariña and Paramaháriña, the last-mentioned being the noblest grade. The hermit who wears one or three danálas (rod) will be freed from ties of birth and death.

The five Yamas or restraints are not killing (Ahínsá), truth, not stealing, celibacy and not receiving. The five Niyamas or religious duties are cleansing, joy or contentedness, penance, self-study and meditation on God. The sitting postures suitable for hermits are Padmásana etc. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 161).

SANYÁSTAPÁDA. A famous Puránic region in India.
The king of this kingdom, fearingJarásandha, ran away to the south with his son. (Sabhá Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 28).

SAPTACARU. A holy place. The reason for giving this place the name Saptacaru is given in Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82 as follows: The word ‘Caru’ means sacrifice. Once devas (gods) and men together put the fat parts of sacrificial animals, as burnt offerings in the sacrificial fire, each singing seven verses from the Rgveda. By this sacrifice they obtained more prosperity than the fruits of giving one lakh of cows as alms or performing hundred Rájasúya sacrifices or thousand horse-sacrifices.

“The wise said that it was an endless gift to the manes. The gods, the manes, the Gandharvas, the celestial maids, the gáņas, the yákás, Kinnaras, the siddhas, the Vídyádháras, the people of the earth, the Rákhásas, the daityas, the Rudras, Braháma, all these joined together with vow and fast taken for a thousand years and performed a sacrifice each exalting Viṣṇu by singing seven verses from Rgveda. Keśava was much pleased at the caru and gave them Áśatás-váryásiddhí (the eight miraculous attainments) and everything they wished. Thus giving them all kinds of prosperities, the god Mukunda disappeared in this place as lightning in the clouds. Therefore this place became famous everywhere by the name Saptacaru.”

SAPTADVÍPA (S). The seven Brahmins who killed and ate on the way the cow brought for the teacher.
These seven Brahmins were the disciples of a teacher in Kúḍúinapura. Once owing to a severe famine people were in a very difficult situation. The teacher sent these seven disciples to beg for a cow from his son-in-law who had a very large number of cows. They did accordingly. The son in-law gave them a cow for his father-in-law. The disciples began the return journey with the cow. When they reached half-way they became so weary and tired of hunger and walking that they could not proceed a step further. When they reached the stage of death, those celibates killed the cow according to the Vedic rites, and ate the flesh. Carrying the remaining flesh they reached the house of the teacher and told him all the truth. As they had tried to be righteous as far as possible, the teacher only felt proud of his disciples. (Káthásáráságarā, Madanamáñ-cukálambaka, Taaránga 1).

SAPTADVÍPAS (SEVEN ISLANDS).

1) General information. The seven islands are Jambúdéva, Plákṣadvipa, Sámalídávipa, Kuśadvípa, Kraúñcadvípa, Sákadvípa and Puśkaradvípa. Each of these islands is surrounded by sea. The sea that surrounds Jambudéva is the Lavaṇa sea (salt sea). The Pláka-advípa is surrounded by the sea of Sugarcane-juice, Sámalídávípa the sea of liqour, Kuśadvípa by the sea of ghee, Kraúñcadvípa by the sea of curd Sákadvípa by the sea of milk and the Puśkaradvípa by the sea of pure water. In the centre of all, lies the Jambudéva and in the centre of this island, stands the golden mountain meru. (Viṣṇu Puráṇa, Áhása 2, Chapter 2).

2) Origin. There is a story about the origin of these seven islands and the surrounding seas, in Devi Bhág-vata Skandha 8.

Two famous sons named Priyavara and Uttánapáda were born to Svéyambhuva Manu. Priyavara and his children ruled the country for a period of eleven arbu-das, that is one hundred million years. Though he was aged so much the power of his mind and body did not show any sign of weakness. At this time he saw once the sun travelling on the first side of the earth, and began to think, "When the sun is walking on one side of the earth, the other side must naturally be dark. Will it happen so in our time? In all places at all times it should be bright and there should be no darkness." Thinking thus he got into a chariot as bright as the sun and travelled round the earth seven times. During these travels the wheels of the chariot made seven furrows on the earth. These furrows became the seven seas and the beds between the furrows became seven islands.

3) Sovereign powers. Priyavrata made his seven sons sovereigns of the seven islands. These seven sovereign rulers were Agnīdhra, Idmājhīva, Yajñabāhu, Hiranyaretas, Gṛhaptṛṣṭha, Medhātithi and Vītihotra.

SAPTĀGAṆA. An ancient holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 16, that if one goes to this place and gives offerings to gods and the manes and worships them, one would attain heaven and become a deva (god).

SAPTAGODĀVĀRA. A holy place near the temple of Śūrpāraka. Those who bathe in this would attain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 44).

SAPTAJANASĀRAMA. A holy place where seven hermits called the Saptajanas, went to heaven by standing head downwards in water. This was the place through which Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva went to Kiśkindhā. Sugrīva told Śrī Rāma about the hermitage of Saptajanas as follows:

"Oh! Rāghi! This vast area is the hermitage where rest could be taken, as sweet fruits and pure water could be obtained and the forest looks like a garden. Here the seven hermits called Saptajanas, who did penance and took vow and fast by standing in water always, with heads downwards, did live in days of old." (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Kiśkindhā Kānda, Sarga 13).

SAPTĀJIT. One of the daughters born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (Matsya Purāṇa 6 : 19).

SAPTAKRT. An eternal god concerned in Śrīdha (offerings to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 36).

SAPTAṀṬR (Ś). (SAPTĀṀṬR). (SEVEN MOTHERS).
1) General information. Saptamāṭr are the seven goddesses named Brahmagī, Vasānvī, Māheśvarī, Kaumārī, Vārāhī, Indrānī and Cāmūṇḍī.
2) Origin. Some are of opinion that the Saptamāṭr are connected with Śiva. Their names reveal that they were born from the bodies of Brahmagī, Vasānvī and such other gods. There is another story that when Śiva and Vasānvī joined together and tried to kill the asura named Andhaka and failed, they created the seven mothers to kill the asura. From each drop of blood of Andhakāsura that fell on the ground an asura arose. These seven māṭr joined with Yogēśvarī, the creation of Śiva, drank the blood of the asura without allowing it to fall on the ground and so it became easy for Śiva to kill the asura.

There is a story in Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 56, about the birth of the Saptamāṭr, as follows: In olden days a fierce war broke out between the devas and the asuras. When the fierce asuras Cāndra and Muniḍa were killed the famous asura named Raktabīja entered the battlefield with an aksauhini of army (21870 chariots, so many elephants, 65610 horses and 109350 infantry). Seeing this immense army of the asuras drawing near, Kauśikī, Māheśvarī and Kālī made a loud roaring sound. Then from the mouth of Māheśvarī, Brahmagī came out seated on a swan and wearing rosary and water pot. From her eyes Māheśvarī with three eyes came out seated on a bull and wearing great snakes as bangles and ear-rings and holding a trident. From the loins came out Kaumārī, seated on a peacock and holding a lance. The beautiful Vasānvī came out from her hand, seated on Garuḍa, holding a conch, discus, club, sword, the bow ārāgīa and arrow. From her posterior came out the awful Nārasimhī (woman-lion) with fierce claws, who at the shaking of her hand displaced the planets and the stars, and from her foot Cāmūṇḍī came out. (See under Palāḷā).

SAPTANĀGA (Ś). (Seven serpents). The Saptaṇāgas are Ananta, Takṣaka, Karka, Padma, Maḥāpadma, Śāṅkhaka and Guṇika. All of them should be consecrated in temples as wearing Brahma-string and having the face with the expanded hood of a serpent. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

SAPTARĀṆA (ŚAPTĀṆA). One of the famous children of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 11).

SAPTARŚIS. (The seven hermits). A group of hermits. There are seven hermits in this group. The Saptarśi in each Manvantara (age of Manu) are different. As there are fourteen Manvantaras before a great deluge, by that time nineyeight Saptarśis will be born and dead. The father of the Saptarśi in each Manu’s age will be different. The Saptarśi of the present Manu’s age, Marīci, Āṅgiras, Ari, Pulastya, Vāsiṣṭha, Pulāhà and Kraut are the mental sons of Brahmā. (For further details see under the word Manvantara).

SAPTASIKUṆḌA. A holy bath (tīrtha) situated within Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 73 that those who bathe in this tīrtha will obtain the merit of good actions.

SAPTASĀḷA (Ś). The cursed forms of the King Manibhadra’s seven sons who were sorcerers. Due to the curse of Agastya they became seven palm trees (sāḷas). They obtained liberation from the curse during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Rāma. (For detailed story see under Manibhadra II).

SAPTAŚAMUDRAS. (The seven seas). See under Saptadvlpa (Ś).

SAPTASĀRASVATA. 1) General information. A holy place situated within Kurukṣetra. This is a holy bath dedicated to Sarasvatī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 61, that during his pilgrimage Balabhadra-rāma visited this holy bath.
2) Origin. A story occurs in Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 38 about the origin of this tīrtha. It is given below:—
Once Brahmā performed a sacrifice on the island of Puṣkara. All the devas (gods and goddesses) attended the sacrifice. Among the rivers, Sarasvatī alone did not come at first. Then Brahmā remembered Sarasvatī and she appeared under the name Suprabhā. Thus she appeared before the hermits who were doing penance in that place assuming seven different figures. From that day onwards the place became famous under the name Saptasārasvata. (See under Sarasvatī).

SAPTĀVAS. The seven horses of the Sun. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long and its shaft is eighteen-thousand yojanas long. The length of the axle is fifteen million seven lakhs yojanas. The wheel is secured to this axle. The entire wheel of ‘Time’ (Kāla-eakra) stuck fast in the undiminishng figure of ‘year’ with three naves of the wheel, five spokes and sixty rings. The chariot is drawn by seven horses. They are the seven Vedic metres with their theory. They are Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagaī, Trīṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arśa 2, Chapter 8).

SAPTAPĀYAS. (The seven expedients). See under Caturupāyas.

SARABHA I. A nāga born in the Takṣa dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya’s serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

SARABHA II. A nāga born in the Airāvata dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya’s serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

SARABHA III. A notorious Dānava, son of Kaśyapa-prajāpati by his wife Daṇu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26).

SARABHA IV. A mahārṣi, who worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14).

SARABHA V. Brother of Dhṛṣṭaketu, King of Cedi. He was a friend and supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. During the āśvamedha he helped Arjuna to lead the yājñī horse. (Āśvamedhīka Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

SARABHA VI. A brother of Śakuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 24).

SARABHA VII. Virabhadra incarnated himself as Śarabha to defeat Narasirhhamurti. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudrasarhiti).

SARABHAṆGĀ. A Mahārṣi, who lived in the Daṇḍaka forest during the ‘forest-life’ of Śrī Rāma. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakānda, Canto IV). When Śrī Rāma visited Sarabhaṅga’s āśrama, Indra too came there, but went away saying that he would meet the mahārṣi after the great mission of Rāma was over. The mahārṣi told Rāma that he was waiting to see him and did not accompany Indra to Devaloka as he wanted to go there only after seeing Rāma. Rāma answered the Mahārṣi that he would take upon himself all the spiritual assets and good results of the actions of the Mahārṣi, and wanted him to point out a place for them (Rāma and others) to live. Sarabhaṅga directed them to the āśrama of Śutikṣṇa, and after that ended his life by leaping into the fire and attained Brahamaloka.

SARABHAṆGĀŚRAMA. A holy place. Those who visit the place purify their families. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 42).

SĀRADANOṆĀYANI. A Kekaya King. His wife, Śrutasena was the younger sister of Kuntī. As the couple did not get a child even very long after their marriage, the King got performed, with Śrutasena’s permission, the ‘Puhṣavāna’ yajña with the result that three sons (Durjaya and others) were born to them. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 111).

SĀRADVĀN. A muni, the son of Gautama. From his very infancy he preferred learning the dhanurveda (science of archery) to the other Vedas. While a brahmācārīn (Religious student) he performed tapas and secured divine arrows. Afterwards, having been overcome by the charms and appeals of an apsaras woman named Jānapati, Saradvān had seminal emission from which were born Krpa and Krpi. (For details see under Krpa).

SĀRADVATI. An apsaras woman. She attended the birthday celebrations of Arjuna.

SĀRAGULMA. A monkey in Rāma’s army. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśīṇḍhā Kāḍa, 41, 3).

SARAKATĪRTHA. A famous sacred place in Kurukṣetra. He who takes his bath here on Caturdaśi day of the dark half and worships Śiva will have all his desires fulfilled and will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83). Within this tirtha there are a crore of other tirthas called Rudraṇḍa-ki, Kūpāṇḍa etc. The sacred place to the east of it is said to belong to Nārada.

SĀRALOMĀ. A mahārṣi, the father of Dāsūra. Vasīṭṭha once told Śrī Rāma the story of Dāsūra to prove that the world is all an illusion. Dāsūra was the only son of Sāralomā, a muni, who performed tapas in the plains of the mountain in Magadhā. Dāsūra too did tapas in another part of the mountain. While the father and the son were living happily the father entered samādhi and the son wept over the loss of his father. Then a forest-nymph comforted him with celestial advice.

Dāsūra performed his father’s obsequies. He began thinking that the earth was impure and that the top of trees was pure and decided to do tapas in such a manner that he got power to sit on the branches and leaves of trees. Accordingly he made a big pit of fire and began making offerings of flesh cut from his body into the fire. Agniigāvāna (Fire-deity) appeared and asked him to choose the boons he wanted. Dāsūra told Agni as follows: “Oh Lord; I do not find any pure spot on this earth, which is full of created living beings. You should therefore, grant me the power to live on the tops of trees.” Agni granted him the boon.

Dāsūra then climbed a big tree in the forest and occupied, without the least fear, a tender leaf at the top of the topmost branch of the tree. He there assumed the Padmāsana (the lotus seat for meditation). His mind was functioning actively as it had not been turned inwards into true knowledge. With his mind in such a state he performed yajña. He continued performing yajñas like gomeda, a‘vamedha etc. mentally for ten years. Then self-illuminating knowledge arose in his mind, and he saw a beautiful forest-nymph seated beautifully attired at the end of the tender leaf on which he was sitting. She was looking very sad, her head bent down. Dāsūra asked her, who she was so much beautiful and attractive as to evoke love even in Kaːna (the god of love). She answered him in a sweet voice as follows: “Very rare desires in life may be got if great men are requested for. I am the forest-nymph of this forest beautified by the tree you sit on and by trees and creepers equally beautiful. An assembly of the forest-nymphs has been held to celebrate a festival for the worship of Kāmadēva on trayodāṣī in the śuklapaśa of the month of Caitra. I too went there, and I, who am childless, felt sorry in mind to see the others petting their children on their laps. But, why should I be sad when you, who can give succipients anything they wish for, are here? You should, therefore, bless me with a child or else I will end my life in fire."

Dāśūra blessed her to have a son within a month. He told her also that it would be difficult for the son to acquire knowledge as he was got on the insistence that she would die in fire unless she got him. He did not grant her request for permission to live with him; he went into the forests leaving her behind him.

The son of the forest-nymph became twelve years old. Then, one day, she took the child to the muni; left it with him and went away. One day the father began telling the son a story, on the top of the tree, and Vasīṣṭha, who was going by the sky in invisible form to bathe in the Kailāsa-gāmī, heard the story. Vasīṣṭha hid himself on the tree and listened to the story. It was the story of King Svoṭha that the muni was telling his son as follows. — "He was famous for his noble qualities and unique prowess. He possessed three bodies, which possessed capacity to rule the country. One of the three bodies was the best, the other midway between good and bad and the third bad. The very origin of the King was in the wide and extensive sky; like birds he lived in the sky. He built a city in the sky with fourteen streets and three divisions or sectors. There were also forests, woods and mountains for games in the city; seven big tanks, wavy-white with creepers of pearl and two lamps, spreading heat and coolness, burning always. The King, who went about all his time in this vast city, built in it many movable inner dwellings, and they were divided between the upper and lower parts of the city. They were thatched with a kind of black grass. Each inner house had nine doors, some of them windows, which admitted air always. In each house five lamps burned, the lamps resting on three pillars and a white piece of wood. Each house was glitteringly plastered and had courtyards. A particular sect of bhūtas, who ever feared light, guarded the houses. When the houses created thus by magic moved from one place to another, King Svoṭha enjoyed, like birds in nests, playing various games therein. The king, who possessed three bodies, used to go out after playing for some time with the guards, and run about like one possessed of a desire to occupy houses, newly built, and then reach the city, which was like a Gandharva city. Frail and unsettled in mind, the king, off and on, developed a will to die, and accordingly he died. Just as waves come up in the sky, the king used to be born again from the sky and to attend to worldly affairs. At times he used to repent about and weep over his actions asking himself what he, the fool, was doing and why he should be sad like that. At other times he used to feel elated and enthusiastic. Briefly put, he used to be, by turns drinking, walking, jumping, expanding, contracting, feeling, drowsy and then exuberant. The great and handsome king was actually, like the sea, rendered restless by wind, possessed by various moods.

The father was describing a philosophy of life figuratively to his son, but the boy understood nothing. Then, as requested by the son, the father explained to him the meaning of the story as follows:

Svoṭha was concretised conception born out of the ultimate sky. Conceptions originate and die automatically. The whole visible world is imaginary. The world is there only when there is conception and in its absence no world exists. Brahma, Viṣṇu, Śiva and Indra are only parts of that conception. It is conception itself, which creates the world of three cities in nothingness or vacuum. On account of the blessing (will) of that fundamental Caitanya (awareness, life) the formless conception attains Brahmanhood (the universal self) and engages itself in the process of creation. The glittering city said to have been created in the sky is the fourteen worlds, the gardens in it are forests and woods, the play hills therein are mountains like the Himalayas, Meru etc. The two eternal lamps of heat and cold of the story refer to the Sun and Moon. The creepers or garlands of pearl refer to rivers. Special gems have been described as tendrils of lotus and fire in the ocean and the seven seas are described respectively as lotus and the seven tanks. The statement that in this three-tiered city the king of conception built play-houses referred to the creation of individual bodies. The houses were connected as those in the upper, middle and lower parts to denote living beings in the three worlds, Devaloka, Manusyaloka and Patala. Movement is the journey of bodies due to the flow of Prāṇa (breath). Pieces of wood refer to bones and the plastering is skin. Black grass said to have been used for thatching is hair on the head. The nine doors are the nine openings in the body. Windows refer to the ear, nose etc. The hand arms etc. are roads and the five sense organs, lamps. The guards, who shun and quit light, are the egos which run away from knowledge and discretion. The king of conception or imagination born from non-materials finds enjoyment in the house of the body, but the enjoyment is only ephemeral. Imagination develops at a moment and is extinguished, like the lamp, the next moment. The place or status of conceptions in the body may be compared to that of waves in the ocean. When desire takes place for things conceived it returns to the ‘body-house’, which is to be born, and it ends or perishes on achievement. Rebirth due to desire (will-power) is never for happiness, but is for unending sorrow and pain. The wide world causes sorrow because it is felt to be real. Absence of this feeling ends the sorrow as night swallows clouds. Lamentation is the appeal or expression of the mind remembering forbidden practices in life and ananda happiness, is the proud state of mind remembering noble practices.

The three bodies of the king according to the three states—the best or highest, the middle one and the lowest denote the three attributes (Sāttva rajas-tamo guṇas) Causative of the existence of the world. The lowest of the attributes (tamogūṇa) or conceptions according to them, getting more and more pain-giving on account of uncultured action lead one to lower forms of life like the worm, tree, grass etc. Conception of real knowledge and truth is realisation of duty, righteousness and wisdom. It is next to the state of salvation called Devesvara state. Rājasa (the middle attribute) guṇa functions as material activities in the form of attachment to wife, son, wealth etc. When one has rejected the forms of guṇas (conceptions) and the very conception... is thus annihilated, one attains the supreme state. Therefore, Oh! son! you reject all external perceptions, control the mind by itself and completely annihilate all internal and external conceptions. Whether you live in heaven, on earth or in pātāla and do intense tapas for thousands of years, unless conception is eliminated you will not attain salvation.

After hearing the above explanation about the illusions in life, from his hiding place Vasiṣṭha went away. (Jñānāvāsīśtha, Canto 17).

SARĀMA I. 1) General. Bitch of the Devas. Śyāma and Śabala, sons of Sarāma, were two prominent messengers of Yama and they possessed four eyes each. The off-springs of these dogs are called Sarameyas. The Rgveda and Mahābhārata contain a story about Sarāma cursing Janamejaya. (For details see under Srutāravas III). 2) Other information. (i) Sarāma worships Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 40). (ii) Sarāma is a graha (Evil spirit) of Subrahmanya which enters the womb of pregnant women and steals the babies. (Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 34). (iii) Sarāma after having once drunk milk from dasyus lied about it to Indra, and he punished her. (Varāha Purāṇa). (iv) Indra once deputed Sarāma to find out the place where the Paṇis had hidden the cows on condition that he would feed her children. Sarāma found out the place and informed Indra about it thus earning for her children their livelihood. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Chapter 5).

SARĀMA II. Wife of Vibhīṣaṇa and daughter of the Gandharva called Saliśa. Sarāma consoled Sītā wailing under the Asoka tree in Lankā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 33, Verse 1).

SARĀMA III. Daughter of Daśaprajāpati by his wife Asiknī. She was married by Kaśyapa maharṣi and from her were born the ferocious animals on earth. (Bhāgavata, Sandha 6).

SARAMEYA I. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Sandha 9, that Sarameya was the son of Svavalka. (Śvaphalka).

SARAMEYA II. The son of the dog Sarāma. (See under Sarāma II).

SARAMEYĀŚANA. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

SARANA. A serpent born in Vāsuks dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya’s serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

SARANĀ I. 1) General information. A Kṣatriya of the Yadu clan. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 17, that he was the son of Vasudeva by Devaki and the brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā. 2) Other details. (i) This Sarana was one of those who took the dowry to Hastināpura at the marriage of Arjuna and Subhadrā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32). (ii) Sarana shone in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 30). (iii) Sarana participated in the Rājaśīya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 15). (iv) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Hastināpura from Dwārakā to take part in the horse-sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, Sārana also accompanied him. (M.B. Aśvamedhā Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

(v) Sarana was the foremost of those who disguised Samba the son of Jāmbavatī as a woman, and abused the hermits. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 15).

SARĀNYA. A wife of Sūrya. (Ṛgveda, 10, 17, 2).

SARĀRI. A monkey, who accompanied Hanūmān to the southern regions in search of Sītā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 44).

SARASA II. A son of Yadu. He founded the city Krauṇcāpurā on the banks of the river Venu in South India. (Harivānśa, 2, 30, 27).

SARASAŅA. See under Citraśāraṇas.

SARASTAMBA. A sacred place in ancient times. He who bathes here will attain the state where he is served by apsarās. (Aṇuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 28).

SARASVATA I. See under Apāntāratamas.

SARASVATA II. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 7, that Sarasvata was the son of Dadhica. Dadhica once happened to see the celestial maid Alambuṣā and became excited, and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sarasvati. The river became pregnant and delivered a child. This child grew up and became the famous hermit named Sarasvata. After the death of the hermit Dadhica, due to scarcity of rain a great famine occurred which lasted for twelve years. When the famine became unbearable all the hermits on the basin and banks of the river Sarasvati began to migrate to other places leaving all their possessions behind, to save their lives. But Sarasvata alone remained on the banks of Sarasvati, living on fish obtained from the river, engaged in meditation and study of Vedas. After twelve years the famine ended and the country became prosperous as before. The hermits who had gone to other places began to come back to their hermitages. The desire to study Vedas grew up in their minds. But there was not a single person, well-versed in the Vedas, except Sarasvata. So all the hermits accepted him as their teacher. Thus Sarasvata taught the Vedas to Sixtythousand hermits, who had returned to their hermitages. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 50).

In course of time the place where the hermitage of Sarasvata stood, became famous under the name Sarasvata tirtha. Tuṅgakārānya is another name of this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 43-50).

In ancient days there were two schemes of study known as ‘Kāṇḍānukrakamapāṭha’ and ‘Sārāsvatapāṭha’ for the Taittirīya-collection (Saṁhitā). But today the Kāṇḍānukrakamapāṭha has become quite extinct. The following is a description, given in Saṁskāratanamālā stating how the ‘Sārāsvatapāṭha’ attained so vigorous a vogue.

Once owing to the curse of the hermit Durvāsas, the river Sarasvati took birth as a woman in the house of a Brahmin, who belonged to the Gotra of Átreyas. Later from that same Brahmin she conceived and gave birth to a son named Sārāsvata. The river Sarasvati herself, taught her son the Vedas completely, and then sent him to Kurukṣetra to do penance. As a result of the penance Sarasvati got an original Kramapāṭha (serial lessons) of the Taittiriya samhitā. He taught those serial lessons to his disciples. In course of time these serial lessons got the name Sarasvatapāṭha.
which earned metaphysical and philosophical importance.

SARAVSATA III. A hermit who lived in the western regions. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 201, Verse 30, that this Sarasvata was the son of the hermit Atri.

SARAVSATA IV. Mention is made in Padma Purāṇa, Svargākhāṇḍa, about another hermit Sarasvata, who taught the Vedas to several disciples in Tuṅgakāraṇya.

SARAVSATA V. The people who lived in a particular region of Western Bhārata. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SARAVSATA I. Goddess of learning.
1) Birth. Sarasvati is the daughter of Brahmā. Kāmadeva was born from Brahmā's heart; Krodha (anger) was born from his eyebrows; Lobha, from his horrifier's, Sarasvatī, from his face; the Sindhus from his genitals, and Nirṛti, from his anus.
The following story about the birth of Sarasvati is from Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 43 :—
Brahmā got ready for creation, and while in meditation satthvaguṇa (sublime quality) began swelling up in his mind wherefrom a girl was born. Brahmā asked her who she was. She answered : "I am born from you.
You fix for me a seat and duties." Then Brahmā told her that her name was Sarasvati and ordained that she should stay on the tip of everybody's tongue. You dance especially on the tongues of learned people. You should also exist on earth in the form of a river, and assuming a third form you should live in me too."— Sarasvati agreed to this.

2) Curse of Sarasvati. See under Gaṅgā.
3) Misled Kumbhakarna. When Kumbhakarna requested Brahmā for a boon, Sarasvati, at the instance of the latter, lodged herself in the tongue of Kumbhakarna and made him ask for Nidrāvatva (Sleep), something different from what he really desired to get Viz.
Nirdevatva (absence of Devas).

4) Received Baḍavāgni. (all-consuming fire). Baḍavāgni was born at the quarrel between the Bhārgavas and Hehayas. Baḍavāgni is flames of Auṛva, the Bhārgava.
(See under Auṛva). It was Sarasvati who took the Agni to the ocean. As a result of this, Sarasvati, became a river in India. The story is told in the Śṛikhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa as follows :—

The world was about to be burnt in. Baḍavāgni, which originated from Auṛva, when Indra requested Sarasvati thus: "Oh ! Devī! you should deposit this agni in the western ocean; else the world will be consumed in its flames." To this Sarasvati told Viṣṇu as follows:
"I am not a free person. I will do nothing without the permission of my father. Therefore, please think of some other means."—
The Devas, who understood Sarasvati's nature, went to Brāhmaṇ with their case. Immediately he called Sarasvati to him and asked her to deposit Baḍavāgni in the western ocean for the safety of himself and the Devas. Unable to disobey her father, Sarasvati, with tears in her eyes, agreed to do so. Then Gaṅgā followed her and she told the former that she (Gaṅgā) would see her flowing northwards when she reached the eastern region surrounded by Devas.

Sarasvati sent back her companions like Gaṅgā, Yamanū, Manorāma, Gāyatrī and Śāivitri who followed her. Then she appeared at the Āśrama of Uttaiška under the Plakṣa tree in the presence of the Devas. Just as Śiva carried Gaṅgā, the Plakṣa tree bore Sarasvati and immediately did Śiva give to her Baḍavāgni in an pot.
Because of his blessing the agni did not burn her hands.
She went towards the north with the pot and came to Puṣkariṇī, and she stopped there to redeem the sins of people. It is believed to this very day that those who drink water from the Puṣkara will attain Brahmalaka.

From Puṣkara Sarasvati flowed towards the west and reaching a date-garden not far off from Puṣkara it rose up again where Sarasvati is known as Nanda as well.
There is also another reason for the name Nandā.
Once upon a time there was a King called Prabhaṅjana.
While hunting in the forest he saw a deer inside a cluster of shrubs and he shot an arrow at it. Then the deer told the King: "What a crime is this ! You have wounded me, who am feeding my child. I have heard that the King shall not kill a deer while it is engaged in drinking, sleeping or mating. May you, who have done this cruel act, be transformed into a tiger and roam about this thorny forest." Saying again and again that he did not notice that the deer was feeding its child, the King begged for absolution from the curse.
Taking pity on the weeping king the deer told him that he would be redeemed from the curse when he had talked with the cow called Nandā, which would go there after a hundred years.

According to the above curse the king got transformed into a tiger and spent hundred years eating wild animals. After hundred years were over a herd of cows came there grazing under the leadership of a cow called Nandā. Beautiful Nandā used to walk ahead of the other cows and graze alone at a secret place in the forest. There was a mountain called Rohita there, on the banks of the river. The northern side of the mountain was a dense forest infested by cruel animals. There lived there a very cruel and terrible tiger as big as a mountain. A generous person called Nanda was feeding the cows with grass etc. Nandā, the cow, got separated from the herd and came to the river when the tiger ran after it asking it to stop. Crying aloud the cow said: Oh tiger; I have a child, which has not begun even tasting grass and it is awaiting the return of its mother to the cow-shed at dusk. I shall go and take leave of the child and return so that you may eat me."— Taking pity on the cow the tiger granted its prayer. It returned duly to the tiger at dusk. The tiger, taken by surprise, by the honesty of the cow enquired of it its name, and the cow answered that it was named Nandā by its master, Nanda. As soon as the name was uttered Prabhaṅjana was released from his old curse and he became the former king. Dharmadeva then appeared there and asked her to choose the boon she liked and she replied as follows:— "I, with my child, must attain the ultimate place and position, and let this place become a sacred place for munis. Also, let this river Sarasvati, come to be known as Nandā, by my name.

Nandā immediately ascended to heaven and Prabhaṅjana returned to his palace. River Sarasvati came to be called Nandā from that day: After flowing through the above-mentioned date-garden towards the south for some distance Sarasvatī (Nandā) flowed again towards the north. She reached the ocean and deposited therein the pot of Baḍāvāgni. (Padma Purāṇa, Šrṣṭi-khaṇḍa) 5) Sarasvatī as Brahmā's wife. The Purāṇas mention three wives of Brahmā, Sarasvatī, Svātī and Gayātī. But, the three are, according to Matsya Purāṇa, one, a woman, who became famous under the names Śatārūpā, Svātī, Gayātī and Brahmā. Brahmā fell in love with his daughter and noticing the fact she turned away to the right side of her father. Then did a face appear on his right side. To avoid the amorous looks of the father, she slid off to both his sides, and faces appeared on those sides of Brahmā. Then Sarasvatī jumped up to the sky and a fifth face appeared on his head, turned upwards. Finding escape impossible she yielded to the desire of Brahmā and they enjoyed honey-moon for a hundred years. To them was born a son called Śvāyambhuva or Vīrāt.

At one place in Skanda Purāṇa, Svātī and Gayātī are referred to as different individuals. (See under Svātī). 6) Idol of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, clad in white clothes, sits on a white lotus. She holds in her hands a string of beads, book and Viṇā. She is depicted in sitting, standing and dancing postures. She is conceived as Śakti related to Viṣṇu as also to Śiva. In certain old works in Bengal, Sarasvatī, instead of Bhūmidevi, is to be seen along with Viṣṇu. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50, enjoins that idols of Sarasvatī in temples should hold in its hands book, string of beads and Viṇā.

7) Other information.

(i) It was on the banks of Sarasvatī that Vyāsa performed tapas and Śuka was born. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha I).

(ii) There are various references to Sarasvatī in the Rgveda.

(iii) Sarasvatī shines forth in Indra's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19).

(iv) Once Sarasvatī advised the muni called Tārkṣya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 185).

(v) During Tripuradahana (burning of the city of the Tripuras) Sarasvatī served as a passage for the chariot of Śiva to advance. (Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 34).

(vi) Muni Yājnāvalkya once thought of Sarasvatī and she appeared before him wearing ornaments of vowels and consonants and sounding ‘Om’. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 14).

SARAVANTI II. River Sarasvatī, flowing through north India is, according to Purāṇic conception, Sarasvatī devī who has assumed the form of a river. (See under Sarasvatī I). The following information about river Sarasvatī famed in the Purāṇas is from the Mahābhārata.

(i) King Matināra once performed a yajña on the banks of river Sarasvatī. At the close of the yajña Sarasvatīdevī appeared and chose the King as her husband, and a son called Taṃsa was born to the couple. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 26).

(ii) River Sarasvatī is one of the seven tributaries of river Gaṅgā and its source is under the Plakṣa tree. One who drinks its water will become free from sin. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 19).

(iii) Sarasvatī worships Varuṇa in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

(iv) The Pāṇḍavas, while travelling in the forest, crossed the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2).

(v) Śrī Krṣṇa conducted a yajña in the plains of river Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 14).

(vi) Kāmyaṅka forest is on the banks of Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 41).

(vii) It is a holy river. If one bathes in it and worships one's ancestors one will attain Saravantaloaka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 66).

(x) The river disappears in Vīṇāśanatīrtha and reappears at Camasodbheda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 3).

(xi) It is the source of Agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(xii) There are many holy places on the plains of the river. They are described in Chapters 33-34 of Salya Parva.

(xiii) River Sarasvatī once carried Vasiṣṭha in its flow. (See under Vasiṣṭhī).

(xiv) Vīṣvāmitra cursed Sarasvatī. (See under Vasiṣṭhī).

(xv) Sarasvatī returned to Dadhiṅka mahārṣi the son born to her by him and he blessed her. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 51).

(xvi) Balabhadrārāma once extolled the greatness of Sarasvatī. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 33).

(xvii) Arjuna appointed the son of Śātyaki as the master of a particular region on the banks of the river. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 71).

SARAVANTI III. Wife of Manu. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

SARAVANTI IV. Wife of Dadhiṅka mahārṣi. The couple had a son called Sārasvatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 101, Verse 9).

SARAVANTIŚĀGAŚARASAŚĀNGAMA. The point where Sarasvatī joins the ocean. It is considered to be a holy place. Candra regained his brilliance once dimmed by the curse of Dakṣa by bathing at this holy place. (For details see under Candra IV, Para 6).

SARAVANTIŚĀNGAMA. A sacred place. Brahmā and the mahārṣis once worshipped Viṣṇu here. He who bathes here will attain Brahma-loka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 151).

SARAVANTYAUṆAŚĀNGAMA. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. One who bathes here and fasts for three nights will be freed from the sin of Brahma-hatyā (killing of a brahmin). (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

ŚARAVĀṆA. The place where Subrahmaṇya was born. (See under Subrahmaṇya).

ŚARAVINDU (ŚAŚABINDU). A famous King born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Duṣyanta. His father's name was Citaratī. He was a great ascetic and a powerful emperor. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He had no less than ten thousand wives and lakhs of children by each wife.

SARAYU I. A river very famous in the Purāṇas. The most important things associated with the river are given below:

(i) Seven tributaries of Gaṅgā originate from the golden peaks of the Himalayas and Sarayu is one of them. Those who bathe in the river will be absolved from sins. (Adi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

(ii) The river exists in Varuṇa’s court worshipping him. (Adi Parva, Chapter 8).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīma, on their way to Girivraja from Indraprastha crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 29).

(iv) It was at Gotāra (or Gopratara) in this river that Śrī Rāma drowned himself to death and attained Viṣṇu-pāda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 70).

(v) This river is the source of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(vi) Vāsisthā once blocked the course of Gaṅgā on its way to Kālīśa at Mānasassaravara. But, Gaṅgā broke the obstruction and flowed on, and Sarayū is the stream that started from there. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 23).

(vii) It is one of the rivers to be remembered both at dawn and dusk. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 21).

(viii) The city of Ayodhyā is situated on the banks of Sarayū. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 5, Verse 5).

SARAYU II. Wife of the Agni Vīra. The couple had a son called Siddhi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 11).

ŚARDŪLA. A spy of Rāvaṇa. It was he, who informed Ravaṇa about the arrival of Rāma. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 30).

ŚARDŪLĪ. Daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavācī, who had ten daughters including Śardūli. Tiger, leopard etc. were born from Śardūli. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

SARGA (CREATION). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 refers to various sargas as follows.

The first creation is that of greatness (Mahatva) i.e. Brahmā. The second creation is that of tanmātras called bhuṭasarga. The third is Vaikārikasarga also called Aṃdriyikasarga. These three kinds of creation are called Prākṛta srṣṭi (natural creation) and that is conscious and intelligent creation. The fourth is mukhyasarga. Mukhyas mean immovables. The fifth is tiryagyoniṣṭi. Since it functions side-long it is called tiryakṣasrotas. The sixth is the creation of Urdhvasrotas, called devasarga. The seventh is the creation of ārvāksrotas, called mānasasarga. The eighth, anugrahasarga, is both sattvic and tāmasic. Thus, vaikṛtasarga is five in number and prākṛta-sarga three. The ninth sarga is the Kaumāra sarga, which is both vaikṛta and Prākṛta. The fundamental or root cause of the universe is the above nine creations of Brahmā. Prākṛta-sarga is of three types, nitya (eternal), naimittika (casual) and dainandina (daily). Nityasarga is the creation after interim deluges.

ŚARIKA. A hermit who was a prominent member of the council of Yudhīśṭhira. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 13.

SĀRIMEJAYA. A King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19, that this King was present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi.

ŚARIKA. (BODY). Body is constituted of the five elements, earth, water, air, wind and sky (ether). What is solid or hard in the body is earth; liquid, is water; hot or burning, fire; what gives motion to the body is air and what are pores in the body is sky.

Body is that which exists and functions with the five organs of knowledge eye, ear, nose, tongue and skin, and the five organs of action like Upāstha (sex organ), Pañī (hand), Pāda (leg) and Vāṇī (speech). The body depends on the six tastes, sweet, sour, saltish, bitter, hot and astringent. (Kāṭu, amla, madhura, lavaṇa, tiṭka and kaṣaṇya). The body is composed of seven internal elements (dhatus) of seven colours, white, red, black (dark black), black and white, yellow, brassy and faint-white (Pāndu-ra). Vātāpīṭakaphalas (wind, bile and phlegm) are intertwined in the body. Since the body is formed of vital fluids from the six organs of the father and the mother it is divyoni (males with male and females with female organs of reproduction). The body exists by four kinds of foods, bhojya, bhāksya, khaḍya and lehya. After coitus, within one night, the male and female semen and blood combine into one body in the womb (Kālalā). Within seven days it becomes foamy (budbuda). After a fortnight it becomes solid (piṇḍa) and after one month hard (kaṭhinā). During the second month the head of the child is formed; in the third month its feet: in the fourth its ankles, stomach and waist are formed. In the fifth month is formed the back (Pṛśṭhā) and face, nose, eyes and ears are formed in the sixth month. During the seventh month life enters the child’s body. By the eighth month all the signs of the human being are completed in the child. If the vitality and effulgence of the mother are more than those of the father the off-spring will be female and vice versa; if both are in exactly equal proportions the child will be a eunuch, neither male nor female. If the parents were sad and worried during the time of the mother’s conception, the child born would be either blind, lame or a pigmy. If the semen is split into two by wind (in the womb) the mother would give birth to twins. In the ninth month the child will be gifted with knowledge and it will remember to what caste it belonged and what all good and evil actions it did in its previous life.

ŚĀRISRKKA. Son of the bird Mandapāla. (See under Khaṇḍavādāhā, Para 8).

ŚARRJAYA. A Śṛjaya King. Mention is made about this King who had been the support of the Bharadvaj, in Rgveda, Manḍala 6, Anuvāka 47, Sāket 25.

ŚARKA. A son of King Kuśāma. Śraka had a brother called Gāni. (Brāhmaṇḍa Prāraṇā, Chapter 57).

ŚARMACA. A famous rural region in the northeast of India. Bīnasena conquered the region during his triumphal tour. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

ŚARMI. A brahmin scholar. (See under Pārśaṭa).

ŚARMISTHĀ. Daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, King of the asuras. (For details see under Devayāni).
SARNGA. Sri Krsna’s bow. The following facts about the bow are gathered from the Mahabhara.

(i) When Krsna exhibited his Visvarupa (cosmic form) in the assembly of the Kauravas he had held in one hand this bow. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 10).

(ii) Krsna’s Saras is on a par with Indra’s bow called Vijaya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 4).

(iii) Saras is one of the three divine bows. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 5).

(iv) Saras was made by Brahmay and presented to Krsna. (M.B: Southern text, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 141).

SARNGAKOPAKHYANA. The story of the Sarngaka bird. (See under Khandavadiha).

SARNGARAVA. A maharshi. He was one of the officiating priests at the Sarapasatra of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 6).

SARPA. A son of Tvashta. According to Agni Purana the sons of Tvastha were called Ekadasarudras; but according to Mahabhara, Sarpa, one of the Ekadasarudras is the son of Sthana and the great-grandson of Brahmay. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

SARPABALI. An offering made by Hindus in South India to propitiate serpents. Serpents are pleased by songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvatti (Male and female members of a Hindu sub-caste), to make offerings and for the Pulluvars to sing—these form important elements of Sarpabal. The hal has a connection with the story of Khandavadiha. The legend behind the hal is that a Pullava woman saved Takshaka, who escaped to the ocean after the Khandav forest was burnt down. Songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvatti are unavoidable items in Sarpabal.

Drawing the Kalam is a very important item in Sarpabal. It is drawn on a platform made of putumana (small heaps of earth thrown up by earthworms and termites), the platform being demarcated by four pieces of arecanut wood. The platform is covered with silk and tender coconut leaves are hung all around it. The Kalam is drawn with rice powder, and other coloured powders. The husk of paddy burnt into charcoal is powdered and with it serpents are sketched first on the manjapa (platform). The naga drawings are tinted with colours. The (colour) powders are collected in coconut shells and sprinkled on the drawings through holes in shells. Pulluvans exhibit wonderful artistic talents in making the drawings.

When the kalam is drawn worship of naga is begun compulsorily by a male member of the house, and he is technically called ‘Kalattil Kaimal’. He has been observing ‘vrata’ during two days previous to the pujja (worship). Having taken his bath and wearing an additional cloth across his shoulders (Uttaraya) he comes with water in a jar. Four lamps should be burning on four sides of the kalam. Also, paddy, rice, tender coconut, milk, fruit etc. should be placed on its four sides. As directed by the Pulluvan the ‘Kaimal’ conducts the worship by offering flower, water etc. The Kaimal is to sit on each of the four sides of the kalam and do the pujja. Then wicks (made of cloth) should be lighted, water sprinkled on it and with that the Kaimal should go round the kalam thrice. With the wicks placed on a leaf with paddy underneath it and also with burning camphor he should go round the kalam. Then the Pulluvan playing on the Vina in front and a male member of the house with a vessel containing milk, a female member holding a lamp, two girls holding brass plates and the Kaimal and all of them following the Pulluvan go round the Kalam thrice and proceed to the serpents’ temple in the compound, pray and return. After all these persons are seated, the Kaimal washes the feet of and puts flowers on the heads of the two girls, who had held the brass plates; seats them on two pieces of round wood in the kalam. The girls will have mirror etc. in their hands. They should concentrate their eyes on the heads of the serpents. Now begins the Pulluvan pattru (song by Pulluvan). At the time of the worship they will be beating tunes on a brass pot, music being made on the Vina.

‘Pulluvan pattru’ is the most important item in the whole programme. The songs relate to the burning of the khanda forest, Kalyanmardana (suppression of the naga king) etc. One Pulluvan sings songs and a second one repeats them. A minimum of two Pulluvan males and two females are required for the purpose. As the songs acquire momentum the girls begin to shake their heads and to wipe off the kalam. Then the girls are asked questions and they answer. Within a short time the girls will swoon and fall on the ground. They are brought back to consciousness by water being sprinkled on them and by fanning. This is in general the nature of a Sarpabal.

SARPDEVI. Sarpa devi, also called nagatirtha, is a sacred place in Kuruksetra. A bath here is as beneficial as the performance of anagnistoma yajna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

SARPAMALI. A maharshi gifted with divine powers. He had a talk with Sri Krsna on the latter’s way to Hastinapura. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SARPANTA. A bird born in the line of Garuda’s children. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

SARVABAHAUMA II. A son born to King Ahiranyak of the Lunar dynasty, by Bhanumati, daughter of Krtavirya. This Sarvabhauma married Sunand, daughter of the King of Kekaya. (M.B: Adi Parva, Chapter 95).

SARVABAHAUMA III. An elephant born in the family of the Diggajas (Eight elephants supporting the globe). Mention is made about this elephant in Mahabhara, Droha Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 26.
SARVABHAUMA IV. An incarnation in the Manvantara (Manu's age) of Sāvarṇī Manu. Sarvabhauma was begotten by Devaguhya and was born of Sarasvatī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

SARVADAMANA. Bharata, the heroic son of Śakuntalā. (For details see under Bharata I).

SARVEDEVATĪRTHĀ. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. He who bathes there will derive benefit equal to that of gifting away thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 86).

SARVAGA. Son of Bhimasena by his wife Balandharā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 77).

SARVAKĀMA. Son of King Rūparnā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SARVAKĀMAUDUGHA. A daughter of Surabhi. She holds up the northern region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 10).

SARVAKARMA. Son of King Saudāśa. When Parāśu- rāma killed the Kṣatriyas it was Parāśaramūni, who saved Sarvakarmā from death. (Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 76).

SARVAPĀPAPRAMOCANAKŪPA. A Kūpa (well) which drives away all sins. It is a tirtha. He who bathes in its waters will never have to face evil fate. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 126).

SARVARTUKA. A beautiful forest near mount Raivatāka. (M.B. Southern text, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SARVASĀRANGA. A nāga born in Dhrḍarāṣṭra dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 18).

SARVAŚEÑA. A king of Kaśi whose daughter Sunandā was married by emperor Bharata. The couple had a son called Bhumanyu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 32).

SARVATEJAS. A king born in Dhrūva's dynasty. Vyūṣṭa was his father. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SARVATOBHADRĀ. Varuṇa's home. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 10).

SĀRYĀTI I. A son of Vaivasvata Manu.

1) General. Ikṣvāku, Nābhaṅga, Dhṛṣṭa, Sāryāti, Nārisyaṇa, Prāṃfū, Nṛga, Dīṣṭa, Kāruṇa and Pṛṣadha were sons of Vaivasvata Manu. Sāryāti had a son named Anāta and a daughter called Sukanyā, who was married by the aged and blind Gyavana, and a son named Pramati was born to the couple. (See under Gyavana).

2) Other Information.

(i) Sāryāti lives in Yama's court worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14).

(ii) Gyavana performed for Sāryāti his yajña at which the Āśvinikumāras, in disobedience of Indra, drank Somarasa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 124).

(iii) Two famous kings, Haihaya and Tālajārigha were born in Sāryāti's dynasty. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 6).

SĀRYĀTI II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of Prācinvān and father of Aharīyāti. (Āśrama- vāsika Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 14).

SĀRYĀTIVANA. A sacred forest. Arjuna, in the course of his 'dream-trip' to Kailāsa in the company of Śri Kṛṣṇa crossed this forest also. (Drona Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 82).

SĀSABINDU. See under Sarabindu.

SĀŚAṆĀ. Son of Vikukṣi, the King of Ayodhyā. Puruṇjayā was Sāśāṇā's son. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

SĀŚAṆĀ II. A son of Ikṣvāku. His real name was Vikukṣi. (For the detailed story as to how 'Vikukṣi' became 'Sāśāṇā see under Vikukṣi).

SĀŚAKA. A caste. Kārṇa, during his triumphal tour, defeated the King of the Sāsakas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 21).

SĀŚALOMĀ. A King very much reputed in the Purāṇas. He did tapas at Kurukṣetra and attained heaven. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 14).

SĀŚAYANĀ. A sacred place. In the waters of river Sarasvatī at this place the full moon reflects in the form of a śaśā (bare). A bath here will make a man as bright and lustrous as the moon. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 114).

SĀŚIKA. A rural area in ancient India. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).

SĀŚIKAṆĀ. Daughter of Subāhū, King of Kāśi. She was married by a prince Sudarśana who had been driven out of his kingdom by Yudhājit.

As she became a young woman Sāśiikalā heard about Sudarśana, who lived in the forest with his mother and fell in love with him. One night Devī appeared in dream to her and told her that marriage with Sudarśana would take place, and at those words of Devī she awoke from sleep and began laughing. Though her mother asked Sāśikalā about the reason for her laughing thus, she answered not, but continued laughing. One day while she was picnicking in the Campasa forest, an old brahmin came there and described to her about the great personality and beauty of Sudarśana, who then was staying with his mother at Bharadvājārama. Sāśiikalā's heart yearned to be with Sudarśana.

Sudarśana, after the death of his father Dhrūvasandhi, lived with his mother Manoraṃā and her father. But, Yudhājit killed Manoraṃā's mother also. It was after this that Sudarśana and his mother took refuge in the āśrama of Bharadvājāramu. One of those days Niśāda, King of Śrīgiverapura and a friend of Sudarśana's father (Dhrūvasandhi) came to Bharadvājārama and presented a chariot, which possessed mysterious powers, to Sudarśana. The munis were pleased at this and imparted to Sudarśana the Kāmarājamaṇtra, which gave one who practised it all that one desired, and after the above incident Sudarśana began slowly to come out of the āśrama. He went about the forests in the chariot presented by Niśāda, and he was astonished to find many an armed soldier surround him wherever he went. This happened because of the mysterious powers of the chariot.

It was at this time that King Subāhū decided to conduct the Svaśayinvara of his daughter Sāśiikalā. Kings from all lands came. Sāśiikalā told her mother in secret about her desire to marry Sudarśana, and the mother in turn told about this to the father. But, he was not for it. Then Sāśiikalā sent a messenger secretly to Sudarśana to request him to be present at the Svaśayinvara, and Sudarśana and his mother started for the palace of the King of Kāśi and when they reached it, kings like Yudhājit had already come there. A rumour was spread that Subāhū, insulting all the crowned heads, was going to marry his daughter... to Sudarśana, a mere beggar. The assembled Kings, therefore, got themselves ready to pick a row with Subāhu, but he pacified them with the assurance that the Svayamvara of Saśikalā would formally be conducted and her husband could then be selected by herself. That night Saśikalā's parents tried their best to divert her heart away from Sudarśana, to no purpose and the same night she was duly married to him. By the next morning news about the marriage became public and all the Kings, who had come for the Svayamvara decided in conference to kill Sudarśana on his way back home with his wife, and abduct Saśikalā. Accordingly on the fourth day after the wedding when Sudarśana and Saśikalā were returning to Ayodhyā escorted by the army allotted to them by Subāhu, King Yudhājit and his followers attacked them from their hiding place. In the battle that ensued Devi appeared and helped Sudarśana, who defeated the enemies. People of Ayodhyā received with enthusiasm the victorious Sudarśana and he was crowned their King. In later years he became famous as emperor Sudarśana.

SĀṬĀ. The presiding deity (idol installed) in the Sabarimala temple.

1) Birth. Siva fell in love with Mahāvisṣūṇa in his assumed form as Mohini and Sāṭā was the result of their union. (Kambārāmāyana, Bālakāṇḍa). This story occurs in the 8th Skandha of Bhāgavata and the Asura kānda of Skanda Purāṇa, but only the Skanda Purāṇa refers to the child by name Sāṭā.

2) Other information.
   (i) In the battle between Indra and the asura called Sūrapadma the former deputed Sāṭā for the protection of Saśidēvi. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).
   (ii) Sāṭā is supposed to have two wives called Purāṇa and Puṣkalā and a son called Satyaka. (Aṣṭottarasatākam about Sāṭā; also see under Sabarimala).

SĀṬHĪDĒVĪ.

1) General. A Devi bornout of 1/6 part of original nature (Mūlaprakṛti). Since she was born out of 1/6 part, she is called Sāṭhīdēvī. Also called Devasenā, Saṭhīdevi is the patron-devi of children. She grants them life. She protects them as the real mother and always remains by their side. She has earned Siddhi by the practice of yoga, is the best among the aṣṭamātrīs (eight mothers) and is the wife of Sabrānayaṃ.

2) Blessings of the Devi. She is foremost among the devis, who bless children. There is a story in the ninth canto of Devi Bhāgavata revealing the importance of Saṭhīdevi.

Though Priyavrata, son of Śvāyambhuva Manu was at first averse to marriage he, at last, married, on the insistence of Brahmā, a woman called Mālinī. For long he had no issues and at heart he got a putrakāmeṣṭī yakṣa performed by Kaśyapaprajāpati as a result of which Mālinī got pregnant, and delivered in the twelfth year. But, the child was still-born and Priyavrata set out with the corpse for the burning ghāt. But, he could not make up his mind to give it up and so decided himself also to court death. Then he saw a divine plane stop there with a woman in it, who spoke to him as follows: "I am Devasenādevi, the mental daughter of Brahmā and wife of Skandadeva. It is I, who grant son to the sonless, wife to the wifeless, husband to the husbandless, wealth to the poor and the results of their actions to all." So saying the Devi took from Priyavrata the corpse of his child and brought it back to life.

SĀṢOLKĀMUKHI. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

SĀṢVA. An ancient King in Bhārata. It is said in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter I, Verse 17, that this King remains in the palace of Yama and glorifies him.

SĀṬA. A great yakśa friend of Vaiśravaṇa. (See under Dipakarṇi for the story about how Sāṭa became a cursed Yakṣa).

SĀṬABALA. A peepal tree on the peak of mount Kumuda. From the branches of the tree milk, butter-milk, ghee, juice of Sugar-cane etc. descend carrying with them divine rice, clothes, ornaments etc. to the Kumuda mountain and flow in rivers towards the north. The people in those places get their rice, clothes ornaments etc. from the river. Minākṣīdevi praised by Devas has her abode here. Those who drink milk etc. flowing in the river will not be affected by hunger, thirst and signs of old age. Nor will any danger overtake them. They will live long. (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

SĀṬABALĪ. A great monkey under the leadership of Sugrīva. He was the leader of the monkeys deputed to the northern regions to look for Siṭā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kānda Canto 43).

SĀṬABHIṢĀK. A star.

He who gives gifts of fragrant materials like sandalwood on the day of this star will, after death, live with the aprāśas and enjoy fragrant smell. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 30).

SĀṬACANDRA. A brother of Śakuni. In the battle of Kuruksetra he fought on the side of the Kauravas and got defeated by Bhīma. (Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 23).

SĀṬADHĀNUS (SĀṬADHANVA). A Yādava king. (For details see under Kṛtavāma Parva 2).

SĀṬADRŪ. The Purāṇic name of the Indian river now called Sutlej. Grief-stricken over the death of his son, Vasiṣṭha once jumped into this river, which, realising that the mahārṣi was as powerful as fire, divided itself into many branches and flowed in various directions, and hence the river came to be known as Śatadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 176, Verse 8). Once in talking about sublime rivers to Śiva, Pārvati mentioned this river also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18). Satadrū is also one of the ten rivers referred to in the Rgveda.

SĀṬADYUMNA. A King in ancient India, son of Gākṣuṣa Manu by his wife Nādyalā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13). Nādyalā had ten brilliant sons including Śatadymuna. Satadymuna once gifted away a house of gold to the brahmin called Mudgala and thereby attained heaven. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 32).

SĀṬAGHAṆṬA. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

SĀṬAHRAḌA. Mother of the Rākṣasa called Virādha. His father's name was Jaya. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa).
SATAJIT I. A King of the Yādava dynasty. Satajit, son of Sahasrājīt, had three sons called Mahāhaya, Veṇuhaya and Hehaya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATAJIT II. Son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Jambavatī. Satajit met with his death in the quarrels among the Yādavas at Prabhāsātīrtha. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATAJYOTI. Son of King Subhirāj. The King had one lākṣa sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 44).

SATAKARĀŚI. See under Mandakarāśī.

SATAKARĀŚI II. Son of King Pūrṇottārga. He ruled the country for fiftysix years. (Matsya Purāṇa).

SATĀKSHA. Another form of Devī. (For details see under Durgama).

SATAKUMBHA. A sacred river, considered to be the source of agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

SATALOCANA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

SATAKUMHA I. (SATAMUKHA RĀVANA). Father of Indumukhi, the wife of Sahasramukha Rāvana. Satamukha had defeated Pāṭāla Rāvana in battle. He gave the eternal weapon called Kaṭhorakūṭhara as dowry for his daughter's wedding. (See under Sahasramukha Rāvana).

SATAKUMHA II. An asura, a great devotee of Śiva. He did very intense tapas for hundred years making offerings of his flesh in the fire. Śiva, who was pleased with his tapas, granted him many boons. (Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

SATĀNANDA I. Priest of King Janaka. He was the son of Gātama by Ahalāyā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278). Satānanda felt elated that Śrī Rāma restored to Ahalāyā her old sanctity and also that his father Gātama received back his mother and lived with her. It was Satānanda, who acted as high-priest at the wedding of Sītā with Rāma.

SATĀNANDA II. A mahārṣi, who possessed divine gifts. He once paid a visit to Bhīṣma. (Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).

SATĀNANDA. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

SATĀNĪKA I. A King born in the dynasty of Yayātī. He was the son of Bhādradatta and father of Durdama. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATĀNĪKA II. Son of Nakula. The Mahābhārata contains the following information about this Satānīka.

(i) To Nakula was born of Draupadī a son called Satānīka. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 123).

(ii) This Satānīka was born from an aspect of Viśvadeva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).

(iii) Once upon a time there was in the Kaurava dynasty a Rājaṛṣi called Satānīka and it was to perpetuate that name that Nakula named his son 'Satānīka'. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

(iv) This Satānīka defeated in the great war Jayasena, Duskarna and Citrasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 42; Chapter 79, Verse 46 and Drona Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 12).

(v) Satānīka fought with Vṛṣasena, Śrutakarman, the son of Dhiṭarāṣṭra and Aṣvathāmā. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 7; Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13 and Chapter 85, Verse 14).

(vi) He killed Bhūtakarman and the prince of Kaliṅga in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23; Karna Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 21).

(vii) He died in the great war hit by the arrow of Aṣvathāmā. (Saupātika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 57).

(viii) He referred to by the following names also in the Mahābhārata, viz. Nakulaputra, Nakulādyāda, Nākula.

SATĀNĪKA III. A prince born as the son of Janamejaya (Pariṅkī's son) of his wife called Vapiṣṭhamā. He married the princess of Videha and to the couple was born a son called Aśvameghadatta. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 88). He had also another son named Sahasranīka. (Kathāsaritsāgara). (See under Udāyana).

SATĀNĪKA IV. A well-known Rājaṛṣi born in the Kuru dynasty. It was to perpetuate his name that Nakula called his son Satānīka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

SATĀNĪKA V. A brother of Virāta, the King of Matsya. He was called Sūryadatta too. Further he was the commander-in-chief of the army of Virāta. When Virāta's cows were lifted by the Kauravas, Satānīka went to war against them along with the Trigartas, who wore golden helmets on their heads. (Virāta Parva, Chapter 31). He was an ally of the Pāṇḍavas in the great war. He was wounded in the war by Bhīṣma and killed by Śalya. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).

SATĀNĪKA VI. Younger brother of the Virāta king. He was killed by Drona. (Drona Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 18).

SATAPATRAVANA. A forest on the western side of Dvārakā. The mountain called Sukākṣa is at the centre of the forest. (Sāhabhā Parva, Southern text, Chapter 33)

SATAPARVĀ. Wife of Śukrācārya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

SATARATHA. A king in ancient India. He lives in the court of Yama and worships him. (Sāhabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 26).

SATARUDRA. The story of Satarudra was imparted to Śrī Rāma by Vyāsa to show that all life is mere illusion or different complexes of the mind. Satarudrābhāyāna is the story of a contemplative sannyāsin. Whatever subject or object he conceived in his mind used to assume its form as water changes into waves, and it was a boon or great asset, which his heart had acquired as a result of its purity. He confined himself to this aśrama and thought about things one after the other.

To start with, Satarudra thought to himself that he was a 'dream person' called Jīvaṭa. While picnicking in the streets of a 'dream-built' city the 'dream person' overcame by the effect of liquor remained in an unconscious state for some time. He also felt immediately to be a brahmin learned in the Vedas. 'Jīvaṭa', who transformed himself thus into a brahmin slept during day-time overcome by exhaustion on account of work. At once he dreamt himself to have been transformed into a feudal lord or tributary King, who, after taking his meals went to sleep when he dreamt that he was changed into a great King. The King, who ruled the country peacefully changed himself one day in dream into a celestial woman. The next dream was that the woman, while in deep sleep after a hilarious sexual act, was turned into a she-deer. The she-deer, in dream turned into a creeper, and it duly bore leaves, flowers and fruits. The creeper felt that it entwined and climbed some trees. Then he (Jiva) went into deep sleep, absolutely unaware of himself, for some time. Then he dreamt himself to have changed into a beetle. The beetle felt attracted towards a lotus flower and got captured therein. An elephant from the forest nearby entered the ‘lotus pond’, plucked and tore into pieces the lotus flower. As the beetle had got fixed in his mind and imagination the picture of the elephant it became a tusker elephant after its death. While roaming about in the forest the elephant fell into a deep pit and the King’s men captured and listed it in the army. A number of beetles gathered round the elephant to suck its ichor (madajala). Because it thought about the beetles the elephant, after its death in battle, again became a beetle, which imagined about the swan in a lotus-pond. The beetle one day got captured in the lotus-pond and became a swan on being killed by the elephant. Thus the beetle, after taking many births and forms, became ultimately Brahma’s vehicle, the swan. While the swan once moved about the surrounding places of mount Kailasa it saw Rudra and imagining itself to be Rudra (Rudrahams— I am Rudra) attained Rudrachood. While living happily with all the paraphernalia of Rudra he remembered his past lives, and wondering about the many continuous dreams of his, in solitude he thought like this:—“The power of Maya (illusion) which rules over everything in the world is really wonderful. How curious and peculiar is the cunningness or trickeries of Maya in creating, like mirage, the illusion that things, which did not really exist, existed. Mistaking Maya or mirage, as the truth and the fact, I roamed about in many a material desert. In one form of life I was born as Jiva, in another, King; in yet another, swan etc. and now I have attained Rudra-hood. Hundred Caturyugas and thousand years have passed in this ‘show’. Now, I will return and personally see all past episodes and I shall identify them all with myself by bestowing knowledge on them.

Having made up his mind like this, Rudra descended to the state of the old Sannyasin. He infused life and vitality into the dead body of the sannyasin that was there. The Sannyasin remembered his old illusions and hallucinations. He had attained Rudra-hood after crossing various stages from being Jiva. Then both of them together came to the Jiva stage, awoke the ‘dream-person’ by giving him mind and vitality. Afterwards the three of them, who assumed single form by the composition of different personalities, attained various stages like brahmin etc., awoke them too and added them to themselves (the three). Thus there came about to be hundred persons formed from aspects or fractions of Rudra, and at the instance of the real Rudra they returned to their homes and lived there happily with their sons, relations etc. Those hundred persons are the Satarudas. (Jamaavasishta, Satarudrapakhyaana). In Verse 13, Chapter 150 of Anushasan Parva, Mahabharrata also is found references to the Satarudas.

SATARUPA. Wife of Swayambhuva Manu, who took his sister Satarupa herself as his wife. The couple had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttanapada and two daughters Praasiti and Aakti. Praasiti was married to Dakwaprajapati and Aakti to Ruciprajapati. (Visnu Purana, Part I, Chapter 7).

SATASAHASRA. A well-known sacred place in Kuruksetra. Bathing here is productive of the same result as giving away thousand cows. This place is thousand times more beneficial than other places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

SATASAHASRAKA. A holy place at Ramatirtha on the river Gomati. He who bathes here and takes food as per sattvical injunctions will get results equal to those of giving in gift a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 74).

SATASIRSHA. Wife of Vaasuki, King of the nagas (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 17).

SATASRNGA I. A muni, who lived on Mount Sata稽riga. It was this muni, who cursed Pandu that he would die on his coming into physical contact with his wife. (For details see under Pandu and Mahabharata). SATASRNGA II. A Raksasa, who had three sons called Sanyaya, Viyama and Suyama. (Santi Parva, Southern text, Chapter 98).

SATASRNGA III. A mountain where Pandu once practised austerities. (Adi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). The Pandavas were born here and they were named in the presence of Munis who lived there. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122). Also, here it was that Pandu died. Once in the course of a dream-trip of Arjuna in the company of Kesna to Kailasa they saw Sata稽riga also. (Drona Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 32).

SATATAPA. Author of a Smrti in prose and poetry in six chapters.

SATAVAHANA. A King. Guandhya, author of Bhatkathaka was a minister of this King. (See under Guandhya).

SATAVANI. A Raja. His son was known as Satavaneya. (Rgyvda, Manndala I, Anuvaka 11, Suka 59).

SATAYUPA. A Kekaya Raja. He abdicated the throne in favour of his son and went to perform tapas in Kuruksetra forest where he saw Dhrtarashtra and others and spoke about the rules to be observed in ‘forest life’. (Asramavasika Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 8). His grand-father’s name was Sahasracitya (Asramavasika Parva, Parva 20, Verse 60).

SATAYUS I. One of the six sons of Pururavas by Urva. (Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24).

SATAYUS II. A warrior, who fought on the Kaurava side against the Pandavas. He fought from the ‘waist’ position of the Vyuhma made by Bhima and courted death. (Bhima Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 22; Salya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 19).

SATIVA. An asura, son of Kaavyaprapajapati by his wife Danu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 29).

SATI. A birth of Devi Pauravi. (For more details see under Pauravi).

SATKRTI. A king of the solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhagavata Skandha 9, that he was the son of Jayasena.

SATIDAMI. A female attendant of Subrahmany. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

SATRAJIT. A King of the Yadavas. It is mentioned in Bhagavata Skandha 9, that he was the son of Nima and the brother of Prasena. (To know the previous birth of Satrajit see under Satyabhama). Sri Krisha married Satyabhama the daughter of Satrajit. In connection with the jewel Syamantaka, Krtavarma caused Satrājit to be murdered. (More details about Satrājit occur under the entries Prasena, Kṛtvāmarā, (Para 2) and Satyabhāmā).

SATRUGHNA. A brother of Śrī Rāma. He and Lakṣmaṇa were the sons of Sumitrā, and Śrutakirti was his wife. As ordered by Rāma he killed Lavaṇaśūra, who lived in Madhū forest and established there the city called Madhurāpūrī. After the death of Satrughna two sons of his lived in Madhurāpūrī, and after the disappearance of the solar dynasty the city went to the Yadus. (For details see under Śrī Rāma and Hanumān, Para 10).

SATRUGHNA. A prince, the son of Dhrusandhi by his second wife Līlāvati. (See under Dhrusandhi).

SATRUMARDANA. The third son of King Raadhava by his wife Madālāsa. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 23, Verse 26).

SATRUGHNA I. A Sauvīra prince, who followed Jayadratha with a flag. Arjuna killed him in a battle consequent to the Svayamvara of Draupadi. (Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

SATRUGHNA II. A son of Dhrītarāṣṭra. The following facts about him are gathered from the Mahābhārata. (i) Duryodhana deputed him for the protection of Bhīṣma in the great war. (Bhīṣma Purāṇa, Chapter 51, Verse 8).

(ii) He attacked the five Keśa kings. (Bhīṣma Purāṇa, Chapter 79, Verse 56).

(iii) Bhīma killed him. (Droṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 227, Verse 29).

SATRUGHNA III. A warrior and a brother of Karna who fought on the Kaurava side and got killed by Arjuna. (Droṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 31, Verse 62).

SATRUGHNA IV. Another warrior, who fought on the Kaurava side whom Abhimanyu killed. (Droṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 36, Verse 181).

SATRUGHNA V. A son of Drupada. In the great battle Aṣvathāmā killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 36, Verse 151).

SATRUGHNA VI. A King of Sauvīra. Kaṇika, the son of Bharadvāja, taught him political science and all other cunning ways. (Mahābhārata, Śantī Purāṇa, Chapter 140).

SATRUTAPA. A king, who fought in Duryodhana’s army. Arjuna killed him on the occasion when the Kauravas lifted Viśvā’s cows. (Virāṭa Purāṇa, Chapter 54, Verse 11).

SATRUSĀHA. A son of Dhrītarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in the great war. (Droṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 127, Verse 9).

SATRUTAPANA. An asura, the son of Kāśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 63, Verse 29).

SATVADANTA. A Yādava prince. This Satvadanta was one born to Vasudeva by his wife Bhadrā. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96: 71).

SATVATA I. A King of the Yadu dynasty and son of Devakastra, Satvata had seven sons called Bhaja, Bhaji, Divya, Vṛṣṇi, Devaprsthā, Antaka and Mahābhogha. Satvata was one of the Satvatas and the men born in his dynasty are called Satvatas. (Śaṅkhya Purāṇa, Chapter 2, Verse 30).

SATVATA II. A king. (Drona Purāṇa, 97: 52).

SATVATA II. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

SATVIKA. A brahmin, who was turned into a Rākṣasa due to a curse after he had entered heaven. His story has been told by sage Śaunaka to Bharata, brother of Śrī Rāma.

It was Bharata, who led the yājñic horse towards the north in connection with the Aṣvamedha yajña performed by Śrī Rāma after he was crowned King. The horse, which started on its journey from Ayodhya reached, after six months, Hanumān on the limits of India. As soon as it got into a beautiful garden it was rendered stationary as though paralysed. All attempts to make the horse move failed. Satrughna and some soldiers tried to lift the horse by its legs, to no purpose. Hanumān bound its legs with his tail and pulled, again to no purpose, and surprised at this failure of his he spoke to Satrughna and others thus. “It was only just now that I pulled out with my tail the Droṇa mountain so very easily; but this small horse does not stir at all. May be, it is all fate.” Following Hanumān’s speech, Satrughna asked Śaunali the explanation for this state of the matter, but the latter could not find one for it. Then it was decided to find out a mahārāṣṭra and ask him for the explanation. The soldiers accompanying Bhārata went in search of a mahārāṣṭra, reached Śaunaka’s aśrama and submitted the case to him.

The mahārāṣṭra remained in meditation for some time and the condition of the horse became vivid in his mind. Then he spoke as follows:—“There was once a brahmin named Śaṅkśika in Gauḍa (?) land on the banks of river Kāveri. Once he began performing tapas. He spent three days. Drinking only water the first day, consuming air the next day and fasting completely the third day. He continued his tapas repeating the above course until one day he entered sapādhi (expired): He got into a decorated plane sent from Devaloka, went to the peak of mount Meru and thence came to river Jambū, which flowed from the great Jambu tree on the mountain. There in Jambu were many mahārāṣṭras, who had acquired merit by bathing in the golden water of the river, enjoying all comforts in the company of apsara women. Śaṅkśika, one day, haughty with the thought that he was the master of the mahārāṣṭra, did something which quite displeased the latter, and they cursed him. When he prayed for salvation from the curse they told him thus:—“When you paralyse the feet of Śrī Rāma’s horse, you will happen to hear Rāma’s story and then you will be redeemed from curse.”

On Śaunaka informing them thus that it was the brahmin transformed into a Rākṣasa, who had paralysed the legs of the horse, Bharata returned to the horse and recited the story of Rāma and immediately an effulgent person came there in a plane and said, “Oh, intelligent King! I have now heard the story of Rāma and so have become pure; so, please let me go to heaven.” After saying this he returned. Bharata and others were pleased to know that the visitor was Śaṅkśika brahmin. The horse became free from its paralysed condition. The party resumed its journey. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṇḍākhaṇḍa, Chapters 47 and 48).
houses and gardens where people stay. It is stated in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 13, that this Agni had a son named Vivan.

SATYA III. A warrior who served in the army of the King of Kaliyuga. This warrior fought against the Pandavas in the battle of Bhurata. This warrior stood as the wheel-guard of Suratya the King of Kaliyuga, was killed by Bhimasena in the Bhurata-battle.

(M.B. Bhisma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 77).

SATYA IV. A hermit in the country of Vidarbha. This hermit who was a brahmin was a believer in ahimsa also. Once he performed a sacrifice without any killing. His wife Puṣkaraḥṛiṇi helped him in the sacrifice. Dharmadeva came there in the form of an antelope to test the non-killing principle of Satya. The animal came near Satya and said: "I am a deva (god) belonging to the Sukra-clan. I dwell in this forest as an antelope, due to the curse of Dharmadeva. Kill me and complete this sacrifice."

Though Satya heard this, he did not wish to kill the animal. At last the anteelope decided to go and walked eight steps and then returned. Due to the delusive arts of the antelope Satya saw there celestial maids and the aeroplanes of Gandharvas. The antelope said that if he was killed he would attain heaven. A desire arose in Satya for killing and forthwith he lost all the attainments he got by penance. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 272).

SATYA V. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 75).

SATYA VI. The son of Vītata, born in the dynasty of the King Vītahavya. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 62, that this Satya had a son called Santa.

SATYĀ I. A wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made about this wife in Mahabharata, Dākṣinātayapātha, Sakhā Parva, Chapter 38.

SATYĀ II. The wife of the Agni called Śāntyu. So beautiful a woman as Satyā is said to have not existed in any of the three worlds. Bharadvāja was the son born to Śāntyu by Satyā. Bharadvāja had three sisters. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 4).

SATYA (S). A group of Devas (gods). This group of devas lived in the third Manvantara. The name of the then Manu was Uttama and the King of the devas was the Indra Śuṣānti. There were then five Devaṅgas (groups of Gods) each consisting of twelve devas. These ganas were Sudhāmās, Satyas, Japas, Pratardanas and Vaśavartis. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Ahśa 3, Chapter 1).

SATYABHĀMĀ. The wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. 1) Introduction. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa himself said about the previous birth of Satyabhāmā. There was an occasion for saying that.

Once Nārada came from the world of the gods to Dvārakā. He had brought with him some flowers of the Kalkapaka tree. Nārada gave all those flowers to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa divided them among his wives, he but had forgotten Satyabhāmā. Being unable to subdue her sorrow and anger she got into her bedroom and went and sighed and lay there. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of this. He took Satyabhāmā with him on the back of Garuḍa and went to the world of Gods. They reached there and asked Indra for some Kahlāra flowers. Indra refused to give. Garuḍa got ready to uproot the tree. Then Indra wielded his thunderbolt. To honour the weapon thunderbolt, Garuḍa left a feather of his there and returned to Dvārakā. Because of the hitting of the thunderbolt, the peacock, mongoose and jungle crow were born from Garuḍa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa who won the war, returned with Satyabhāmā mounted on Garuḍa, to Dvārakā. The Kalkapaka tree brought from the world of gods, was planted in the garden in front of the palace of Satyabhāmā. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Kalkapaka tree became her own, Satyabhāmā became proud. At that time Nārada came there. She asked Nārada what she should do so as to have Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Kalkapaka tree with her in all births. Nārada said that, for that, she had only to do Tulāpurusadāna. She instantly placed Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Kalkapaka tree in the balance and all the things placed in equal weight were given to Nārada himself. Nārada received them and went to the world of Gods. Satyabhāmā became overjoyed. She asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa, what good deeds she had done to earn so much happiness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa described the previous birth of Satyabhāmā. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttauṛ Khaṇḍa, Chapter 90).

2) Previous birth of Satyabhāmā. Towards the close of the Kṛtayuga, there was a Brahmin named Devasaṃmā who was born of the clan of Agni in Māyāpurī. This Brahmin was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. In the old age a daughter named Guṇavatī was born to him. He gave his daughter to his disciple Candrasaṃmā. Once Devasaṃmā and Candrasaṃmā went to the forest to bring Darbhā (poa) and Samit (butea). While they were walking here and there in the Mango grove in the Himālayas a giant closed with them. Because of terror their bodies were stiffened and so they could not run. The fierce giant killed both of them. The escorts sent by Viṣṇu came and took both of them to Vaikuntha. Guṇavatī cried aloud when she heard that her father and husband were killed by a giant. She lamented for a long while and then fainted and fell down. When she came to herself she began to cry again. At last she sold the furniture and conducted the funeral rites of her father and husband. After that she lived by manual labour. She observed fast and the vow of Kṛttikā and Ekaḍāsi.

Guṇavatī, who was weak and lean because of old age and fever once walked slowly to the river Ganges to bathe. When she got into the river she shivered because of cold. Then an aerial chariot came down from the sky. The messengers of Viṣṇu took her in the chariot, to Vaikuntha. The celestial maids fanned her with the whisk of yak. After this Mahāvīṣṇu incarnated as Śrī Kṛṣṇa to destroy the wicked. Those who were the dependants of Viṣṇu in Vaikuntha took birth in Dvārakā. Devasaṃmā the father of Guṇavatī took birth as Satraśī. Candrasaṃmā became Akṣūra. Guṇavatī became Satyabhāmā. Because of the goodness earned by the fast of Kṛttikā, she had become a beloved one of Viṣṇu. Because she made a grove of holy basil (tulasi) at the gate of Viṣṇu in the previous birth the Kalkapaka tree came to her garden in this birth. Because she lighted lamps in Kārttika, month Mahālakṣmi lives permanently in her house. Because she did fast and vow in Kārttika imagining Viṣṇu as her husband, she became the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in this birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttauṛ Khaṇḍa, Chapter 91).
3) Family life. See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 16 and Naraka Para 4.

4) Other details.
   (i) The sons Bhīma and others were born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Satyabhāmā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).
   (ii) Narakaśura stole the ear-rings of Aditi, the mother of the devas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā went to fight with Narakaśura. They killed him and recovered the ear-rings and gave them back to Aditi. At that time Aditi blessed Satyabhāmā thus: “Till Śrī Kṛṣṇa forsakes his body you will not be affected by old age. Moreover you will always have a divine fragrance and good qualities.” (M.B. Bhāra Parva, Chapter 38).
   (iii) Satyabhāmā had a beautiful white palace in Dvārakā. The steps of the palace were paved with jewels. To those who pass over its steps, hot season will appear to be cold. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātya Pātha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).
   (iv) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Kāmaka forest at the time of their forest life, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā paid them a visit. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 11).
   (v) At this time Satyabhāmā asked Pāncāli about the means and ways to bring the husband over to her side. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Verse 4).
   (vi) When Arjuna came to Dvārakā, after Śrī Kṛṣṇa had forsaken his body, Satyabhāmā lamented with the other queens for a long time. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 13).
   (vii) After this Satyabhāmā went to the forest for penance. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 74).

SATYADEVA. A prominent warrior of the army of Kalīṇa. He took part in the Bhārata-battle and served as the guard of the wheel of King Śrutāyus of Kalīṇa and was killed by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 74).

SATYADEVI. The daughter of King Devaka. This Satyadevi was one of the seven wives of Vasudeva. (Matsya Purāṇa, 44-73).

SATYADHARMĀ I. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was a helper of Yudhishṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 25).

SATYADHARMĀ II. A brother of Saṣārman, the King of Trigarta. Arjuna killed him in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 36).

SATYADHRTI I. A son of Saṭānanda. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278, that this Satyadhrti had two children called Kṛṣṇa and Kṛṣṇi.

SATYADHRTI II. A warrior who fought in chariot on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Battle of Bhārata. The following information is given about him in Mahābhārata.
   (i) Bhīṣma considered Satyadhṛti as one of the prominent fighters in chariots. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 18).
   (ii) This Satyadhṛti had been present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 10).
   (iii) This Satyadhṛti was the son of Sucitra continued helping Ghaṭotkaca the son of Hidimbi, during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 13).
   (iv) Satyadhṛti was an expert in the wielding of all weapons, especially in archery. He was a scholar in the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23).

(v) In the Bhārata-battle he was killed by Droṇācārya. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SATYADHRTI III. The son of the King Kṛṣṇa. In the Bhārata-battle he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 56).

SATYAHTA. A King of the Puru dynasty. He was son of Śrābha and the father of Sudhanva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SATYAJIT I. A King belonging to the dynasty of Yāyāti. He was the son of Sūmita and the father of Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAJIT II. A brother of Drupada, the King of Pāṇcāla. He appears in the story of Mahābhārata for the first time at the battle between Drupada and Arjuna. When the education of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was over, Droṇa asked his pupils to bring Drupada tied as teacher’s gift. An attempt was made to bring Drupada before Droṇa, in which attempt Drupada and Arjuna confronted each other. In this fight it was Satyajit who stood as the right hand of his brother Drupada. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 42).

SATYAKAM. A king of the Yādava clan. He was the father of Satyaki. Satyaka also took part in the festivals conducted on the Raivata-mountain by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the others. It is stated in the asvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 6, that Satyaka conducted offerings to the manes in respect of Abhimanyu.

SATYAKĀMĀ. A noble hermit. There is a story as given below, in the Chāndogopaniṣad about the greatness of this hermit.

As his father died in his boyhood, Satyakāmā was brought up by his mother Jābāli. When it was time to begin education, the boy told his mother, “Mother, I would like to be educated under a teacher, in the Vedas. But I don’t know what clan I belong to. What answer shall I give, when the teacher asks me about my clan?” His mother Jābāli replied, “I also do not know much about the clan of your father who married me when I was a girl. From that day onwards I was engaged in house-keeping. I did not ask your father about the clan. In my younger days I gave birth to you. Shortly after that your father died. Tell your teacher that you are Satyakāmā the son of Jābāli.”

Having heard this Satyakāmā went in search of a teacher. At last he reached the hermitage of the sage Gautama and told him every thing. The hermit was attracted by his truthfulness and behaviour. Believing that Satyakāmā was a Brahmin boy, Gautama accepted him as a disciple. The hermit entrusted the boy with four hundred lean cows to look after. The boy accepted the work, and said to the hermit. “When this becomes a group of thousand fat cows, I will bring them back.” He lived in the forest looking after the cows. The Devas sympathised with him. Vāyu (wind), the Sun, Agni (fire) and Prāṇa together gave him divine knowledge and wisdom. After this Satyakāma returned to the hermit Gautama with thousand fat cows. Seeing the boy whose face shone with the light of God, the hermit was amazed. “Who gave you divine knowledge?” asked the hermit. Satyakāma told the hermit that all that took place. Fully satisfied with the boy, Gautama imparted to him knowledge about the universal Soul (Paramātma) and Satyakāma became a noble hermit.

Satyakāma got several disciples of whom Upakosala was prominent. He approached Satyakāma as a student. For twelve years he served his teacher and kept up the fire in the firepit for burning offering, without being distinguished throughout the twelve years, and worshipped the fire god. Yet the teacher did not impart knowledge to him. The teacher’s wife recommended to her husband that Upakosala should be given learning. But the teacher was silent. Upakosala took a vow and fast before the burning-offering fire pit. Agni Deva felt pity for him and informed him that God is all-pervading and that his teacher would show him the way to God. When he came to the teacher, his face was seen shining. Satyakāma asked Upakosala for the reason. Upakosala told the teacher what the fire god had told him. Immediately Satyakāma taught his disciple the path of yoga (union) by knowledge of the Śāṅkhya.

SATYAKARMĀ I. A king of the family of Bharata. He was the son of Dhrtaavrata and the father of Anuratha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYAKARMĀ II. The brother of Sudārmā the king of Trigarta. Though he took a vow in the Bhārata battle that he would kill Arjuna, what happened was that he was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17; Salya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).

SATYAKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Dharmaketu and the father of Dhrṣṭaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYAKETU II. A king of Pāṇcāla. Mention is made in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Śloka 73, of a Pāṇcāla King Satyaketu who fought with Parāsuraṇa.

SATYAKETU III. A king belonging to the Pūrṇa dynasty. This Satyaketu was the son of King Sukumāra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SĀTYAKI (YUVDHĀNA). A Yādava, who was a warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty and a friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśṇu thus: Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyu - Nāhuṣa - Yāyāti - Yadu - Sahasrajit - Satajit - Hejava - Dharma - Kuni - Bhadrascena - Dhanaka - Kṛtvāvīrya - Kārttvāvī- yārjuna - Madhu - Vṛṣṇi - Yuddhājīt - Śini - Satyaka - Śātya. Śini was the younger son of Yuddhājīt. Sātyaky alias Yuvadhāna, a companion of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and a great friend of the Pāṇḍavas, was Śini’s grandson.

2) His relation to other prominent Yādavas. The dynasty of Anamitra, first son of Yuddhājīt, became famous through Prasena, Satrajit, Śvaphalka and Akūra. Of the four sons of Andhaka, predecessor of Kṛṣṇa, Kukura and Bhajamāna deserve special mention. Āhuca, in the dynasty of Kukura had two sons named Devaka and Ugrasena. Devaki, daughter of Devaka, became wife of Vasudeva and mother of Kṛṣṇa. Karīsa was the son of Ugrasena. Śūra, seventh in the line of Bhajamāna, son of Andhaka had twelve children. His first son Vasudeva was Kṛṣṇa’s father. Śrutakirti, Śrutadēvī and Rājādhidevi the four daughters of Śrī were married respectively by Dhrṣṭaketu, king of Kekeya, Damajāda, king of Cedi, Vṛddhāśarman, king of Karuṣa and Jayasena, king of Avanti. Dhrṣṭaketu was a great ally of the Pāṇḍavas. Śisuṣulā was the son of Damajāda, and Danta-vakra the son of Vṛddhāśarman. Siṣuṣulā and Danta-vakra, the third human incarnation of Jaya and Vijaya were war-crazy and haughty persons. Vinda and Anuvinda, sons of Jayasena, were great friends of the Pāṇḍavas. As Kunti, daughter of Śrī became the adopted daughter of Ugrasena, she became also the niece of Vasudeva and Kṛṣṇa’s father’s sister. Kunti married Pāṇḍu and she delivered four sons, Karṇa, Yudhīṣṭhīra, Bhīma and Arjuna.

SATYATAPAS (UTATHYA) I. A brahmin boy who was changed into a cobra by the curse of a saint called Godila. The original name of this youth was Utathya. Later he came to be known as Satyatapas. The story of this Satyatapas is given in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, as follows:-

In days of old, there was a Brahmin named Devadatta in Kosala. His wife was called Rohini. Though much time elapsed no child was born to them. At last Devadatta performed the sacrifice called Putrakāṃṣṭha on the banks of the river Tamasā. Several saintly persons took part in the sacrifice. Suhotra was detailed as Brahmana, Yājñavalkya as officiating priest, Bṛhaspati as sacrificer, Paila to recite Vedas and Godila to sing Sāman hymns. The singing of Godila, an expert singer, caused horripilation to everybody in the sacrificial hall. But in the middle of singing he had to take breath, and there occurred a solecism in his voice. Devadatta did not like it. He warned Godila, who instantly became angry and said to Devadatta. “Since you called me Cobra, the son born to you will become a cobra.”

Devadatta became miserable and begged Godila by holding his feet to pardon him. He gave liberation from the curse that his son would be a cobra and said that he would become a sage.

The wife of Devadatta became pregnant and gave birth to a son. He was named Utathya. In the eighth year, the ceremony of investiture with the Brahma string was performed and the boy commenced education. The teacher began to teach the Vedas. From that day onwards the boy became self-conceited. All the attempts made by the teacher to change his behaviour were futile. His father tried the four expedients in vain. Thus twelve years elapsed. The boy did not even learn the evening prayer. Everybody thought that he was a cobra. All scoffed at him. His own people disliked him; with this, self-renunciation took root in his boyish mind and he left his home and went away. He reached the banks of the Ganges and made a hut there and lived there observing rigorous celibacy, and vow of truth. Thus the boy-hermit began severe penance.

He had learned no rites or rituals according to the Vedas. He would rise early in the morning, and after cleaning the teeth he would take a dip in the Ganges waters, without any spells or actions and return to the hut. He would eat anything that came by. He would cause no harm to anybody, though he had no power to do good to anybody. Everybody in the neighbourhood began to realize that he was a boy who would on no account utter falsehood. So all began to call him Satyatapas. Satyatapas had no peace of mind. Life seemed to be a burden to him. He became thoughtful day and night. Thus he spent fourteen years there. People firmly believed in his truthfulness. So they named him Satyavrata. Once a forester came near his hut. He sent an arrow at a hog, which ran into the hermitage with the arrow sticking on its body. Blood was oozing from its wound. The jungle-dweller also came into the hut following the hog. Seeing Satyavrata the man asked “Where is the hog that I shot?” Satyavrata who knew that killing animals was a sin, kept silence to save the beast. Devi was pleased at the moral courage and truthfulness of Satyavrata. It is said that the moment the hog got into the hermitage, the Sārasvata syllable ‘A’ arose from the tongue of Satyavrata. The moment he had pronounced the root sound of Sarasvati, ‘A’, by the grace of Devi, he became a poet like Vālmiki. Looking at the forester Satyavrata said:

Yo brūte sa na paśyati/
Aho! vyādha, svakāryārthīn
Kam prṛchāsi punaḥ punaḥ ||

“He who sees does not speak. He who speaks, does not see. Selfish hunter, whom do you ask again and again?”

When the forester heard these words of Satyavrata, the bow and arrow fell from his hands. With self-renunciation he went away from the hermitage. The fame of the great poet Satyavrata spread everywhere. His father also heard about this from others. He came to the bank of the Ganges and took his son home. Even today Brahmins sing about the fame of that hermit on the New moon days.

SATYATAPAS II. A hermit. Once he cursed a celestial maid who had tried to hinder his penance, to SATYAVĀK II. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

SATYAVĀWA. A brother of Suārma the King of Trigarta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17).

SATYAVATI I. The mother of Vyāsa.

1) A short history. Satyavatī was the daughter of the celestial maid Adrikā. Because of a curse she lived as a fish in the river Ganges. Once the semen of King Uparicaravaasu happened to fall in the Ganges and this fish swallowed it in consequence of which it became pregnant. A fisherman caught this fish and cut it. He got two human babies, male and female from the stomach of the fish. The fisherman gave the two infants to the King who took the male child. This child later became the Matsya King. The female child had the smell of fish. The King called her Matsyagandhi (She who has the smell of fish) and gave her back to the fisherman, who took the child to his hut and brought her up as his daughter. As the child was dark in complexion the fisherman called her Kāli. Thus the girl was known by two names Kāli and Matsyagandhi. Later she got the name Satyavatī also. The fisherman was engaged in the work of ferrying people across the river. Matsyagandhi helped her father in this work. She became a full-bloomed young woman. One day the hermit Parāśara came by that way and when he saw Matsyagandhi, he fell in love with her. She ferried the hermit across the river. In the middle of the river Parāśara created an artificial fog inside which Parāśara took Matsyagandhi as his wife. From that moment Matsyagandhi became Kāstūrīgandhi (she who has the smell of Kāstūrī or musk). Kāli became pregnant and delivered instantly. Parāśara left the place after having blessed her that she would not lose her virginity. The son born to Kāli, immediately grew up to be a youth. After promising his mother that he would come to her when she thought of him, the youth went to the forest for penance. The name of the son was Kṛṣṇa. This Kṛṣṇa later became famous by the name Vyāsa. Satyavatī again engaged herself in helping her father.

One day Śantanu, a King of the lunar dynasty came to the forest for hunting. The fragrance of musk emanating from the body of Kāstūrīgandhi spread throughout the whole forest. The King walked on through the forest tracing the origin of the smell of musk and reached the fisherman’s hut. The King fell in love with Satyavatī. The King had a son named Bhīma by his first wife Gāṅā. Bhīma made it easy for the King to marry Satyavatī. Two sons Citrāṅgada and Vicitrāngirāja were born to Śantanu by his wife Satyavatī. Citrāṅgada was killed in his boyhood. Vicitrāngirāja became a youth and married Ambikā and Ambalikā, the daughters of the King of Kāśi. Vicitrāngirāja met with untimely death before a child was born to him. When Satyavatī saw that the family was about to become extinct, she thought of her son Vyāsa, who instantly arrived at the palace. From Vyāsa, Ambalikā got the son Pāṇḍu and Ambikā, the son Dhrūtarāṣṭra. Both the sons Dhrūtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu got married. Pāṇḍu died. The death of her son struck heavily at the heart of Satyavatī. She did not wish to live much longer after this. She mentioned about the fearful things yet to happen. Then taking her daughters-in-law Ambikā and Ambalikā with her, Satyavatī went to the forest to do penance and finally attained heaven. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 127). (For further details see under Adrikā, Vyāsa and Śantanu).

SATYAVATI II. The sister of Viśvāmitra. (See under Jamadagni; Para 2).

SATYAVATI III. A princess of the country of Kekeya. She was the wife of Trīśāṇkū and the mother of Hariścandra. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇāyapāthā, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 12).

SATYAVATI IV. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 15, that one Satyavatī was the wife of Nārada.

SATYAVRATA I. Another name of Trīśāṇkū. (See under Trīśāṇkū).

SATYAVRATA II. The Brahmin boy Satyatapas. (See under Satyatapas).

SATYAVRATA III. A son of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. It is seen that he was known by other names also such as Satyasena, Satyasandha, Sandha etc. (See under Satyasadha).

SATYAVRATA IV. Brother of Suārma, the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, that this cursed warrior took in vain a vow in the battle of Bhārata that he would kill Arjuna.

SATYAYUGA. Another name of Kṛṣṇayuga. (See under Kṛṣṇayuga).

SATYĀYUS. One of the six sons born to Purūrasavyūh by Urvaṣī. The six sons were Ayus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYEṢU I. Brother of Suārma the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, and Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, that this Satyeṣu was killed by Arjuna in the Bhārata-battle.

SATYEṢU II. A Rākṣasa (giant). Mention is made about this giant who had ruled over the world in ancient days and had to go, leaving this world due to fate, in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 51.

SATYEYU. A King born in the dynasty of King Puru. This Satyeṣu was one of the ten sons born to Raurakshāśva by the celestial maid Ghrātacī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

According to the statement that occurs in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 94, the father of Satyeṣu was Raudrāśva and mother, Miśrakeśī. The son Satyeyu was born to Raudrāśva by the celestial maid Miśrakeśī.

SAUBALA. A Vaiśya. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2, that King Dhṛtarāṣṭra had two wives, one a Kṣatriya woman, named Gándhari, the daughter of the King of Gándhāra and the other a Vaiśya woman named Sauballī, the daughter of Saubala.

SAUBHA. The aerial chariot or Vimāna of the King of Sālva. This was also called Saubhanagara. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Sālva, this Vimāna was smashed by the power of his weapon, the Cakra (Discus). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 33).

SAUBHADRATIRTHA. A holy place on the coast of the southern sea. (For further details see under Padmatirtha and Vargā).

SAUBHĀGYAGAURI. A particular kind of image of Devī Pārvatī. When the image of this goddess Pārvatī is fixed and consecrated as having the posture with one of the left hands touching the head and shoulder and the other hand holding a mirror, one of the right hands holding fruit and the other one being held high, it is called Saubhāgyagaurī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

SAUBHĀGYASUNDARI. A feminine form of Nārada. (See under Tāladhvāja I).

SAUBHAPATI. The King Sālva. As he had been in possession of an aerial chariot called Saubha, he is said to have got this name.

SAUBHARA. A fire. This agni (fire) was born from a portion of Varcas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 6).

SAUBHARI I. A hermit who had performed penance, sitting on the banks of the river Kālindī. (For detailed story see under Garuḍa, para 11).

SAUBHARI II. A hermit who had put up his hermitage on the Vindhya. At the time of the horse-sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, Arjuna called on this hermit Saubhari. On that occasion the hermit told Arjuna about the previous history of Cāṇḍi, who had been cursed by the hermit Uddālaka. It is mentioned in Jāmiini Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 96, that Arjuna later redeemed Cāṇḍi from the curse.

SAUBHARI III. A hermit famous in the Purāṇas. A Purānic story about this hermit’s marrying the fifty daughters of Māndhātā is given below.

Saubhari saw two fishes engaged in coition, while he was doing penance on the banks of the Yamunā. This sight aroused matrimonial thoughts in the hermit’s mind. He instantly approached Māndhātā and informed him of his desire to marry a princess. Māndhātā did not like to give his daughter in marriage to the old hermit. Concealing his thought, he told the hermit as follows:— “Out of my fifty daughters, she who wishes to be your wife, shall be given to you.”

Saubhari, who had already read the thought of Māndhātā entered the harem in the shape of a handsome young youth, and all the fifty damsels liked him. Thus Saubhari married all of them, and begot hundred sons of each of them.

This matrimonial life lasted for some time. At last the hermit grew weary of this life. Discarding everything, Saubhari went to the forest. His wives, who also had become disinterested in worldly enjoyment, followed him. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 2, 3; Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa 262; Garuḍa Purāṇa, 1, 138).

SAUDASA. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was known by the name Kālmāsapāda also. (For details see under Kālmāsapāda).

SAUGANDHIKA. A flower-garden of Kubera. It is assumed that Vāyu (the wind-god) carried fragrance from this garden and remained in the palace of Kubera, praising him. This garden was full of sweet-scented lotus (Saugandhika-flower). (M.B. Saḥbhā Parva, Chapter 10).

SAUGANDHIKAVANA. A holy place. It is assumed, that the gods such as Brahma and others, hermits, Siddhas, Gāraṇas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras, Big Nāgas, and so on dwell in this place. All the sins of a man are washed away, the moment he visits this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 4).

SAUHRDA. An ancient country in South India, famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 59).

SAUMADATTI. Bhūriśravas the son of Somadatta. (See under Bhūriśravas).

SAUMANASA I. One of the eight elephants supporting the globe. (See under Aṣṭadigajas).

SAUMANASA II. The peak of a mountain. It was on this golden peak, with a girth of one yojana and an elevation of ten yojanas, that Bhagavān Viṣṇu placed the first of his three steps during the incarnation as Vāmaṇa, the second step on the peak of Meru and the third on the head of Mahābali.

“There is a golden peak called Saumanas, with a girth of one yojana and a height of ten yojanas. It is said that in days of yore Mahāvisuṇ placed the first of his three steps on this peak the second being on the peak of Meru.” Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa. Kiṣkindhā kānda, Sarga 40).

SAUMYAKŚADVIPA. An island famous in the Purāṇas (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātyapātha, Saḥbhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SAUNAKA I.

1) General. A renowned ācārya. He is believed to be the author of the famous works — “Rgveda Anukramani”, “Aranyaka”, “Rkprātiśākhya”, etc.

The famous Āśvalāyaṇācārya was Saunaka’s disciple. Ācāryas like Kātyāyana, Patañjali and Vyāsa belonged to his class. Saunaka’s real name was “Grīsamāda”. It was because he was the son of Śunaka that he got the name “Saunaka”.

2) Birth. Saunahotra, the son of the sage Śunahotra, once performed a yāga. Indra attended that yāga. At that time Saunahotra rescued Indra from an attack of the Asuras. Indra who was pleased at this, blessed Saunahotra that he would be born in his next birth in the Bhrigu family under the name “Saunaka”.

3) Genealogy. In Vāyu Purāṇa his genealogy is given in two forms.

i) Ruru (Pramad VARA) - Śunaka - Saunaka - Ugraśravas
ii) Dharmavṛddha - Śunahotra - Grīsamāda - Śunaka - Saunaka. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 92, 26).

4) Important works. Saunaka is believed to be the author of numerous works. The most important of them are given below:—

(1) Rkprātiśākhya
(2) Rgvedacchandānukramani
(3) Rgvedarsyanukramani
(4) Rgveda Anuvākānukramani
(5) Rgvedaśīkānukramani
(6) Rgvedakathānu-
SAUVIRA. An ancient country near the river Sindhu.
It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, that during the period of Mahābhārata, the King of this country was killed by Arjuna.
SAUVIRI. The wife of King Manasyu, the son of Pravira and the grandson of emperor Puru. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 5).

SAVANA. I.
1) General. Son of Priyavrata who was the son of Śvayambhuva Manu, by his wife, Surūpā. Surūpā had ten sons including Savana. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

2) Birth of son. Savana married Suvedā, daughter of Sunābhā; but he expired before children were born to him. According to the Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72, seven children were born from the dead Savana. The story about it is as follows:
Suvedā, heart-broken at the death of Savana, did not permit the dead body to be burnt, herself holding it in embrace. Then a celestial voice said to her: “Cry not. If you are really chaste and true, enter the funeral pyre along with your husband.” To this Suvedā answered thus: “I cry because of grief that he died before making me the mother of a son.” The celestial voice said to her again: “You enter the pyre without weeping. Your husband will have seven sons.”
Suvedā now permitted her dead husband to be cremated and meditating upon her chastity she jumped into the funeral pyre. But within minutes Savana came alive out of the fire with his wife and rose to the sky with her. He stayed in the sky for another five days and on the sixth day had the sexual act again with her. His semen dropped on earth from the sky. The King then with his wife went to Brahmaloka.

Samādā, Narī, Pusyati, Citrā, Viśālā, Haritā and Alinī, all of them wives of muni saw the semen in the sky and when it fell into the water they thought it was amṛta, which conferred eternal youth, and with the permission of their husbands swallowed it. As soon as they swallowed it their divine effulgence was diminished and their husbands, therefore, abandoned them.
Those women delivered seven children, who cried fiercely and that sound filled the entire universe. Then Brahmā appeared and asked the children not to cry and also told them that they would come to be called Maruts. Brahmā himself called them Maruts. They were the Maruts of the first Śvayambhuva Manvantara.

SAVANA II. One of the seven sons of Bhrgumuni, the other six being Cīvana, Vajraśīra, Śuci, Āurva, Śukra and Vibhū. They are called Varuṇaś also.
(Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129).

SĀVANTA. A King born in the dynasty of emperor Pṛthu. He was the son of Yuvanāśa and father of Bṛhadāśva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

SAVARNĀ. Wife of the muni called Pracinābarhis.
Savārṇā was the daughter of Samudra (ocean). (Viśu-Puṇa, Part I, Chapter 14). The couple had ten sons called the Pracetases, and they were very efficient in Dhanurveda. All of them engaged themselves in observing the same dhāma (duty) and did tapas for 10,000 years under the sea. (For details see under Pracinābarhis).

SĀVARNĀ I. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).
SĀVITRĪ I

1) General information. The daughter of the Sun. This Sāvitrī is the elder sister of Tapāti. Brah mã married these sisters. It is stated in some Purāṇas that Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī, Sarasvatī all these are one and the same. But there is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Śṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, Chapter 17, stating that Brah mã once went to Gāyatrī in the absence of Sāvitrī, who got angry at this and cursed all the Gods.

Once Brah mã went to Puṣkara to perform a sacrifice. Śiva, Viṣṇu and all the hermits came there. Everything was ready for the sacrifice according to convention. But Sāvitrī, who had been engaged in household duties had not yet arrived. So a priest was sent to bring her. Sāvitrī said to the priest, “I have not finished dressing. There are so many things to be done here. Moreover, Lakṣmī, Bhavānī, Gaṅgā, Śvāhā, Indrāṇī, celestial women, wives of Śris (hermits), none of these have arrived yet. How can I enter the hall as the only woman?” The priest returned and reported that it was not convenient for Sāvitrī to come just then, as she had so much work to do. Brah mã became angry and said to Indra, “Lord Indra, it is up to you to bring me a wife from wherever you like. But it must be done instantly.” Hearing the order of Brah mã, Indra selected Gāyatrī who was a good-natured damsel of a cowherd’s family, and brought her to the sacrificial dais. With the blessings of the hermits and gods, Brah mã held her hand and acknowledged her as his wife.

Sāvitrī dressed well, adorned herself with ornaments and reached the sacrificial hall. She saw the marriage scene and became furious. Everybody in the hall held their breath, thinking of the approaching danger. Trembling with anger Sāvitrī said “Lo; Brah mã, how is it that you have committed this sin? Have you not married me with fire as witness? I am your wife. Are you not ashamed of this?” The three godheads shivered with fear. Sāvitrī cursed everybody. The curse given to Brah mã was that no body should worship him on any other day except the month of Kārttika in the year. She cursed Indra that enemies would enter the world of gods and would make Indra their captive. Sāvitrī cried out that Viṣṇu would take the birth of man by the curse of Bhrigu. She cursed Śiva that he would lose his manliness. She gave Agni the curse that he would eat anything and everything without the discrimination of purity or impurity. She cursed the Brahmins that they would, in future perform sacrifice merely with a view to obtain gifts and that they would be wandering about from temple to temple and from tirtha to tirtha merely for gain.”

Uttering these words of curse, Sāvitrī left the sacrificial hall. Lakṣmī and some other goddesses followed her a little while. Then they begged for permission to return. Sāvitrī said to them, “Lakṣmī! You are leaving me. Is it not so? Right. Hereafter you shall be permanent nowhere. May you become the companion of the wicked, the warring, the low-minded, the sinner, the cruel, the foolish etc. Indrāṇī also wants to return. Hear this: Indra will kill Viṣṇu and incur the sin of Brah mãhātyā and at that time Nāhuṣa will capture heaven. Then Nāhuṣa will abuse you.”

Looking at the celestial women who were going to the sacrificial hall, Sāvitrī said; Look, Ye celestial women. None of you will give birth to child and you will not enjoy the pleasure of nurturing a child.” Saying these words Sāvitrī left the hall. Not knowing what to do, all sat there. Instantly Gāyatrī rose up and looking at everybody, said as a remission of curses: “I shall remit all curses. Those who worship Brah mã, will be blessed with the pleasure of wife and children and wealth and they will unite with Brah mã. Even if Indra is taken captive, he will be made free by his son and will become the king of heaven. Viṣṇu will rescue his wife and kill the enemy. The phallos will be worshipped in all the worlds. As Brah mins are the gods on earth the gift you take, will be considered your dues. Lakṣmī! You need not worry. Everybody will worship you. He whom you favour will become a well-to-do person and he whom you forsake will become miserable. You Indrāṇī! Because of Nāhuṣa’s arrogance Agastya will change him to a big python and he will fall to the earth. The celestial maids will have no desire for children. So childlessness will not make you miserable.” By these words of blessings of Gāyatrī, everybody in the sacrificial hall was pacified.

2. Other details.

(i) Sāvitrī shines in the palace of Brah mã. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 34).

(ii) Sāvitrī is the sovereign deity of the mantra Gāyatrī. This goddess Sāvitrī rose up from the sacrificial fire of King Āśvapati and gave him a boon, and accordingly a daughter named Sāvitrī was born to the King. This princess was Sāvitrī the wife of Satyavan. (M.B. Vāna Parva, Chapter 290).

(iii) Siva, on starting for Tripuradāhana (the burning of Tripuras), placed Sāvitrī as the bridles of his horses. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 75).

(iv) Once Jāpaka Brah mín worshipped Devi Sāvitrī, who appeared before him and gave him boons. As the Brah mín was engaged in deep meditation and prayer, he did not see the Devi when she appeared. It was due to this piety that the Brahmin was given boons. (M.B Sānti Parva, Chapter 199).

(v) Once Devī Sāvitrī appeared before Satya, a brahmin of Vidarbha. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 11).

(vi) Once Devī Sāvitrī praised the giving of rice as alms. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

SĀVITRĪ II. A hand-maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 49).

SĀVITRĪ III. A Sāvitrī who was the wife of a king and a righteous woman is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 24. This Sāvitrī gave two ear-rings as alms and attained heaven.

SĀVITRĪ IV. The wife of Satyavān.

1) Birth. In the country of Madra, famous in the Purāṇas, there was a king named Asvapati. His wife was Mālatī. Though the couple grew old they were childless. At last they worshipped Devī Sāvitrī. After vows and prayers for eighteen years the Devi appeared before them, and giving them the boon that a daughter would be born to them, she disappeared. The couple returned to the palace and Mālatī conceived and delivered a daughter whom they named Sāvitrī. (Skandha 9, Devī Bhāgavata; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 293).

2) Marriage. Sāvitrī grew up as though Lākṣmī had taken an incarnation and bloomed into a beautiful damsel. But nobody came forward to marry her. On a New moon day she bathed and purified herself and getting the blessings of Brahmīn, came and bowed before her father. The King felt sorry as nobody had offered to marry her though she was in the full bloom of youth. He advised her to travel in the outside world and to select a husband by herself. According to the order of her father she took the aged ministers of the King and travelled through the forests in which hermits lived.

Once Nārada came to the palace and while he was talking with King Aśvapati, Sāvitrī and the aged ministers returned. She bowed before her father and Nārada. As soon as Nārada saw her, he asked with curiosity about her marriage. The father replied that he had sent her in search of a husband. Sāvitrī said “I have accepted the Prince Satyavān as my husband. He is the son of King Dyumatsena of Śālva. Dyumatsena became blind in his old age, and taking this opportunity his enemies captured his country. Dyumatsena with his wife and son went to the forest and lived there.”

Nārada described the qualities of Satyavān. “Satyavān is as radiant as the sun, as intelligent as Bṛhaspati, as valiant as Indra and as patient as the Earth. Aśvapati was immensely pleased at hearing about the good qualities of Satyavān, and asked Nārada, if there was anything to say against him. Nārada said that he had nothing to say against Satyavān except that he would die “within one year from this date.” (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 294).

The King felt miserable when he heard this. Sāvitrī said that she had accepted Satyavān as her husband and that nothing could make her waver from her decision even if he is not going to live more than a year. The King agreed to the wish of his daughter and preparations for the marriage were begun. The King went with Sāvitrī to the forest and saw Dyumatsena who gladly consented to the marriage. Aśvapati returned to the palace leaving Sāvitrī with Satyavān and his parents. As soon as Aśvapati had returned, Sāvitrī discarded her ornaments and assumed the dress suitable to life in the forest and lived with them.

3) The death of Satyavān. It was nearly a year and the day of death of Satyavān was fast approaching. There were only four days more. Sāvitrī had taken a vow lasting for three days. Dyumatsena dissuaded her from taking fast. She completed the fast. There was left only one night more. She kept awake for the whole night. Morning came. Though she ended her fast she had not taken any food. Dyumatsena wanted to know the reason. She humbly said that she would eat only after sun-set.

As usual Satyavān took his axe and started for the wood. Sāvitrī also followed him.

Satyavān:— “You have never accompanied me before. Moreover you are very weak on account of the fast. Then how can you come with me?”

Sāvitrī:— “I am not at all weak by the fast and vow. I want to come with you. I pray, don’t hinder me.”

At last Satyavān consented after getting the permission of his parents. Both went to the forest to gather fruits and roots. They gathered fruits and roots. Then Satyavān began to cut wood. By that exertion Satyavān sweated all over. He was affected by headache. “Let me lie down!” He said. The axe fell from his hand. Sāvitrī caught her husband who was falling down and laid him on her lap. Sāvitrī saw a person clad in blood-coloured garments, with red eyes and a rope in hand, coming towards them. He came to the spot and stood there looking at the body of Satyavān. Realizing the person to be Kāla (Deathgod) Sāvitrī stood up instantly and bowed before him.

Sāvitrī:— “Who are you Lord. What may be your object in coming here?”

Yama:— “Hei, Sāvitrī. As you are a hermitess of chastity I may converse with you. I am Yama. I am come to take away the life of your husband.”

Sāvitrī:— “Lord, I have heard that your messengers come and take away the souls. How is it that you have come in person today?”

Yama:— “This Satyavān is a righteous man who is an ocean of good qualities. Messengers are not sent, in the cases of persons like him.”

Saying thus Yama cast his rope and caught the soul of Satyavān. Sāvitrī saw the body of her husband lying without life and soul. Sāvitrī followed Yama who had gone to the south with the soul of Satyavān.

Yama:— Child, you go back and conduct his funerals. You have followed your husband as far as you can.

Sāvitrī:— I am coming to the place where my husband is being taken. That is the duty of a wife. What impediment is there on my way to follow you, when I have the merits of vow, fast, devotion to my elders, love and regard for my husband and the good will of yourself, my Lord.”

When Yama realized that it was difficult to send Sāvitrī back, he asked Sāvitrī to ask for any boon. Yama was prepared to give anything except the life of Satyavān. She requested for the recovery of sight by Dyumatsena. Yama granted it. Still Sāvitrī did not turn back. Yama asked her to pray for one more boon. She request for the recovery of the lost kingdom of Duryodanasa. Yama sanctioned that request also. Still she followed Yama, who was ready to grant her a third boon. She requested: "My father may, please be given a hundred sons who would continue the family. Yama granted that too. But she did not turn back. Yama told her that she might ask for a fourth boon. She said: "I may be given a hundred sons born directly from Satyavān. Yama granted this fourth boon also. Then Sāvitrī asked Yama how the boon would be realized unless the life of Satyavān was given back to him. Yama was pleased with her at her love and devotion for her husband and returned the life of Satyavān. Yama blessed her that she and Satyavān would live for hundred years.

Yama disappeared. Sāvitrī returned and sat there taking the body of Satyavān on her lap. Satyavān came to life. Both of them rose up. Night came on. It was dark. They could not find the way. Satyavān wanted to reach their hermitage somehow. Sāvitrī took the axe and supporting her husband in the dim moon light, walked to the hermitage.

Duryodanasa got sight. He started with his wife in search of his children, and walked about in the forest. At last all of them met together. They reached home. Then Sāvitrī told them all that had happened. Everyone was delighted. Then some people from Sālva came to the hermitage. They said that the minister had killed the King, that the people had expelled the minister, and that they had come to request Duryodanasa to return to his country and to resume the reign. Accordingly all of them returned to Sālva. Duryodanasa was anointed as the King of Sālva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 293 to 299).

SAYYA. A son of Aṅgiras, Sayya is actually Indra himself. The story is that Aṅgiras began worshipping the Devataś for a son equal to Indra and that Indra, thinking that there should not be another person equal to him, got himself born as the son of Aṅgiras. That son is Sayya. (Ṛgveda, Manḍala I, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

SAYYASĀCI. Another name of Arjuna. (Viraṭa Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 19).

SAYYASIVYA. One of the sons of Vipracitti by Sinighikā. This asura was killed by Parasurāma. (Brahmāṇda Purāṇa, 3.6. 18-20).

SAYAŚMAHISVADEVA. The sacrificial offering given by the wife with the food prepared in the evening without any spell or incantation, is called Sayaśmaīśvadeva. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 3, 121).

SAYAṆA. A hermit who was an expounder of the Vedas. In course of time, due to the differences in languages and grammar, the Vedas became difficult to be grasped. It was Yāśka and SayaṆa who saved the Indians from this difficulty. For the Vedas to be grasped easily, Yāśka made the Nirukta (Etymology) and SayaṆa wrote the book Vedārthapraṇāśa.

SAYU. A maharṣi. (Ṛgveda, Manḍala I, Anuvāka 112, Sūkta 16).

SECAKA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dīḍrtaśrātra. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of the serpent-sacrifice of Janaśmeyāra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

SEDUKA. An ancient King in India. Once some brahmins approached this heroic King who was versed in the art of wielding weapons, for Dakṣinā to their teacher. But Seduca directed them to King Vṛṣaśravas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 4).

SEKASA. A ancient country in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 9, that this country was conquered by Sahadeva during his regional conquest of the south.

SENA. Son of King Rṣabha. It is mentioned in Bhāga-vata, Skandha 5 that this king had nineteen sons including Sena.

SENAINDU I.

1) General information. A Kṣatriya King who lived in the age of the Purāṇas. This King was born from a portion of an asura called Tuhunḍa. (Mahābhārata Adī Parva, Chapter 67).

2) Other details.

(i) Senābindu was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 9).

(ii) Arjuna, during his regional conquest of the north, with the King of Ulūka had attacked this King who lost his kingdom. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

(iii) The Pāṇḍavas had invited this King to take part in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Udhyog Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

(iv) It is said that Senābindu was known by another name Krodhaḥananta. He was as valiant as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bhīmasena. (M.B. Udhyog Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 20).

(v) He was killed in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6 Verse 32).

SENAINDU II. A warrior of Pāṇcāla who had taken part in the battle of Bhārata on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Karna killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 15).

SENAČITTA. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. This King was the son of Viśada and the father of Ruciraśva. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SENAJIT I. A King who lived in the period of Mahābhārata. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13 that the Pāṇḍavas had decided to send a letter of invitation to this King, for the battle of Bhārata.

SENAJIT II. A King. He lived in tears because of the loss of his son. At last by the advice of a brahmin he got peace of mind. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 25 and 179).

SENAJIT III. A King who was the son of King Viśada and the father of Ruciraśva. Besides Ruciraśva Senajit had three more sons named Dṛḍhaḥanu, Kaśyapa and Vatsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

This King is mentioned as the son of King Viśvajit in Viṣṇu Purāṇa and Vāyu Purāṇa and as the son of Aśvajit in Matsya Purāṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 26, that this King had written a treatise on justice (duties of a King).

SENAMUKHA. A division of an army. (See under Aksauhini).

SENĀNĪ (SENĀPATI). One of the hundred sons of Dīḍrtaśrātra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 32).

SENOĐYOGAPARVA. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata. This sub-section comprises Chapters 1 to 19 of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata, (x) The people of the country in earlier days were illiterate and ignorant. (Karna Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 34).

SIHI III. A King born in the dynasty of Usinara. He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. He fought on the side of the Pandavas in the great war and was killed by Drona. (Drona Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 19). King Sibi had four sons Bhadra, Suvira, Kekaya and Vyasadarbha. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha).

SIHI IV. An Indra. There were four sects of Devas called Suparas, Haris, Satyas and Sudhis in Tamas Manvantara, and there were twenty-seven Devas in each Sect. Sibi, who performed hundred yajnas then was Indra. (For details see under Manvantaram).

SIHI V. An ancient Rajarsi.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visvputru:—

Sibi was born to Usinara of Madhavi, daughter of Yayati.

2) Suhrotra made to give way. King Suhrottra of Kurus dynasty once on his return from a visit of maharshis saw King Sibi coming in the opposite direction in his chariot, and both the Kings saluted each other as their age ordained. But, they did not give passage to each other as they thought themselves to be equal in merit. At that time Narada came there and asked the kings why they stood there thus blocking the path. They answered Narada thus: “He who is more noble or clever on account of former actions etc. is usually given way to by the other person. Both of us are comrades and are equals.”

Narada then spoke as follows:—
“Oh! King of the Kuru dynasty! You are cruel to the gentle and gentle to the cruel. To the evil you are good; then why not be good to the good. Devas have ordered that he who does good will get it hundred-fold by return. King Usanara is more noble and gentle than you are. The miser is won over by liberality, the liar by truth, the cruel by patience and the evil person by good. But, both of you Kings are noble persons. Therefore, one of you should give way to the other.”

Listening to Narada’s advice, Suhrottra gave way to Sibi and proceeded on his way. (Vana Parva, Chapter 194).

3) Sibi tested. Sibi’s fame spread in the three worlds, and an idea was mooted among the Devas that it should be tested how much of the reputation of the King was genuine. Accordingly, Agni in the form of a dove and Indra in that of a kite hunting after the dove, rushed to King Sibi. The dove took refuge in the lap of the King sitting in ‘divya’ posture, and the priest told the King that it was the latter’s duty to protect the dove, which took refuge with him for its life. The dove also told the King thus: “I am really a muni, who has entered the body of the dove. I take refuge in you for my life.”

By that time the kite too, had flown up to the King. It asked the King to return the dove, which it had been chasing. The King was surprised to hear the kite talk and told the bird that it was not proper for him to give up the dove who had sought refuge under him, but that he would give the kite any other flesh in lieu of the dove. The kite replied as follows: “You must give me flesh cut from your right thigh equal in weight to that of the dove. If you do so, the dove will be saved and you will be praised by people.”

Accordingly, the King cut a piece of flesh from his right thigh and weighed it in the balance against the dove. But, the dove weighed more. The King cut more flesh from his thigh and weighed, but the dove still weighed more. Thus, by instalments the King cut his whole body and weighed the flesh against the dove, yet it weighed more. Then the King himself sat in the balance, seeing which the kite flew away. Then the dove assumed its original form and told the King that it was Agni and the kite, Indra. The Devas were greatly pleased with the firm sense of sacrifice of the King; they blessed him and told him that a son called Kapotaromā will be born to him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 197).

4) Other information.
(i) When Yayātī fell down on earth from heaven, Śibi promised to transfer to him the merits acquired by him (Śibi). (Ādi Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 3).
(ii) Śibi worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10).
(iii) Śibi too was present in the company of Indra to witness the fight between Arjuna and Droṇa in the battle between King Viṁśata and Kauvaras at the Viṁśata city in connection with the lifting of Viṁśata’s cow by the Kauvaras. (Viṁśata Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).
(iv) Śibi loved Indra very much. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 7).
(v) People of the Yadu dynasty presented Śibi a sword. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 89).
(vi) He gifted away his son to the brahmins, and therefore he attained heaven. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 19; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 4).
(vii) He did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 61).

5) Conclusion. The story of two Kings connected with the episode of the dove and the kite is mentioned in the Mahābhārata. One of the Kings is Śibi and the other Uśīnara, father of Śibi. (See under Uśīnara).

SIDDHA I. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Prādāh. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

SIDDHA II (THE SIDDHAS). A group of Devas. The group of devas called Siddhas lived on the Himālayas near the hermitage of Kaṇva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 15). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 29, that this group of Gods stay in the palace of Yamas serving him.

SIDDHA. The Devī (goddess) consecrated in Rambhāvana, wearing a water-vessel with a snout, rosary, boon, and fire, is called Siddhā. (See under Devī).

SIDDHAGRAHA. An evil spirit. Those who are cursed by the group of devas called Siddhas are afflicted by this spirit and they become maniacs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 49).

SIDDHAPĀTRA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

SIDDHARśTHA I. A King. This King was the rebirth of the asura Krodhavaṣa. (Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

SIDDHARśTHA II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 64).

SIDDHARśTHA III. The name of Buddha in his childhood. (See under Buddha).

SIDDHARśTHA IV. A minister of King Daśaratha. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Ayodhya Kānda, Sarga 36).

SIDDHāŚRAMA. A hermitage. The place at which Vāmantha thrust Mahābalī down to Pātāla. This place became a hermitage later. When Viśvāmitra took Śrī Rāma and Lākṣmana to the forest for the protection of his sacrifice, he showed them this hermitage. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Bālākānda, Sarga 29, Verse 22).

SIDDHI I. A daughter of Daksā. Thirteen daughters including Siddhi were married by Dharmadeva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arṇa 1, Chapter 7).

SIDDHI II. A goddess. Kuntī the mother of the Pāṇḍavas was the human rebirth of this goddess. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 120). This goddess Siddhi had walked in front of the army of Subrahmanya, in the great battle between the Devas and the asuras. To attain the object in any matter, the blessing of this goddess is essential. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 64).

SIDDHI III. The son of an Agni (fire) named Viṁśa. Siddhi was born to this Viṁśa by his wife Sarayū. The story stating how this agni once screenred the sun by his radiance, occurs in Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 218.

SĪGRĀGA. One of the sons of Sampāti. (Matsya Purāṇa, 6, 35).

SĪGRU. A particular caste of people. In the Dāsarājna war they fought against Sudās and got themselves defeated. (Rgveda, 7-18-19).

SIKATA. An ancient hermit. When the Bhārata-battle was going on this hermit approached Droṇa and requested him to stop the battle forthwith. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 34).

SIKATĀKṢA. A holy place. Once Yudhiṣṭhīra visited this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 12).

SIKHANDĀM. Things which were born from the blood of Viṁśa and which Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are forbidden from eating. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 282, 60).

SIKHANDĪ (SIKHANDĪNĪ I). Rebirth of Ambā, daughter of the king of Kaṇi. Ambā ended her life with the vow that she would take revenge on Bhīṣma and was born in the next life as the daughter of king Dragupa under the name Śīkhandī, and Śīkhandīni helped Arjuna in the war at Kurukṣetra to kill Bhīṣma. (For the history of Ambā ending in two lives see under Ambā. Certain pieces of information not included under that head are given below).

(1) Śīkhandīni was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu in the city of Upalavaya. (Viṁśa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 17).

(2) Śīkhandī learned archery at the feet of Droṇācārya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 60).

(3) On the first day of the great war a duel was fought between Śīkhandī and Aśvatthāmā. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

(4) Śīkhandī retreated from battle-field in fear of Droṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 31).

ŚIṆḌHĪVĀṆA. A king, who ruled over Mālava during the first Dvāparayuga in the seventh Manvantara. Cūḍālā, daughter of the king of Saurashtra was ŚiṅdhihvāṆa’s wife. The Jñānāvāśiśṭham contains a story about how the royal couple renounced all attachments in life as the result of intense tapas.

ŚiṅdhihvāṆa and Cūḍālā began practising jñānayoga (communion through knowledge). It was Cūḍālā, who gained Siddhis first. Though the king was pleased with the achievements of his wife he felt sorry about his failure or drawbacks. Cūḍālā had attained the Siddhi to travel even in air. Though she told her husband emphatically that he could practise jñānayoga living in the palace itself, he quitted the city for the forest and began performing tapas there. Then on one day, she went to the presence of the king in the forest in the guise of a brahmin boy and stood there without touching the earth with his feet. The king treated the boy with honour and respect taking him for some Deva. Then she revealed her actual form, and the king agreed to return with her to the palace and practise jñānayoga there. At that juncture Cūḍālā created by her soul-power celestial women like Urvasī and also Indra and lined them up before her husband. This was to test whether the king yielded to any of the temptations by the celestial women or by Indra and Cūḍālā returned with the king to the kingdom.

ŚIṆḌAYAṆA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 76).

ŚILA. Daughter of Dharmārṣa. She was wedded by Marici mahārāṣṭra. For some reason the mahārāṣṭra cursed her and she was transformed into a stone in the Gayā temple. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 108).

ŚĪLĀVATI A heroine reputed for her chastity and fidelity to her husband. Her husband, Ugrāravas was cruel and vicious. Yet Śīlāvati used to adore him. Once Ugrāravas fell a victim to the disease of leprosy. From that time, Śīlāvati used to go about begging in the houses of Brāhmaṇas to feed and support her husband. After some time by her constant nursing, his condition was slightly improved. After that she continued her begging from door to door, carrying him on her shoulders. Once they happened to arrive in front of a huge mansion. Water was flowing in front of the gate and so Śīlāvati returned from there with her husband without stepping into the water. When they reached home, Ugrāravas asked his wife why she returned without entering the mansion. She explained that it was the house of a prostitute and to touch the water coming out of that house was sin. On hearing it, Ugrāravas felt an irresistible desire to visit that brothel. He expressed his desire to her. Quite obediently Śīlāvati took up her husband on her shoulders and went to the prostitute’s house. (For more details see under Aṇī māṇḍavaya, Anasūyā and Atri).

ŚĪLĀṆṆAṆ A Vedāntist son of Visvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ŚILĪ A nāga born in the Taṅkāka dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

2) Other details.

   (i) Drṣyaṅdrṣyā is another name of Sīnivalī. Her body is small. So sometimes she can be seen and sometimes she cannot be seen. It is in this meaning that she gets the name Drṣyaṅdrṣyā (seen and unseen). Śīva bears her in his forehead. So she has another name Rudrasūtā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 5).

   (ii) Śīva used Sīnivalī as the yoke of the horses of his chariot in the battle with Tripuras. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 32).

   (iii) At the time of his birth Sīnivalī had come to see the child Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

   (iv) It is mentioned in Atharva Veda that Sīnivalī is a wife of Mahāvaśīṣu.

SINIVALI II. A daughter born to Brhaspati by his wife Subhā. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 90, that though Sīnivalī was given in marriage to Prajāpati Kardama, she abandoned him and lived with Soma (Moon).

ŚIPA. A river extolled in Rgveda. It is stated in Sūkta 104, Anuvāka 15, Madāla 1 of the Rgveda that the asura named Kuyava should be thrown into the depths of Śipaḥ as he stole mony.

ŚRADHVAJA. Janaka the father of Sitā. (For further details see under Janaka).

ŚIRIṢAKA. A nāga born in Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 14).

ŚIRIṢI. A Vedāntist son of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

ŚIRKALI. A sacred place in South India. Brahmapura is another name for this place which is near Kumbhakonam in Tanjore District. The place was sanctified by the birth of Tirukāṇṭānāsambhandhar. (For further details see under Tirukāṇṭānāsambhandhar).

ŚISIRA. Son of Soma the Vasu, of his wife Manoharā. To the couple were born four sons called Varcas, Prāṇa, Ramaṇa and Śiśira. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 22).

ŚISIRAPARVATA. A mountain near Mount Meru. (See under Mahāmeru).

ŚISTA. Dhrūva's son by Dhanā. Śista married Succhāyā, daughter of Agni. Four sons, Kṛpā, Rīpa and Vṛkṣa were born to them. (Matsya Purāṇa, 4, 38).

ŚİSTI. A son of Dhrūva. Dhrūva had two sons, Śiṣti and Bhavya, by his wife Sambhu. Śiṣti's wife, Succhāyā gave birth to five sons, namely, Rīpa, Rīpṛuṭtiya, Vṛtta and Vṛkṣa were born to them. (Matsya Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 13).

ŚISU. A son born to the Saptāmātras due to the blessing of Subrahmaṇya. The eyes of the child were blood-red. It was called Virāṣṭaka as well. (Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Verse 11).

SIŠUMĀRA I. A Rṣi. This Rṣi used to live in water in the form of a crocodile. There is a story about him in the Pañcavimsṭha Brāhmaṇa.

Once all the Rṣis joined together in praising Indra. Sīṣumāra alone remained silent without taking part in it. Seeing this, Devendra ordered Sīṣumāra to praise him. The sage answered proudly that he had no time for it and that he would praise Indra for as much time as was needed to throw the water upwards.

Accordingly he started praising Indra. The sage to whom Indra's praise was at first disagreeable, subsequently felt that he could not do it too much. By his austerity he acquired "Sānavidyā". He even composed a "Sāma" (a hymn) in praise of Indra. In later times it became famous as "Sākarasāma".

SIŠUMĀRA II. A constellation so called because it is in the form of a Sīṣumāra (Crocodile). It is said to be the starry form of Viṣṇu. At the tail-end of it is Dhrūva, which automatically rotates and also makes planets like the Sun and the moon to rotate. Stars follow the self-rotating Dhrūva and rotate like a wheel. The Sun and the moon along with stars and planets are bound by the cord of atmosphere to Dhrūva.

The basis and support of this constellation of Sīṣumāra is Mahāvaśīṣu, who is the support of all light and effulgence. Dhrūva, son of Uttānapāda came to be installed at the tail-end of Sīṣumāra as he had worshipped Viṣṇu. Sīṣumāra is dependent upon Viṣṇu, the Lord of all, and Dhrūva is dependent upon Sīṣumāra. Śūrya is dependent on Dhrūva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 9).

SIŠUMĀRAMUKHI. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

SIṢUNĀGA. The first King of the Siṣunāga dynasty. He founded the dynasty after defeating Nandivardhana of Pradyota family, King of Magadh. Though he first belonged to KāŚi region, later on he settled down in Magadh. Kākavarṇa was Siṣunāga's son.

The following ten Kings of Siṣunāga dynasty ruled the country for 360 years. (1) Kākavarṇa (2) Kṣema-dharmā (3) Kṣema-jit (4) Vindhyasena (5) Bhūmimitra (6) Ajtāsațru (7) Varṣațaka (8) Udāsī (9) Nandivardhana (10) Mahānandī. (Matsya Purāṇa, 272, 6-17; Vāyu Purāṇa 99, 314-315).

SIṢUPĀLA. King of Cedi.

1) Previous birth. Jaya and Viva, gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha were born thrice in asura womb as a result of the curse by munis like Sanaka. They were first born as Hiranyakaṣa and Hiranyakaśipu, next as Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarna and the third time as Siṣupāla and Dantavakra. (See under Jayavijayas).

2) Birth. Siṣupāla was the son of King Damaḥoṣa of Cedi by his wife, Śrutā śravas (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He was born with three eyes and four hands, and at the time of birth he brayed like an ass, so the parents decided to abandon the ugly and awkward child. Immediately a Jin (ghost) appeared and told the father that the child would grow up to become very strong and powerful, and that only one person would be able to kill him and that person had already been born on earth. Further questioned by Siṣupāla's mother, the Jin said that as soon as the son saw the person born to kill him, he would lose his third eye, and that if he was seated on the lap of the person, two out of his four hands would be lost. After having said this the Jīn disappeared.

News about this peculiar child spread far and wide and many kings visited him. Damaghoṣa placed the child on the lap of each of them. But, no physical change occurred to him. Then one day Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra came to see the child, whose mother Śrutāśravas (she was also the sister of Kṛṣṇa's father) placed him on Kṛṣṇa's lap. Immediately two hands and the third eye of the child vanished, and with tears in her eyes the mother prayed Kṛṣṇa never to kill Śisūpāla, and Kṛṣṇa promised that he would forgive the crimes of Śisūpāla a hundred times. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 43).

3) Other information.

(i) Śisūpāla was present at the wedding of Draupadi. In his attempt to draw the bow he fell down on his knees. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 23).

(ii) He was present at the wedding of the daughter of the King of Kaliṅga also. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 6).

(iii) He was the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of Jarāsandha. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 10).

(iv) When Bhiṣma conquered all the kingdoms Śisūpāla honoured him. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 11).

(v) He too was present at the Rājasūya of Yudhīṣṭhīra. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 14).

(vi) At the Rājasūya, Kṛṣṇa heaped insulting words on Śisūpāla. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 37).

(vii) Śisūpāla objected to the selection of Kṛṣṇa as president of the Rājasūya and controversy followed it. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 11).

(viii) Śisūpāla insulted Bhiṣma at the Rājasūya. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 41).

(ix) Once in the absence of Kṛṣṇa Śisūpāla attacked Dvārakā. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 45 Verse 7).

(x) He stole the sacrificial horse of Vasudeva. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 9).

(xi) He abducted the wife of Babhrū. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).

(xii) He abducted the daughter of his uncle, the King of Viśāḷā. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 11).

(xiii) Following the above he was killed in battle by Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 45, Verse 25, Śaṅkha Parva).

(xiv) After death his effulgence got absorbed in Kṛṣṇa. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 26).

(xv) Kṛṣṇa once told Arjuna that he killed Śisūpāla for his (Arjuna's) good. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 21).

Śiṣūpālavadhaparva. A Sub-Parva of Śaṅkha Parva, Chapters 40-45.

Śiṣuromā. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Taksaka. This Nāga was burnt to death in Janamejaya's Sarpasatra. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

Sītā. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

Sītā. Wife of Śrī Rāma.

1) Who is Sītā? Sītā is the incarnation of Mahālakṣmī. Lākṣmī took the birth of a woman because of the curse of Sarasvatī. Vedavatī, Sītā, Pāñcālī, all these women of chastity were the incarnations of Lākṣmī. The stories of Lākṣmī passing from birth to birth such as Vedavatī, Tulasī, Sītā, Pāñcālī and so on until at last she reached the world of Viṣṇu, occurring in various Purāṇas are collected and given here.

Lākṣmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā were the wives of Mahāviṣṇu. One day Viṣṇu was sitting with his three wives and entertaining them with conversation when Devī Gaṅgā looked at Viṣṇu amorously. Instantly a quarrel arose among the three of them. When the row became uncontrollable, Sarasvatī cursed Lākṣmī to take birth in the earth as a plant. Gaṅgā cursed Sarasvatī and made her a river. Sarasvatī cursed Gaṅgā and made her a river. At the end of all these rows and curses Viṣṇu stood up and said to Lākṣmī. “Lākṣmī! you will take birth as the daughter of Dhārmadhavāja on the earth with the name Tulasī. In order that the curse of Sarasvatī may come true, a plant called Tulasī (holy basil) will grow up on the earth from a portion of you. While you are living as the daughter of Dhārmadhavāja, an asura named Saṅkhaṇacūḍa born from my portion will marry you.”

The curse was realized. Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā became rivers. Lākṣmī was about to be born as the daughter of Dhārmadhavāja. Who was Dhārmadhavāja? He was a man of righteous deeds and good qualities, born of the family of Daṅkṣāsāvarṇī who was born from a portion of Mahāviṣṇu. Brahmāsāvarṇī was born from Daṅkṣāsāvarṇī. Dharmasāvarṇī begot Rudrasāvarṇī, Indrasāvarṇī begot Vṛṣadhvaja. Rathadhvaja was the son of Vṛṣadhvaja. Two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuṣadhvaja were born to Rathadhvaja. Dharmadhvaja and Kuṣadhvaja were performing penance before Devī Lākṣmī to regain the wealth and prosperity lost by the curse of the Sun.

How did Dharmadhvaja and Kuṣadhvaja lose their prosperity? Their grandfather Vṛṣadhvaja was a devotee of Śiva. He performed penance before Śiva for a long time. Śiva became pleased with Vṛṣadhvaja and lived in his hermitage for the period of three Devayugas. This king Vṛṣadhvaja made a proclamation that none other than Śiva should be worshipped. As all the other gods were despised, the Sun got angry and cursed Vṛṣadhvaja. “Let the prosperity of yours and your posterity be destroyed.” Śiva did not like the action taken by the Sun against his favourite. Śiva took his trident and went against the Sun, who took refuge near his father Prajāpati Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa complained to Brahmā. Brahmā ran to Vaikuṇṭha. Śiva also came there with his trident. Viṣṇu looked at them and said “You gods, hear this. What is the need of all this hurry? Within the short time you have taken to run up to this place so many years have elapsed in the world. It is a long time since Vṛṣadhvaja died. His son Rathadhvaja also is dead. Rathadhvaja has two sons named Dhārmadhvaja and Kuṣadhvaja. They both have become Kings. But because of the curse of the Sun, they are devoid of any radiance. They are now worshiping Mahālakṣmī for radiance.” Hearing this talk of Mahāviṣṇu all of them returned to their places.

It has been mentioned that Dharmadhvaja and Kuṣadhvaja had been engaged in penance before Mahālakṣmī. Devī Mahālakṣmī appeared before them and granted their wish. Devī promised them that she would take birth as the daughter of each of them, and she would recover for them all the wealth and prosperity they had lost. Accordingly Mahālakṣmī took birth by her portion as the daughter of Mādhavi, the wife of Dharmadhvaja.
under the name Tulasī. (For the rest of the story of Tulasī see under Tulasī, Para 4). Mālavati was the wife of Kuśādhvaja. As Lakṣmī had promised to take birth as their daughter, both of them waited for the birth of the child uttering the Vedas. At this time a child was born, from the mouth of Kuśādhvaja. This child was the incarnation of Lakṣmī. With the birth of the child Kuśādhvaja regained all the wealth and prosperity he had lost. The child was named Vedavatī (Devavatī). She grew up and became a young woman. Her desire was to get Mahāviṣṇu as her husband.

One day a hermit, Padmaksa, the beautiful Lanka was attracted by the beauty of Padma. He asked Kuśādhvaja for the hand of his daughter, but Kuśādhvaja did not give his consent. Padmaksa was taken aback. He came back in the night and killed Kuśādhvaja with his sword. Hearing the sound Vedavatī woke up and saw the dead body of the sister lying in a pool of blood. She looked at Sambhu angrily. In that fierce look Sambhu was burnt to ashes.

Vedavatī began to perform very severe penance to get Viṣṇu as her husband. It was at this time that Rāvana had begun his campaign of conquest. He defeated all kings and was proceeding victoriously through the vicinity of the Himālayas, when he saw the beautiful damsel Vedavatī sitting alone and performing penance. Seeing so beautiful a girl engaged in penance, he told her that he was the famous Rāvana with ten heads and requested her to throw away the garment of bark of the tree and the matted hair and to accept him as her husband. She rejected his request. The angry Rāvana caught hold of her hand. She resisted using her teeth and finger-nails. She cried out that she wanted no more to retain the body made impure by the touch of a wicked person. She made a fire and jumped into it. Thus in the sight of Rāvana, she burnt herself to death. Before death she vowed that in the next birth Mahāviṣṇu would become her husband and would kill Rāvana.

Rāvana who himself was burning in the fire of amour, was extremely sorry at the death of the beautiful girl. He took the ashes of her to Lanka and put them in a golden box and kept the box in a solitary place. He used to visit the place daily. Since the arrival of the ashes, bad omens began to occur in Lanka. One day Nārada came to Lanka. Rāvana asked Nārada for the reason of constant occurrences of bad omens in Lanka. Nārada replied that the cause of bad omens was the golden box he was keeping and that if it was kept in Lanka any longer, it would cause destruction and that if it was destroyed, great disaster would follow. Nārada advised Rāvana to remove the box without opening it to somewhere else outside Lanka. Accordingly Rāvana caused the golden box to be dropped in the sea. By and by it came with the waves to the shore of Bhārata (India). Robbers took it and went to the north and hid it in a forest. They were not able to take it away again. Thus the box came to be deposited on the basin of a river in Mithilā.

It was this river-basin that King Janaka selected as the place for sacrifice. Being kept in this holy place, the ashes of the body of Devavatī in the box mingled with her spirit and was taking shape into a child. When the place was ploughed for preparing the spot of sacrifice, for Janaka, this golden box was discovered. The child which was inside the box, was taken home and brought up by the king who named her Sītā. It was the portion of this Sītā herself that took birth next as Pāncāli. (Devi Bhāgavata, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa)

Other versions.

(i) The King Padmakṣa performed penance before Mahāviṣṇu with a view to get Mahālakṣmī as daughter. Mahāviṣṇu gave the King a great Phallos to realize his wish. From that a beautiful girl was born. The King named her Padma. When she attained marriageable age, the King made preparations for her Svayamvara (the bride herself choosing a husband). On the day fixed for the marriage Rākṣasas came and destroyed all the preparations and killed King Padmakṣa.

Because of her sorrow at this disaster Padma jumped into the fire. The giants searched for Padma every where, but they could not find her. They returned in disappointment.

One day, during this period, Rāvana was travelling in his aerial chariot. When he reached this place, he saw Padma who had come out of the fire. Rāvana was fascinated by the beauty of Padma. So he turned towards her. Seeing this, Padma again jumped into the pile of fire for safety. Without any delay Rāvana made a search in the pile of fire. At last he got the body of Padma (Sītā) in the form of five jewels. The disappointed Rāvana placed the five jewels in a box and took it to Lanka and gave it to his wife Mandodari. One day Mandodari opened that box and saw Padma sitting in the form of a beautiful virgin. Thinking that it was not propitious to keep her who was the cause of destruction to Padmakṣa, his family and kingdom, Mandodari exerted pressure on Rāvana to cast the box out of Lanka. Rāvana with his men took the box from Lanka and buried it in Mithilā. Before the box was closed Padma cursed Rāvana. “I will come to Lanka again to kill you and your clan.”

One day when a brahmin of Mithilā was ploughing his field he got this box. Thinking that it belonged to the King, the brahmin took the box to King Janaka. The King took the child in the box and brought it up. He named the child Sītā. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa, 7-6). (ii) In Adhūta Rāmāyaṇa we see another story which is somewhat different from that we see in Ananda Rāmāyaṇa. It is given below :—

Rāvana who had become the harasser of the entire world began to harass the hermits and sages also. He used to shoot arrows at the hermits who were sitting in meditation in the forests, and taking their blood in the arrow-head, he stored it in a big pot. In the same forest a hermit named Grītāmukha was engaged in penance to get a daughter who would be equal to Lakṣmī in every way. He took milk with the head of Darbha grass and stored it daily in a pot. One day Rāvana came to his hermitage and took the pot of milk stealthily. He poured the milk into the pot in which he had stored the blood and stirring it well gave it to his wife Mandaodari. Seeing the character of her husband becoming worse and worse every day, Mandaodari became miserable. One day she decided to commit suicide and drank the contents of the pot given by Rāvana. The thing which was taken for suicide, made her pregnant. Mandaodari buried that foetus in Kurukṣetra. After a while a girl was born from it. That child was Sītā, the daughter of King Janaka.

(iii) There is a story in Devī Bhāgavata stating how Sītā was born as the daughter of Rāvana. It is as follows:

Rāvana wished to marry Mandodari, the daughter of Maya. Then Maya said to Rāvana thus: “According to the horoscope of Mandodari, the first child born to her will be the destroyer of its clan. So it would be better to kill that child.” Not acting upon the advice of Maya, Rāvana put the first child in a box and buried it in the city of King Janaka. This child was Sītā, the wife of Śrī Rāma.

2) Marriage. Sītā grew up in the palace of King Janaka, Kuśadhvaṇa the younger brother of Janaka had three daughters. They were named Māṇḍavī, Īrmoilā and Sṛutakirtī. Sītā grew up along with these three sisters. The four of them grew up as sisters and friends. Sītā grew up to be a young woman. Several young men wished to marry her. Janaka refused everyone of them. One day the princesses were playing with their maids in the garden of the harem. Sītā sat on the dais in the centre of the garden to make a flower garland. All their attempts to gather the jasmine flowers from the twigs of a large mango tree in the garden ended in failure. Sītā instantly ran to the weapon-house and taking a bow and arrow, shot down the flowers. The flowers fell down on the cloth placed on the ground without being damaged. Janaka saw the shooting of Sītā, from the palace. He was amazed at the expertise of Sītā. The bow which Sītā took was Śaivacāpa (the bow of Śiva). Śiva had used this bow, in days of old, to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa. Śiva, who was pacified by the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa and the victory over his enemies, gave this bow to his devotee, the King of Videha. That King kept the bow in his weapon-house and used to worship it. Sītā had taken that bow and shot with it.

The King who had been thinking about the marriage of Sītā thought that what he saw was a good omen. So the King made a proclamation that only he who could take the bow of Śiva, draw it, and shoot with it would become eligible to marry Sītā. Hearing this many adventurers came to the palace and tried to handle the Śaivacāpa and retreating admitting defeat. It was at this time that Viśvāmitra brought Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest for the protection of sacrifice. Hearing about the Svayaṃvara of Sītā, Viśvāmitra took the princes to the palace of Janaka. The King was greatly pleased when he learned that the princes were the sons of Daśaratha, of the solar Dynasty. Next morning, at the instruction of his elders and priests and teachers, Śrī Rāma stood on the dais in the middle of the hall, where the Śaivacāpa was placed, ready to handle it. He lifted up the bow with his left hand, drew it easily and fastened the string tightly and the bow was broken. When the Kings who were present, heard the roaring sound of the breaking of the bow, they shivered with fear as serpents at the sound of thunder. Sītā jumped with joy like a peacock. A letter was sent to Daśaratha then and there. Friends and relatives arrived. Under the guidance of the presiding priest Śatānanda, the marriage ceremony was conducted. Rāma married Sītā, Bharata married Māṇḍavī, Lakṣmaṇa married Īrmoilā, and Satrugna married Sṛutakirtī. The brides and bridegrooms went to Ayodhya with their parents and relatives. (Kambā Rāmāyaṇa, Bālālakāṇḍa).

3) Anasīyā's gift of clothes and ornaments. Daśaratha who had become old, wished to hand over the realm to Śrī Rāma. Since Kaikēyī stood as a hindrance, the kingdom fell into the hands of Bharata. Moreover Sītā had to live in the forest with Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa for fourteen years. In the early period of their forest-life they visited the hermitage of Atri. Seeing the devotion of Sītā towards her husband, Anasīyā the wife of hermit Atri, blessed her and gave her a fine garment, clothes and ornaments and cosmetics. Anasīyā blessed Sītā again and said that she would shine as Lakṣmi if she besmeared her body with the divine cosmetics. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sargass 118-120).

4) Test by Pārvati and Parameṣvara. In the last year of forest-life Pārvati and Parameṣvara tested the firmness of the love of Sītā and Rāma. (See under Rāma, Para 14).

5) Phantom Sītā. A few days before the abduction of Sītā by Rāvana, Fire god took the guise of a Brahmin and approached Śrī Rāma and said: “O, Śrī Rāma! The Devas have sent me to tell you certain things which will take place shortly. Your incarnation has the aim of killing Rāvana. Sītā is meant to be a cause for the same. The death of Rāvana is imminent. He will come and carry Sītā away. So entrust Sītā with me. I will keep her carefully. Make a phantom (Māyā) Sītā and keep her here, instead of the real Sītādevī. After the killing of Rāvana, when Sītā enters Fire as a proof of her purity, I will return Devi Sītā.” Śrī Rāma agreed to it. Fire god by his power of contemplation, created a phantom Sītā, exactly like the real Sītā in shape and figure and nature and placing her beside Rāma, he disappeared with the real Sītā. Even Lakṣmaṇa was not aware of this fact. The real Sītā Devī was under the care of Fire god till the moment of the test of chastity of Sītā by fire, after the killing of Rāvana. During the time of entering the fire the illusory Sītā vanished in the fire and the real Sītā came out. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

6) Sītā killed Sahasramukha. See under Sahasramukha Rāvana.

7) Abandonment of Sītā. See under Rāma, Para 31.

8) Sītā in the hermitage of Vālmiki. Abandoned Sītā, who was pregnant, wandered about in the forest and at last reached the hermitage of Vālmiki, who gave her protection and shelter. The story of an occurrence at this time is given in Kathāsārītāgāra, Aalākāravatīlambaka, Tārāṅga 1. The other hermits did not like Vālmiki's action of giving shelter to Sītā. They said "Sītā is impure. Otherwise her husband would not have abandoned her. By her association we also would become sinners. As the hermit Vālmiki is kind, he will not cast her away especially when she is pregnant. So the best thing for all of us, is to go to another hermitage.” This murmuring of the hermits reached the ears of Vālmiki. He said "She is pure and chaste. I know it with my inward eyes.” But they did not believe it. Then Sītā said “Lord! you can test my chastity in whatever way you like, and if I am found to be impure you may cut off my head.” The hermits tested Sītā in the Tīṭhīhasaras (a divine lake near the hermitage of Vālmiki) and were
SITĀ I

The male bird cried to Sītā to let him take his mate along with him, and beat his head on the ground. Sītā was adamant. The female bird, filled with misery and anger cursed Sītā thus. “You have separated me from my husband. I am pregnant. May you too be separated from your husband when you become pregnant.” When she had finished saying, she fell on the ground and wriggled and died. An aerial chariot came down to the earth from heaven for the soul of that bird which had died exalting and glorifying Sīrāma. The soul of the bird got into the chariot and went up to heaven. The male bird, being unable to bear the death of his beloved wife, dipped himself in the Ganges. Before his death he cried out in anger. “I must be born in the city of Rāma. By my words, this Sītā should be separated from her husband and fall into misery.” He died in the Ganges in Krothra (anger) and fear. So he took rebirth with the name Krothaka as a washerman by caste and profession. It was this washerman who spoke words of calumny about Sītā. Due to the calumny of this washerman, Śīrāma abandoned Sītā and she had to take shelter in the hermitage of Vālmiki. (Padma Parāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 57).

10) The end of Sītā. (See under Rāma, Para 33).

SITĀ II. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 102, that once the hermit Mārkandeya saw this river also in the stomach of child Mukunda (Śrī Kṛṣṇa). This is one of the seven branches of the river Ganges. (See under Śindhu).

SITAPUTĀNA. A fierce she-devil. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 28). This terrible monster causes aborti on in women.

SĪTĀSI. A river flowing through Sākadvīpa and famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 32).

SITIKANṬHA. A nāga which was in the company of the nāgas that came to lead the soul of Babhadhrāma to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

SITIKESA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

SIVA (RUDRA) One of the Trinity.

1) Birth. The seers or spiritual giants of India imagined three forms to God, dividing all the activities into three departments, i.e. creation, sustenance and destruction or annihilation. Brahmā, for creation, Viṣṇu, for sustenance and Siva, for annihilation - they are the Trinity. Viṣṇu was born first, Brahmā next and Sīva last. The essence of Indian spiritualistic thought is that these three visible forms of God will, at the close of the Kalpa cease to be and become one with the cosmic power, and that the trinity will be born again at the commencement of the Kalpa and will take up their respective functions.

The dominant quality or attribute of Sīva is Tamas (darkness). Many stories, with slight variations, are told in the various Purāṇas about the birth of Sīva. Some of the more important stories are summarised below.

(i) At the beginning of the Kalpa, while Brahmā was meditating upon the birth of a son like himself, a child deep blue in colour, appeared on his lap, and the child began running about crying aloud. Brahmā asked the child why it was crying; then the child asked Brahmā to give him a name. Though Brahmā told him that his name was Rudra and asked him not to cry, he cried seven times more. Then Brahmā gave him another seven names, and for the total eight names eight Mūrtis (forms) wives and children were allotted. Bhava, Ēśwara, Ēśāna, Paśupati, Bhūma, Ugra and Mahādeva were the additional seven names, and Sun, Water, Earth, Wind, Fire, Sky, the Brahmin who has taken dīkṣa and Moon were the eight Mūrtis and the presiding deities allotted to them. To these deities the following wives were also allotted, i.e. Suvarcalā, Usā, Viśeśi, Śivā, Śvāhā, Dīkṣā, Rohiṇī. The world is full with their progenies. Sanāi, Śakra, Lohitāṅga, Mano-java, Skanda, Sarga, Sanatāna and Budha are the sons of the above eight wives. This Rudra married Satī, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 8).

(ii) Brahman whose predominant quality or attribute is rajas was born from the navel of Mahāvīṣṇu. From the Centre of the brow of Brahman was born Rudra of Tāmasic quality. Brahman, by the power of his tapas, acquired the power of creation and created a red-coloured world by his attribute of rajas. The very same world is annihilated by Rudra at the close of the Kalpa period. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iii) From the wrath of Brahman was born Rudra, from his navel Nārada, from his finger Dākṣa, from his mind Sanaka and others, and from his left finger a daughter called Viṣṇi. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iv) Four 'mental sons' of Brahman Sanaka, Sanandana Sanatāna and Sanat Kumārā showed disinclination to beget progenies. Brahman got angry at this attitude of the four sons and from the Centre of his brow was born a body blue and white in colour, and he, in tears, requested Brahman for names and stations. Blessing him by saying 'mā ruda' (do not cry) Brahman allotted him names and stations. He became famous by the name Rudra. He was also given eleven more names by Brahman as follows: Manyu, Manu, Mahamana, Mahān, Śiva, Rudhva, Ugra Meśetas, Bhava, Kāma, Vāmadeva and Dīrtavarta. These names are otherwise famous as follows: Aja, Ekapada, Aharbhudhyā, Tvāṣṭā, Rudra, Hari, Sambhu, Tryambaka, Aparajita, Ēśāna and Tri-bhuvana. The eleven Rudras were also allotted the following eleven positions by Brahman i.e. heart, the five organs of the body, vital force (Prāṇa) wind, fire, water, earth, sun and moon. Rudra has eleven wives, called Dhī, Vṛtta, Usāna, Umā, Nīyutā, Sarpis, Ilā, Ambikā, Irāvati, Sudhā and Dīkṣā. Rudra, under the name Śiva, is considered to be the third of the trinity. The doctrine is that as long as time is real, deluge, or annihilation does not take place. Therefore, Rudrasamāhāra (annihilation by Rudra) may be taken to mean only as the beginning of new creation.

(v) At the commencement of Yuga (era) Brahman was born from the navel of Viṣṇu. Two asuras called Madhu and Kaflabha rushed up to kill Brahman, and from the brow of Viṣṇu, who got angry towards the asuras was born Śiva holding in his hands Śūla (the three-pronged trident). (Vana Parva, Chapter 12).

2) Family life. Śiva has two wives, Gaṅgā and Pārvatī (See under Gaṅgā and Pārvatī). He lodges Gaṅgā on his head. Umā, Kātyāyani, Gauri, Kāli, Haimavatī, Iśvari, Śivā, Bhavāni, Rudrāni, Sarvāni, Sarvamaṅgalā Aparāni, Pārvatī, Durgā, Mṛdān, Cāndikā, Ambikā, Iryā, Dākṣyāni, Girijā, Menakāmatijā, Cāmuṇḍā, Karṇamotī, Catcikā and Bhaivāri—these are synonyms of Pārvatī. Śiva lives on the top of the Mahāmeru, where there are nine cities. At the centre is Brahman's Manovati; exactly to the east of it is Indra's Anaravatī; at the south-eastern corner is Agni's Tejovatī; on the south is Yama's Sahayānapati; at the south-western corner is Kṛṣṇānapāti of Nīrīti, on the west is Varuṇa's Śraddhāvatī, at the north-western corner is Gandhavatī of Vāyu, on the north is Kubera's Mahodaya, and at the north-eastern corner is Śiva's Yaśovatī—this is the set of the nine cities.

Two sons called Subrahmanya and Gaṇapati were born to Śiva of Pārvatī, and they are his actual sons. Some other sons also were born to him in his assumed forms and by other women. Such have been Indrajit, Hanumān and others. For details see the respective words. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha, 9th Skandha; Kathāsārt-sāgara, Kathāmahakalambaka).

3) Incarnations, Śiva has taken several partial incarnations, the chief of which are given below.

(i) Durgāsas. (See under Durgāsas).

(ii) Vānara (Monkey). Śiva, Pārvatī and their attendants like Nandikēsvara once transformed themselves into monkeys and played about on the Himalayas. Rāvana, who came there on the occasion ridiculed Nandikēsvara, who, in great rage, cursed Rāvana that monkeys would destroy him. Being thus cursed Rāvana raised Kailāsa from its foundations and played with it. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(iii) Śakti. Śiva incarnated himself as Śakti, son of Vasimātha and was devoured by Kalmāśa-pāda, who took the form of a Rākṣasa. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(iv) Varuṇa. Śiva once assumed the form of Varuṇa and conducted a yakṣa which was attended by the Vedas in assumed forms. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85).

4) Boons granted by Śiva. The Purāṇas refer to various persons, who had earned boons from him and others who attained heaven on account of their devotion for him. The following are important among such persons.

(i) Simhavakra—(Skandā Purāṇa, Asura Kānḍā).

(ii) Rukmī—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iii) Bāna—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iv) Sudakṣiṇa—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(v) Śāvī—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(vi) Vṛkṣāsura—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(vii) Rājadevi—(Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taranīga 1).

(viii) Indrajit—(Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(x) Gāndhāri—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 107).

(xi) A rṣi girl—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 6).

(xii) Prabhaṇjana—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Verse 20).

(xiii) Śvetakī—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 41).

(xiv) Jarāsandha—(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 64).

(xv) Bānāsura—(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Southern text).

(xvi) Maṅkaṇa—(Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 132).

(xvii) Sagara—(Vana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 15).
(xviii) Bhagiratha—(Vana Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 1).
(xix) Jayadratha—(Vana Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 28).
(xx) Ambâ—(Udyoga Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 12).
(xxi) Somadatta—(Drona Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 16).
(xxii) Viśu—(Drona Parva, Chapter 201, Verse 56).
(xxiii) Parasûrama—(Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 116; Sânti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 33).
(xxiv) Skanda—(Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 46).
(xxv) Arundhati—(Salya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 38).
(xxvi) A Brahmin boy—(Sânti Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 114).
(xxvii) Taṇḍi muni—(Anuśâsana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 69).

5) Assets of Śiva. Śiva possesses a mass of matted hair, red in colour. It is known as Kaparda also, and hence he is called Kapârdî as well. Śiva is also stated to be Agni. He has three eyes, the third one on the forehead being all fire. Śiva is called Trinetra, Phâlânêtra, Agnilocana etc. because of the above facts. It is only just and proper that Śiva, who is the destroyer of all things should have relation to Agni. Śiva, the all-destructor, carries the Śûla in his hands always. Another weapon is named Piṅâka, and therefore Śiva is called Piṅâkapârî (he who holds Piṅâka in his hands). Both Śiva and his vehicle, the Bull, are white in colour. The white colour indicates the justice observed in the process of annihilation. Śiva has been described as possessing two, four, eight and ten hands. Besides the Piṅâka, he holds in his hands the club called Khâtâṅga, the bow called Ajaga, a deer, beads, skull, damaru (a musical instrument) and many other sacred articles. Gârgâ and Candra (moon) dwell on his head, and he is, therefore, known as Gaṅgâdâhara and Candracûḍa also. A Garland made of human skulls adorns his neck. Śiva wears the skin of the leopard for cloth and uses the skin of the elephant for blanket, All over his limbs snakes are worn as ornaments.

The Purâṇas contain stories as to how Śiva earned most of the above assets. The wives of many Rûšis felt enamoured of Śiva, who once appeared in the garb of a beggar. The Rûśis, who got angry with Śiva on the above account, decided to kill him. From the pit they dug on the ground, a tiger emerged. Śiva killed it and wore its skin. A deer followed the tiger from the pit. Śiva held it in his left hand. The next to emerge out of the pit was a red-hot iron rod. Śiva took it in his hands as a weapon. Lastly snakes came out of the pit and Śiva wore them on his body. On another occasion an asura called Gaya assumed the form of an elephant and chased the munis, who took refuge in a Śiva temple. Śiva appeared, killed the elephant and wore its skin on his body. Since Śiva wore snakes as ear-rings he came to be known as Nâgakûndâla. Brahmâ ordered that Rudra should create people and accordingly he created people. But, his creations were very cruel beings. Brahmâ feared that they would eat up the other creations. Brahmâ, who trembled with fear, asked Rudra to retire from the act of creation and to train himself to do creation in the proper manner as ordained. Accordingly, Rudra started practising tapas.

6) Incidents.

(i) How Śiva got the name Jîmûtaketu. (See under Jîmûtaketu).
(ii) He became Kapâli. (See under Kapâli).
(iii) Sin of Brahmahatyâ on Śrîa. As he plucked off the head of Brahman Śrîa became subject to the sin of Brahmahatyâ. Blue in colour and with grey hair, terrible Brahmahatyâ approached Śrîa who asked her who she was and why she came. She answered that she was Brahmahatyâ and asked Śrîa to take her into him. She entered his body so that he felt a burning sensation all over his body. In this condition Śrîa went to Bâdaryârama. But, the great Rûšis, Naranârâyaṇas were not there in the ârama. Sad at heart Śrîa went to the river Yamunâ to take a bath. But the river dried up. Then he went to Prakâsha island to bathe; but the island disappeared. Then he went to Puṣkârânya, Mâgadhâraya, Saindhâraya, Naimiśâraya, Dharmâraya etc. all to no purpose. He got worn out but could not have a bath. The terrible Brahmahatyâ did not leave him. Though he visited sacred rivers, âsrâmas and temples and practised Yoga, Śrîa did not get redemption from sin. At last, in great disappointment he went to Kuruksetra, where he saw Viśnu. With folded hands Śrîa praised Viṣṇu who advised him the following means for absorbtion from sin. “A Bhagavân born from my aspect under the name Yogaśâyî is living at Prayâga. The great river Varûṇa which has started from the right leg of Yogaśâyî and which redeems all sins as also the sublime river Aśî, which has started from his left leg are both worshipped by the whole world. The temple of Yogaśâyî is at the centre of these rivers, and that is a sacred place most important in the three worlds and annihilative of all sins. That city is the great Vârânasî. Even materialistic or worldly people get salvation there. It is my (Viṣṇu) âsrâma. There dwells Sûrya called Loka destroying all sins. The place where Këśava my aspect lives, is Daśâvamedha. If you go there you will get redemption from sin.” Thus directed by Viṣṇu Śrîa went to Vârânasî and achieved absorption from the sin of Brahmahatyâ by bathing in the holy tirthas there. (Vâmana Purâṇa, Chapter 3).

(iv) Birth of Vîrabhadrâ. (See under Dâka).
(v) Water in Kâlindi got dark in colour. (See under Pârvati, Para 2).
(vi) Śrîa became Nâgahûraya. (See under Nâgâstra),
(vii) Blessèd Sukèsa. Vidûtyekâ, the Rûk̄ṣaṣa married Sâlakaṭâṅkā, daughter of Sandhyâ. While they toured the world round enjoying their hoonymoon Sâlakaṭâṅkā conceived and delivered in due course a son in the valley of Mount Mandara. Śrîa and Pârvati, who passed that way in an aerial chariot saw the child and came down to it. By the blessing of Śrîa the child grew up to a youth very quickly. Śrîa named him Sukësa and after blessing that he would grow up to become a pious soul disappeared from the scene. (Uttara Râmâyana).

(viii) Śrîa, the father of Indrajit. (See under Indrajit, Para 2).
(ix) Four faces of Śrîa. (See under Tilottâma, Para 2).
(x) Sword of Śrîa. Śrîa holds a sword in his hand to destroy the asura tribe. The following is told in Chapter 166 of Sânti Parva about the origin of the sword.
Brahmā when he created the universe also laid down laws to keep living beings in the path of righteousness. But, the asuras did not conform to those laws. So, the maharṣis decided that there should be some other means to instruct the asuras. They conducted a Brahma-yajña at the Himālayas. A terrible Jīn (Evil Spirit) emerged from the sacrificial pit.

At the emergence of the Jīn the earth shook; the great sea grew wild with waves and eddies. Lightning and shooting stars appeared and branches of trees were torn asunder. A vicious whirl-wind swept the ten regions. All living beings trembled at the sight of the Jīn.

Brahmā appeared to the frightened maharṣis and told them that it was not a Jīn, but only the sword for the destruction of the asura tribe. Sīva took the sword in his hand, and as soon as he touched it he became possessed of four hands. “Sīva, whose head touched the sun, who had the third eye and from whose mouth flames of fire emerged, who changed himself to various colours like blue, white and red, who wore deer skin with golden spots, who had on his forehead an eye as effulgent as the Sun—such Sīva took in his hands the fiery sword and raising his shield he swirled the sword in various directions.”

When Sīva, who thus became terrible, walked with the sword amidst the asura army the entire asura forces were annihilated and the Devas came out victorious. 7) Daring deeds of Sīva.

(i) Clash With Viṣṇu. Though there were differences of opinion between Sīva and Viṣṇu on many occasions, only very rarely had occurred actual clashes between the two. The Purāṇas refer to two such important clashes. One has reference to a direct fight Sīva fought with Viṣṇu and the other is about Sīva’s fight with Nārāyaṇaśri, an incarnation of Viṣṇu.

There was no reason for the direct fight between Sīva and Viṣṇu. The Devas wanted to test who was the more powerful of the two, Sīva or Viṣṇu, and they told Brahmā about the idea. By carrying tales to them, one against the other, Brahmā made Sīva and Viṣṇu mutual enemies. The enmity led to a fight between the two. Viṣvakarman made a bow for each of the contestants. In the fight between the two Sīva got defeated. Sīva, who got angry at his temporary defeat presented his bow and arrow to Devarāti, King of Videha. It was this bow, which Śrī Rāma broke at the wedding of Sītā in a later period. As soon as the fight was over the Devas realised that Viṣṇu was greater than Sīva. After the fight Viṣṇu gave his bow to Rṣčika, the Bhūrgava muni. Jamadagni got it from Rṣčika, and he gave it to Paraśurāma. It was with this bow that Paraśurāma confronted Śrī Rāma on his way back after wedding Sītā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 75).

The following story is related in the Anuśāsana Parva of Mahābhārata about the fight between Nārāyaṇaśri, incarnation of Viṣṇu and Sīva. Sīva, in great fury, threw his Sūla into the Yajña hall of Dakṣa, and the Sūla after reducing the Yajña, to ashes, hit the breast of Nārāyaṇaśri, who was doing tapas in Badarikāśrama. Nārāyaṇa raised the sound ‘Hum’ as a result of which the Sūla returned to Sīva’s hands, who, in great anger, rushed forward to Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa placed his hand on Sīva’s throat with the result that it became dark in colour. Thenceforth Sīva came to be known as Śītakaṇṭha also.

Nārāyaṇa plucked a blade of grass and recited some mantras. It became a parāsu (axe). He threw it at Sīva, who broke it into pieces, which act gave him the additional name of Khaṇḍapaṇāru. Also, the fighting became fierce and the world began burning. Fire refused to receive offerings made; Rājas could not recollect the Vedas; Rajas and Tamas attacked Devas; the earth shook; planets became dim and dark; Brahmā fell down from his seat; sky came down; oceans got dry; the Himālayas crumbled. On the continuous appearance of such ill omens Brahmā and all the Devas came to the battlefield. Saluting Rudra Brahmā told him thus: “Oh! Lord! Let good happen to the world. In the interests of the welfare of the world, you would please give up arms. The Naranārāyaṇas are upholders of righteousness; they are the incarnations of the indestructible and supreme sages. I was born from their pleasure. You were born from their wrath.”

On hearing these words of Brahmā Sīva cooled down.

(ii) Rendered Kāmadeva bodiless (limbless). See under Kāmadeva, Parva 4.

(iii) Bore Gaṅgā on the head. See under Gaṅgā.

(iv) Consumed Kulakūṭa. Owing to the curse of Durvāsas the Devas were subjected to symptoms of old age, and to produce amṛta (nectar) as remedy for this unfortunate development, the churning of Kuśā-Bhūddhi (ocean of milk) was started. Vāsuki, the snake, was used as cord to rotate mount Mandara, which was used as the churning rod. When the churning became very intense, the mortal poison Kulakūṭa emerged out of Vāsuki’s mouth. (Another view is held that Kulakūṭa rose out of the milk-sea). On the emergence of the deadly poison the asuras ran off in great fear, the Devas got bewildered, Bālī and Sugrīva too got frightened; and without exhibiting his fright Viṣṇu covered his face; on the whole it appeared as though the entire world would be reduced to ashes.

At this critical moment, Sīva, reputed for his reckless daring, put all the Kālākūṭa into his mouth. Frightened at it Pārvatī held Sīva’s throat by her hands so that the poison did not enter his stomach. At the same time Mahāviṣṇu covered with his hands Sīva’s mouth so that the poison was not spilled out. Kālākūṭa thus prevented from going down into the stomach or being vomited from Sīva’s throat got itself digested in the throat giving it a blue colour. Thus did Sīva become Nilakaṇṭha (of the blue throat). Viṣṇu and Pārvatī who were affected by the flames of the poison became Nilavarna and Kālī respectively. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

(v) Destroyed Dakṣa’s yajña. See under Dakṣa Para 3).

(vi) Fought Śāṅkhacūḍa. (See under Tulasī, Para 5).

(vii) Burned the Tripuras. (See under Tripura).

(viii) Fought Śūrya. Sīva once plucked out Brahmā’s head (See under Kapālī 1), and Brahmā cursed Sīva that he should beg for food with that head (skull) in his hands. This fierce curse of Brahmā affected Sīva so much that, in uncontrollable wrath, he beat whosoever he met. Thousands of Devas and others were killed. Sūrya, who relished not these atrocities of Sīva confronted him with out-stretched hands. Sīva held with one hand of his, both the hands of Sūrya from the fingers of which blood began to flow. Sīva turned Sūrya round and round by his hands with the result that the hands of Sūrya became short. When Sūrya became completely drenched in blood Siva let him free and walked to another side when Sūrya, laughingly challenged him again to fight. Greatly enraged by the challenge Siva fisted him on the face with the result he lost all his teeth. Also he fell down unconscious. As Sūrya fell thus Bhāgā looked with fierce eyes at Śiva, who then struck the former on his face. Both the eyes of Bhāgā fell down. and the Devas were alarmed by it. Then all the Adīyas, under the leadership of Indra ran off to the ten regions along with the Marus and Agni. Only prominent asuras like Prahlāda remained on the scene. They saluted Śiva. Śiva surveyed the yāga hall, the Devas and the asuras with his three eyes. All of them then ran away to different places. Śiva looked at the three Agnis with his three eyes and they were reduced to ashes.

When Śiva's anger subsided Sūrya was installed in his former form. (Vāman Purāṇa, Chapter 5).

(x) Made five Indras Pāṇḍavas. The Pāṇḍavas, in their former life, were Indras. (Adī Parva, Chapter 199).

The Devas once conducted at Naimiśāraṇya a lengthy yajña of which Yama was the manager. In the absence of Yama there was no death on earth. Thus, human beings also, like the Devas, became Amayāyas (deathless). Alarmed at this the Devas submitted their grievance to Brahmā who pacified them by saying that Yama would return as soon as the yajña was over and then men will, as usual be subjected to the process of death. The Devas then returned to Naimiśāraṇya, the scene of their yajña when they saw a woman lustrous as fire, descending the steps of Gaṅgā to carry water. She was sobbing and each drop of tear that fell into the waters of the river transformed itself into a lotus flower. As deputed by the Devas Indra approached the woman to get facts from her.

Indra asked her who she was and why she was weeping. The woman answered him not, but walked in silence, to the source of the Gaṅgā. Indra followed her. When they had thus walked some distance Śiva and Pārvatī were found in the forest at a game of dice, and Indra, afraid of Śiva, ran way. But, Śiva called him back and asked him to enter the cave there. When Indra did so after removing the mountain at the entrance of the cave he saw four Indras sitting there. They were called Viṣṇabhuk, Bhuṭadhamā, Sibi and Śānti. The woman whom Indra had followed was Śrīdevī. Śiva blessed that the five Indras, in their next birth, would wed Śrīdevī. When the Indras saw Mahāviṣṇu after this he also blessed them, and promised them that he would incarnate and help them when they were born as men in their next life. Then Viṣṇu plucked a black and a white hair and put them on earth. The black hair was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Devakī's womb and the white hair as Balabhadrārāma in the womb of Rohiṇī.

(xi) Kīrātāryuṇayam. Arjuna once did tapas to Śiva, who appeared to him in the garb of a hunter in the forest and presented to him the Pāśupata arrow. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 20).

(xii) Fought with Mahiṣāsura. (See under Mahiṣāsura).

(xiii) Fought with Vṛtrāsura. See under Vṛtrāsura.

(xiv) Burnt Himavān. Śiva once did tapas on the top of Himavān when Pārvatī came behind him and covered his eyes with her hands. At once darkness enveloped the whole world, and when people suffered in the absence of day-light Śiva opened his third eye. Himavān began getting burnt by the fire emitted by Śiva's eye. Pārvatī got alarmed at this and woke Śiva up. He closed his third eye and Himavān resumed its former shape. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 104).

8) Worship of Śiva. Innumerable people in India worship Śiva and they follow different forms or systems of worship. There are forms of worship which follow the Vedas and which do not as also forms which are sāttvīc and which are not. The form of worship called Pārāśupadāma (? Pāṭupatam) is a very ancient one. It is believed that the Parasupadas once honoured and afterwards opposed the Vedas. The Śiva linga at the place called Gūḍamillam is supposed to be as old as the second century B.C.

One of the many symbols, which represent Śiva, Śivalīṅga is the most important. They are of two kinds, the movable and the immovable. The immovable are those which appear by themselves or installed in temples. The movable are those made of earth, stone, timber, gems etc. There are also temporary līṅgas, which are placed on stools of various shapes. Līṅgas are made of he-stones and stools of 'she-stones'.

There are also various types of līṅgas indicative of the different attributes of Śiva; for example Liṅgoḷabhava, Čandrasekhara, Raudra, Umāśāhita etc. Kamāntaka, Gajāri, Kāḷāri, Tripurādāhaka etc. represent the Lord in his fierce aspects. Śiva is also represented in poses of blessing Caṇḍāśa, Viṣṇu, Nandīśvara, Viṅgheśvara and Arjuna. He is also presented in various poses of dancing, Daśaśāmūrty is represented in four forms, i.e. Vyākhyāna Jāna, Yoga and Viṅgadhara. Bīkṣājaka, Kapālādhārī, Gaṅgādhara, Ardhanārīśvara Vṛṣabhāvāhana and Viṣṇabhāksaka are other forms of Śiva. Rarely is he depicted in the form of Sadāśiva, Mahēśvara, Ekādaśarudra Viṇḍyeśvara and Mūrtyaśṭaka. There are Agamas descriptive of these forms.

Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among Devas connected with Śiva. Gaṇapati came to be worshipped from 6-7 centuries B.C. His present idols might have been made after this period.

There are many temples dedicated to Gaṇapati in South India. Chief among the idols are itānpīri (proboscis turned to the left side) and valānpīri (proboscis turned to the right side). Gaṇapati is a physical aspect of Śiva. Being the God who removes obstacles in the devotee's path, Gaṇapati is called Vīgheśvara. The universe is contained in his big stomach.

Next to Gaṇapati in importance is Subrahmaṇya. He is worshipped in South India only. Kumāra, Muruka, Kārtikeya, Skanda, Arumukha, Guna, etc. are some of his popular synonyms. There are a number of Subrahmaṇya temples in Tamil Nādu, many of them on the tops of hills. In North India Subrahmaṇya temples are rare. But, books written during the Saṅgha period go to prove that Subrahmaṇya was worshipped in South India from very olden times. He is depicted in many postures, sitting, with six faces, with only one face, with two hands, with four hands, with wife, wearing the sacred thread etc.

Now, about Sākti idols. Sākti is the Devī closest to Śiva. In South India there are special Sākti temples called Saktipīthalayas. Durgā is the most important among the manifestations of Sakti. There are idols of Durgā as standing in the lotus flower and also as mounted on the lion. Āgama refer to nine kinds or forms of Durgā i.e. Nilakantī, Kṣemākari, Harāskīdhī, Raudrā, Vānā, Agni, Jayā, Vindhyāvāsimi, and Ripunāsimi. Durgā’s most terrible form is as Mahiṣāsura-mardini, found at Mahābalipuram, Ellora and other places. Durgā is also called Caṇḍikā and Kātyāyani. Durgā is worshipped as Nandā, Bhadrakāli, Ambā, Rājāmātāngi etc.

9) Śiva’s life-period. Thousand Caturugas constitute one day of Brahmat. According to the Purānas fourteen Indras fall dead from heaven during the life time of one Brahmat. Two such life times of Brahmat form one life time of Viṣṇu; at the end of the period he too will expire. Śiva’s life time is double that of Viṣṇu, according to Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha. (For details see under Manvantara).

10) Śiva and creation of the universe. See under Creation).
11) Māyā Śiva. (See under Māyā śiva).
12) Sahasranāmas (thousand names) of Śiva. The thousand names of Śiva are mentioned in Chapter 285 of Śānti Parva and Chapter 17 of Anuśāsana Parva of Mahābhārata. There are substantial differences between the two lists of names.
13) Aśvathāmā and Śiva. (See under Aśvathāmā Para 6).

14) Rudras. The Ekaḍāśarudras, viz. Mrgavādhā, Sarpa, Nirṛti, Ajākapat, Ahirbudhnya, Pinākī, Iśvara, Kapāli, Sthānū and Bharga are the sons of Śiva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).
15) Śivabhasma (Ashes worn by Śiva) The Purānas contain many references to the great power of Śivabhasma. The following story about even Viṣṇu turning out to be a devotee of Śiva on account of the sanctity of Śivabhasma is related in Chapter 101, Pāṭalākhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa.

In the beginning or during the Brahmāpralaya (deluge) Mahāviṣṇu was lying in the great waters of the deluge. On both sides of Viṣṇu hundred universes each and on both sides of his feet and at the centre of his head twenty universes each remained attached. One universe glowed as a gem on Viṣṇu’s nose. Mahārīṣī like Lomaśa did tapas seated on his navel. Meanwhile Viṣṇu sat in deep meditation ready for creation. But, he did not find anything and began, therefore, sobbing. Then appeared an extra-mundane light at which he got frightened and closed his eyes. Śiva, rotating in both his hands a garland each made of a crore of universes appeared before Viṣṇu. He then stood up and enquired of the visitor who he was. Śiva exhibited his form. Śiva told Viṣṇu that he had not attained sufficient wisdom for creation and also advised him to achieve enough knowledge by first taking the Varuna bath and then the Bhasma bath.

To this Viṣṇu answered by saying that there was nowhere water enough for him to bathe, and he, who was closely surrounded by universēs, sat in water. But, it came only up to his thighs. Then Śiva said laughingly that there was enough water for Viṣṇu to bathe and cast a glance at him with his (Śiva) eye on the forehead and also his left eye. And, immediately Viṣṇu’s body became very small and it began to shiver. Then Śiva said as follows: “Oh! Viṣṇu! here is deep water, you may bathe in it. But Viṣṇu could not get into the tremendous pool created on Śiva’s lap. So, he requested Śiva for a passage to get into the pool. Śiva “Oh! Viṣṇu! Before this even though you sit in water, one crore yojanas in depth, it cannot only up to your thighs. But, now though you are on your legs you can not enter the water. Look here, the water comes only up to my thighs. You may descend into it. I shall see to it that you can step into the water. A Vedic saying I recite will serve as the step.”

Viṣṇu:—Nobody can step on sound. One may ascend on what is material, i.e. with form; but, how could one step on that which is formless?

Śiva:—Why can you not get hold of that which is and ascend? You receive this great Veda. Viṣṇu received it, but it appeared that his hands were not strong enough to hold it. Śiva smiled at the inability of Viṣṇu and asked him to get down into water by the steps made of Veda and when Viṣṇu descended the steps into the water, it came only up to his thighs. He had his bath and then asked Śiva what he should do next. Śiva:— “What do you feel in your mind? Is it that you do not feel anything?”

Viṣṇu:—I feel not anything.

Śiva:—If you get sanctified by bhasmasnāna you will receive the ultimate knowledge. I shall give you the bhasma. Śiva took a pinch of bhasma from his breast and chanting the Gāyatrī and pāncākṣara (Om namaḥśivāya) mantras sprinkled it all over the body of Viṣṇu. He also said to Viṣṇu, “You live, you meditate, now what do you feel in your mind?” Viṣṇu meditated whereupon he saw a very bright light in his heart. When he told Śiva that a light was being seen by him the latter said that his knowledge was not mature enough and asked him to eat some bhasma so that it might become perfect. Viṣṇu accordingly consumed the bhasma, and lo! he, who was till then red-blue in colour became as white as pearl. He began to be called Sūkla-vārṇa (white in colour) from that day onwards.

Mahāviṣṇu felt happy and contented having seen Śiva, who asked the former what it was he saw in his mind just then. Answering that he saw the blissful form of Śiva before him Viṣṇu fell at the latter’s feet. To Śiva’s query as to what soon he desired to have, Viṣṇu replied that he wanted to become a devotee of Śiva and because of the greatness of the bhasma Viṣṇu thenceforward became a devotee of Śiva.

16) Śivalīṅga (Phallus). Worship of Śivalīṅga is a popular practice in India. The Purānas contain a number of stories about the importance Śivalīṅga achieved so as to make it an object of worship. Three of the more important stories are given below:

(i) Śiva wandered about the world lamenting over the death of Satidevi at the Yajña conducted by Daksā, and Kāmadeva followed him with his erotic arrows to exploit Śiva’s sorry predicament. During his wanderings Śiva once came to the Vindhyā mountain. Kāmadeva followed him there too and began attacking Śiva with his arrows and to escape from the fierce onslaught Śiva took refuge in the terrible Dīrgha forest. There Mahārīṣī with their wives lived. Śiva saluted them and requested for alms. But, the Mahārīṣīs only kept mum. They did not like their wives saluting Śiva. Śiva went about the aśrama and all the women except Arundhati and Anasūyā, followed him overcome by lust for him. Enraged at this, munis like Bāhagava and Aṅgirās cursed Siva that his phallus should drop to the ground. Immediately it fell down and Siva disappeared. The phallus rent asunder the earth, reached Pátāla and rent the universe also. The whole universe shook at which Brahmā met Vīṣṇu at Pátāla and enquired of him the reason for the universal upheaval. Vīṣṇu answered him that the world shook because of the weight of Siva's phallus, which the mahārṣis had caused to be dropped. Then Brahmā, along with Vīṣṇu, came to the spot where Siva's phallus lay. At the sight of the limitless phallus Vīṣṇu, in great wonder, descended to Pátāla. Brahmā, on his plane, toured above. Both Vīṣṇu and Brahmā returned to earth, having failed in their attempt to find the end of the phallus. They then praised Siva, who appeared to them. They requested him to take back his phallus from the earth. Siva insisted that he would do so only if the Devas agreed to worship his phallus. Vīṣṇu agreed to the suggestion. Brahmā took the phallus, golden brassy in colour. Thereafter Mahāviṣṇu created the four castes and various śāstraic texts for each of the castes to worship the phallus. The four texts are known as Saivam, Pāṇḍupatam, Kāladamanam and Kāpālikam. After making the above arrangements Brahmā and Vīṣṇu returned. Siva took back his phallus. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(ii) Eighty-eight thousand Bālakhilyas were born from the mind of Brahmā. They emaciated their bodies by constant baths, fasting and worship of Siva. Though they worshipped Siva thus for one thousand divya years, he did not appear in front of them.

Afterwards, when Pārvatī was travelling by sky one day, the latter saw and took pity on the Bālakhilyas and told Siva thus: “These mahārṣis are suffering like anything. For my sake, you should put an end to their sufferings. Has their evil fate no end? They are reduced to mere skin and bones, and yet they are denied realisation.”

Smilingly Siva told Pārvatī as follows: “You do not know the real course of righteousness. These people do not understand righteousness; they are not free from lust and anger. They are mere fools.” At these words of Siva, Pārvatī told him thus: If things be as you have said please show me their nature, I feel interested. Then Siva asked Pārvatī to remain where she was, telling her that he would go to the Bālakhilyas and show her how they behaved. Accordingly Siva went to them. Siva approached the Bālakhilyas in the guise of a handsome youth, wearing the Vanamāla garland on his head, holding the alms bowl in his hands and completely in the nude and requested for alms. The Advaithins of the Devas were much attracted by the handsome youth and came to him with a lot of fruits, roots etc. by way of alms. Siva wished them good and Pārvatī espied her smiling lord from her seat.

After giving him alms the women spoke to him as follows: “Oh! anchorite, what penance are you practising? You have no clothes on you, but you wear Vanamāla. You are a handsome sannyāsī. If you have no objection, please tell us about you.” The sannyāsī (Siva) answered them by saying that his was a very secret penance and could not be imparted to others. Especially in the presence of so many others it could not be revealed. So, you may please go. But, the women said that they wished very much to hear the secret, and they caught hold of his hands saying ‘Come’.

The women were overcome by lust and one of them caught hold of his neck, another of his hands, another of his knees, another of his hair and yet another of his waist. Seeing the excitement of their wives the mahārṣis cried, ‘Strike him’ and struck down his phallus with sticks and stones. As soon as the phallus was thus felled down, Siva disappeared from the spot and returned to Kailāsa with Pārvatī. When the phallus fell down the whole universe shook and the mahārṣis were alarmed. A very intelligent mahārṣi among them said:—“We know not the real facts about the great ascetic. Let us take refuge in Brahmā. He may know the facts.” Accordingly the mahārṣis went to Brahmā, who found fault with their ignorance and indiscretion and asked them to shed their anger and please Siva. Accordingly they went to Kailāsa and praised Siva, who appeared to them and told them as follows:—“You may now return. The phallus will belong to you. I shall be pleased if you would duly install it. Nothing will be impossible to those who worship my phallus with devotion. Even sins consciously committed will be removed by the worship of my phallus. You install the phallus you struck down in the great pond of Sannihita. That will achieve for you all your desires. Even the Devas will worship it under the name ‘Sthanu’. Being installed at Stānuviśvara it will be known as Stānuviśvara also. Constant meditation upon Stānu will remove all sins. The sight of Stānu will bring about salvation.”

After this the mahārṣis, along with Brahmā, returned to Dārū forest to carry the phallus to Sannihita. But, they could not move it even by an iota. They returned again to Kailāsa, but could not see Siva there. When Brahmā sat in meditation for sometime to know where Siva was, he saw in his mind Siva, in the guise of an elephant, standing in the stream praised by munis. Immediately Brahmā and others went there, but missed Siva there. But Pārvatī appeared there and served them amṛta (nectar). When they had consumed the nectar they saw Siva standing in the stream, and they spoke about their difficulties to him. Siva, in the guise of the elephant, accompanied them to the Dārū forest where he, in sport, took the phallus by his proboscis and installed it on the banks of the stream. All those who witnessed the installation attained ultimate realisation. Upon the phallus thus installed Brahmā built a phallus with stone. After a period that phallus became one with the effulgence of the first phallus. Those who saw that also achieved ultimate realisation. Immediately Brahmā built, for the pleasure of the Devas, seven phalluses one upon the other, and sages attained ultimate realisation by smearing their bodies with the dust of the phalluses. The spot where the phallus was installed became famous by the name Stānuviśthi. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

(iii) In the beginning Brahmā entrusted Siva with the duty of creation and to earn the power for creation he lived under water for many generations. Siva having not returned though Brahmā waited for him long, the latter created the prajāpatis and got done by them all creations. Then it was that Siva, having acquired all the more power, came out of water. Siva who got angry that all creations were effected in his absence plucked his phallus and threw it into the earth. He said that, since matters of creation had been managed by Brahma, he needed the phallus no further. The phallus thus thrown by Siva stuck to the earth and remained pointed upwards. Next, Siva performed a dance of annihilation among the Devas. Ultimately, on the request of the Devas Siva deposited his fire of wrath in water. It is that fire which dries up water in seas, rivers etc. When Siva had shed his anger and become quiet the Devas worshipped the phallus, which had stuck to the earth, and thenceforward worship of Siva’s phallus became popular. (M.B. Saunta Parva, Chapter 17).

17) Sivalīlās (Sports of Siva). The Purāṇas refer to the following sixty-four lilās (sports) of Siva. (1) Devendra redeemed from sin. (2) Airāvata redeemed from sin. (3) Building of Madhurāpura in Kadamba forest. (4) Śrī Pārvati born as Tatātākā. (5) Pāndyadeva wedded Tatātākā. (6) Dance before sage Patañjali (7) Kuṇḍodara granted power to consume much rice (8) Quenched Kuṇḍodara’s hunger and thirst with rice etc. and waters of river Vaigā (9) Brought the seven seas near to please his wife (10) Brought Malayanvajā down to earth from Devaloka (11) Created the son called Ugra (12) Ugra given three weapons like śūla (13) Removed the sea from his side (14) Broke the crown of Indra (15) Ugrapāṇḍya given gold from Mahāmeru (16) Taught the mahārṣis the meaning of Vedas (17) Sold gems to the King to make a crown (18) Made the clouds drink water from the ocean (19) Stopped excessive rain-fall (20) Exhibited the prowess of realisation (21) Made ‘stone-elephant’ eat sugar-cane (22) Killed the elephant which a Buddha sannyāsin had sent after being subjected to black magic (23) Blessed a brahmin girl (24) Did various kinds of dances (25) Brought to light and proved the death of brahmin woman (26) Annihilated the evil or sin of having slept with the mother and killed the father (27) Killed Siddha to save the wife of preceptor, who taught archery (28) Made the snakes sent by Buddha sannyāsins poisonless (29) Killed cows sent by the same sannyāsins (30) Exhibited innumerable soldiers to save the commander-in-chief of the Paṇḍya army (31) Gave the Paṇḍya King a money-bag, which would never become empty (32) Disguised himself as a Vaśīya and sold bangles (33) Granted aṣṭasiddhis to Yākṣīs. (34) Opened the door of the temple for the Cola King (35) Supplied water to the Paṇḍyan army (36) Converted base metals into gold etc. (37) Defeated the Cola King (38) Gave a Śūdra a vessel filled with gingly seeds (39) A Vaśīya boy given victory in a suit (40) Redeemed the Paṇḍya King from the sin of brahmahatyā (41) Carried firewood to save the devotee named Bhadra (42) Wrote a letter to the Cera King on behalf of Bhadra (43) Bhadra presented with a plank (44) Bhadra’s wife granted victory in nāgavidyā (45) Assumed the form of pork and saved the small offsprings (46) Small pork made minister (47) A Khaṭṭirīja bird was taught the mṛtyunjaya mantra so that it could escape from the attack of crows (48) A Sarāri bird granted salvation (49) Boundaries of Madhurāpura shown by serpent (50) Defeated the Cola King (51) Dravidian scholars given the Saṁgham plank (52) Wrote a verse for a brahmin at the instance of the Paṇḍya King (53) Saved Nakkira (54) Nakkira taught sūtras (aphorisms) (55) Made a comparative study of theses (56) Visited northern Hālāṣya (57) Wedded fisher-girl (58) Jīnandikṣā (initiation into knowledge) given to the minister called Vātāpurā (59) Sold magic horses to the Paṇḍyan King (60) River made bigger (61) Carried mud for pancakes (62) Cured the fever and hunch-back of Kubja Paṇḍya (63) Made Jīnāsaṃbandhar kill the naked ones on the ōlā (64) Brought tree, tank, Sivalīlās etc. to Madhura as witnesses. (Hālāṣyamāḥātmya, Chapter 5).

18) Bull of Siva. Cows were born on earth from Surabhi. The foam of milk which flowed like sea from cows rose into waves and fell in Śivabhūmi (Siva land). Siva did not like it. He opened his third eye and looked at the cows. The flames from the eye caused different colours to the cows. The cows took refuge with Candra. But, the fire of Siva’s eye followed the cows there also. At last the Prajāpati pacified Siva and presented him a bull for vehicle. From that day onwards Siva came to be known as Vṛṣabhavāhana and Vṛṣabhāṅka also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 77).

19) Other information.

(i) The son Śuka was born to Vyāsa because of the blessing of Siva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skanda).

(ii) During the period of emperor Pṛthu when the Devas made the earth a cow and milked resources, Siva served as calf. (Drona Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 24).

(iii) Siva occupies a seat in Kubera’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 21).

(iv) Siva once presented an armour to Indra. (Drona Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61).

(v) When the battle with the Triparas reached its climax in intensity Śiva mounted the Bull and looked at the capital of the asuras. As a result of the fiery look the breasts of cows were cut and their hoofs rent into two. The hoofs of cattle came to be cleft from that day onwards. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 105).

(vi) Living beings are kept healthy by the kindness of Siva. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

(vii) It was Siva, who organised the penal code in the world. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 80).

(viii) Once in the war between the Devas and the Asuras Śiva gave refuge to Śukrācārya. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 389, Verse 36).

(ix) Siva performed the thread-wearing ceremony of Śuka, the son of Vyāsa. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 248, Verse 19).

(x) On the occasion when Siva burnt Triparas and their city to ashes they saw him as a boy with five horns. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 32).

(xi) There is a story in Śanti Parva of Mahābhārata about Siva’s bringing back to life the dead child of a brahmin. The story was told by Bhīma to Yudhīṣṭhira. The brahmin took his dead child to the burning ghat when a fox asked him to wait at least till dusk to see if the child would regain life. At the same time a vulture, which came there pointed out to the brahmin that the dead never came back to life and asked him to leave the dead body there and return home. As advised by the fox and the vulture the brahmin took to the burning ghat and took back from there the dead body of his child. Parvati took pity on the brahmin and as requested by her Śiva brought the child back to life. The logic and reasoning advanced by the fox and the vulture for their selfish ends is famous under the name Grdhragamayusavāhāda.

(xii) The following words are used in the Mahābhārata as synonyms of Siva:

ŚIVA. I Wife of Anīgiras. Consumed by lust she once slept with Agnieva and then flew away in the form of a she-kite. (Vana Parva, Chapter 225).

ŚIVA II. Wife of the Vasu called Anila and mother of two sons called Manojava and Avijñāntagati. (Ahi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 25).

ŚIVA III. The very noble wife of Anīgiras. (Vana Parva, Chapter 225 Verse 1)

ŚIVA IV. A river in India made famous in the Purāṇas.
(Bhāṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).

ŚIVA (M) One of the seven sectors of Plaṅka island. Sivam Yavasam, Subhadram, Sāntam, Mokṣam, Amṛtam and Abhayam are the seven sectors. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

ŚIVABHASMA. See-underŚiva, Para 15.

ŚIVAVARA. See-under Viṣṇuvarā.

ŚIVALINGA. See-underŚiva, Para 15.

ŚIVAPŪJA (ŚIVA WORSHIP). There are certain injunctions with regard to the worship of Śiva. Nandikeṣa and Mahākāla are to be worshipped first. Then should Gaṅga, Yamunā, the gaṇas, Vāstupuruṣa, Śakti, and Dharma be worshipped. Next, the navaśaktis (nine powers) i.e. Vāma, Jyeṣṭha, Raudri, Kāli, Kalavikārī (Kalavikalini) Balavikārī (Balavikalini) Balapramuthi, Sarvabhūtadāmanī and Mahonmanī should be worshipped. Then chanting the mantra 'Hāṃ, hūṃ, hāṃ Śivamūrtaye' Śiva is to be worshipped. Śiva is to be worshipped with aṅgas (with limbs, touching certain portions of the body) and with Vaktara (mouth, chanting). Aṅgas are to be worshipped with the chanting, Mahūm Śivāya hūṃ Vaktara with the chanting 'Hāṃ Īśānāya'. Gaurī should be worshipped with the bija
'Hrim', Ānupati with 'Gəm' and Dikpālas like Indra, his arrows and Cauḍēsvara should be worshipped by touching the heart etc. of the worshipper. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

SIVĀRATRI.

1) General. Śivarātri is a holy day. Śivarātri is observed on the eve of New Moon day (Caturdāsī) falling in the middle of Māga and Phālguna (February-March). During this night, penance should be done with fasting. On Caturdāsī day penance (vrat) should be observed without sleep and food and Śiva worshipped.

2) Origin. There is the following Purānic story about the origin of the observance of Śivarātri as a sacred day.
Brahmā took his birth in the lotus that originated from the navel of Viṣṇu. Brahmā trying to know the source of the lotus saw Viṣṇu only. He asked, 'Who are you?'
and was answered 'I am Viṣṇu, your father'. That answer did not satisfy Brahmā and a quarrel ensued between him and Viṣṇu which ended in fighting.
Brahmā shot the Brahmāstra, which Viṣṇu countered with Pāsūpatāstra and neither of the two was able to withdraw it, which went round the world. While both stood aghast not knowing what to do, Śivalūgā appeared betwixt the two. Both the ends of the liṅga were invisible. To find the ends Brahmā went upwards and Viṣṇu downwards. Though they travelled a great distance they could not find out the ends, and, so, returned to their old seats. Immediately Śiva appeared betwixt the two and withdrew the pāsūpatāstra. It was on Caturdāsī day in the month of Māga that Śiva thus appeared. Śiva ensioned that in future Caturdāsī night every year should be observed as a holy day, which should be known as Śivarātri. (Kaṇṇāra Kaṛṇāya).

3) The greatness of Śivarātri. The following story about a sinner, who attained Sivaloka by observing Śivarātri is related in Sivarātrimāhaṭmya.

A son named Sukumāra was born to the Brahmin manager of the king of Kuṭijara, a kingdom on the banks of the river Sindhu. The boy grew up to be an immoral fellow and he married a Čaṇḍāla girl with whom he lived for seven years. Five daughters and two sons were born to him of the Čaṇḍāla woman. The father, Sukumāra, himself married the daughters. One day he, in the course of his search for a flower to be worn on the hair of the Čaṇḍāla woman, came near the Śiva temple called Nāgeśvara. A Śivarātri festival was being celebrated there that day and Sukumāra, participated in it.
Shortly afterwards Sukumāra died. Messengers of Kāla and Śiva arrived to carry off his soul and a battle ensued between the two for the soul. His soul attained Sivaloka as he had, though by accident, participated in Śivarātri festival.
Śivaśarman had, due to Śiva’s blessing, achieved all kinds of siddhis (spiritual gifts). By the power of illusion he showed the sons their mother lying dead and all the sons wept uncontrollably. Then he asked his eldest son Yajñārman, to cut the dead body of his mother into pieces and throw them off. After having done so he came and saluted his father.

After bidding adieu to Yajñārman, who proved his devotion to his father as above, Śivaśarman called his second son Vedaśarman to him and told him thus: “I find it difficult to get on without a woman. Look, there is a beautiful woman there endowed with all qualifications. (And he created such a woman by illusion.) You go and fetch her to me.” Vedaśarman, after saluting his father went to the woman and requested her to become the wife of his father. But, the woman did not want to become the wife of an old man, and she told Vedaśarman that she would love him, and not his father, to have as her husband. He shuddered to be told thus, and by the power of his tapas he got down Indra and other Devas on earth and showed them to her. She then told him in indifferent tone the following: “Yes, I have seen the prowess of your tapas. But, I have nothing to do with Devas. If you want me as wife for your father, please cut off your head with your own hands for my pleasure.” Vedaśarman drew his sword and very happily cut off his head and presented it to the woman. She came to Śivaśarman and requested him to accept his son’s head, which he (son) had voluntarily cut off for the sake of his father.

The other sons of Śivaśarman shuddered at the sight of their brother’s head. They told among themselves thus: “Our mother entered eternal Samādhi, but this brother of ours, who courted death on behalf of father is really blessed.” Then Śivaśarman asked his third son Dharmārman to receive his brother’s head. He received it and went out with it and prayed to Dharmadeva, who, on his appearance, was requested to restore Vedaśarman to life. Dharmadeva did so, and the first question asked by Vedaśarman, who returned to life as though awakened from sleep, was about the woman, whom he had brought as his father’s wife. Then Vedaśarman and Dharmārman returned to their father, and Dharmārman told the father about his bringing back to life his dead brother. Though the father felt very happy about the great devotion of his son he did not answer him (son).

Śivaśarman fell into contemplation for sometime and then told his fourth son, Viṣṇuśarman as follows: “You go immediately to Indraloka and bring amṛta (nectar) for me to drink along with this woman. Nectar removes diseases. Now, this woman has no interest in me. It is only natural that young, beautiful women will feel no love towards an old man and unless I regain my youth this woman of mine may sleep with others. You, my son, should act in such a manner that I can enjoy life with this woman in all the three worlds.

As soon as he heard his father, Viṣṇuśarman, by the power of his tapas ascended to the sky and started for Indraloka. Being told about the object of his visit Indra deputed Menakā to make him withdraw from the plan. Immediately Menakā put on her best clothes and singing sweet music occupied the hanging seat in Nandānavana, and Viṣṇuśarman lost not a minute to divine the object of her presence. Without even casting a look upon her, he hurried forward. But, she jumped down from her seat, blocked his path and made enquiries about him. She also tried to make love to him. But, Viṣṇuśarman turned down her overtures of love. At this stage Indra adopted many magical tricks to frighten away the unwelcome visitor. Angered by such attempts Viṣṇuśarman got ready to destroy Devaloka along with Indra, who then begged pardon of him and handed over to him a pot full of nectar.

When Viṣṇuśarman gave the nectar to his father the latter asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and according to his request the father brought back to life Guṇavatī. Now Śivaśarman very much pleased with his sons sent the first four of them to Viṣṇuśarman. He decided to live for some time more on earth with his youngest son, and he told the latter that he was going on a pilgrimage and asked him to keep the pot of nectar with him. The son kept it very carefully for ten years. Now Śivaśarman with his wife returned from pilgrimage. By magic he had become a leper, and made his wife also a leper. Somaśarman, his youngest son felt pained that his parents had fallen victims to such a fell disease and served them with meticulous care in every way. He foresaw their wants and desires and satisfied them to the full. Yet, the father lost temper with the son and used even to flog him. But, the son did not lose his temper in any manner and to the least degree. He continued to serve his parents most cheerfully.

A century was over in this manner. The parents were greatly satisfied and pleased with their son, and ultimately the father cast one more illusion on the son. After stealing away by magic the nectar from the pot, he asked the son for it. When Somārman looked into the pot for nectar, to his horror it was missing. But, he took the pot to his father saying to himself, ‘Let there be nectar in it if I am truthful, if I have served my elders well and if I have observed pure tapas’, and lo! the pot was filled with nectar.

Śivaśarman blessed his son, and by the power of his yoga ascended to Vaikuntha in the company of his wife.

After this Soma’arman began practising the most intense form of tapas. When the time for his death was near asuras approached him. Fear about asuras gripped him, who was in deep meditation, and as he breathed his last thinking about asuras he was born in his next life as Prahlāda, son of Hiranyakā’ipu and got killed by Viṣṇu in the war between Devas and Asuras. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa).

ŚIVASVĀMĪ. A great poet in Sanskrit in the court of king Avantivarman, who ruled Kashmir between 854 and 864 A.D. Only one poem by him, Kappiṇābhaya- dayam, composed on the model of Kirātārjunīyam, has been unearthed yet.

SIVODBBEDA. A sacred spot. One, who lives here taking the holy bath will derive the benefit of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

SIYALI. A Purānic place in Tanjore District in South India. Indra once fled to this place in fear of the asura called Sūrapadma and did tapas there. (Skanda Purāṇa).

SKANDA. Subrahmanya. (For further details see under Subrahmanya).

SKANDAGRAHA. An evil spirit which afflicts boys up to the age of sixteen. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Stanza 43, that this spirit is also known by the name Mātrikagraha or Puruṣa-graha.

SKANDĀPASMĀRA. A demon derived from the body of Subrahmanyā. This would enter the womb of pregnant women and afflict the child in the womb. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 26).

SKANDHA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of the serpent sacrifice of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 18).

SKANDHĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

SLEŚMAKA (M). (SLEŚMĀTAKAM). A forest. It was when Viśravas, the grandson of Brahman and Kaikasi, the daughter of Sumāli were living in this forest, that Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarna, Viśbhīṣaṇa and Śūrpaṇakāhā were born to them. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrva Kāṇḍa).

ŚIṢṬI. Son of Dhrūva, Dhrūva had two children Śīṣṭi and Succhaṣāyā by his wife Sambhu. Śīṣṭi married Succhāyā. Five sons, Rīpū, Rīpūṇjaya, Purṇya, Vṛkṣāla and Vṛkṣatejas, were born to them. Rīpū, the eldest of them, was the father of Cākṣuṣa Manū, according to Harivāṇa, Chapter 2, Part 2.

SMARADUṬṬI. A maid of Vṛṇḍā, the wife of Jalandhara. (Padma Purāṇa 3:9).

SMRĪṬI. The sovereign deity of remembrance. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 64, that this goddess Smṛīṭi had walked in front of the army of Subrahmanyā. Smṛīṭi was the wife of Aṅgiras. Four daughters, named Sinīvalī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumātī, were born to Aṅgiras by his wife Smṛīṭidevi. (Visṇu Purāṇa, Aṅkā 1, Chapter 10).

SNAṆĀ. Bathing. The Purāṇas have ordered six kinds of bathing. They are Nitya śnaṇā (daily bath), Nāmīttika śnaṇā (incidental bath), Kāmya śnaṇā (Desirable, Kriyā śnaṇā (ceremonial), Kriyāṅga śnaṇā (bathing only the limbs used for rites) and Malakaraṇa śnaṇā (Bathing to drag out excrements). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 155).

SŌBHANA. Son-in-law of Mucukunda. (See Para 3 under Mucukunda).

SODARYAVĀN. A chariot of Indra. The peculiarity of this chariot was that two chariot-fighters could sit and fight at the same time in this. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 12, that Indra had, sitting in this chariot, killed ninety-nine asuras (demons). This chariot passed hands from Indra to Upārīcaravasū; from him to Bhṛhadra, and from this King to Ṛṣabha, on whose death, Indra took possession of it again. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 48).

SŌDAŚARĀJAKA. The story of sixteen famous Kings related by Vyāsa to Yudhīśṭhīra who, after the death of Abhimanyu in the war became averse to fighting. The Kings were (1) Marutta (2) Suhotra (3) Paurava (4) Sibi (5) Śrī Rāma (6) Bhāgīratha (7) Dilipa (8) Māndhātā (9) Yāyāti (10) Ambariṣa (11) Saśābünda (12) Gaya (13) Raṇāteva (14) Bharata (15) Prīthu (16) Parāśurāma. (Droṇa Parva, 16 Chapters from 165).

SOMA I. A son born to fire Bhūnu by his third wife Niṣā, who had given birth to two sons Soma and Agni and a daughter named Rohiṇī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 15).

SOMA II. One of the eight Vasus. The eight Vasus are Āpa, Dhrūva, Soma, Dharmā, Anīla, Pratiyūṣa and Prabhās. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Anīla 1.15).

SOMA III. A son of Jarāsandha. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Jarāsandha had four sons named Soma, Sahadeva, Turya and Śrutaṭrī. SOMA. A celestial maid. This celestial beauty performed a dance at the birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 61).

SOMADATTĀ III. A King of the Kuru dynasty.

1) General information. This King was the son of Bāhlika and the grandson of King Pratīpā. Three sons named Būrī, Būrīrāvas and Śala were born to Somadatta.

2) Other details.

(i) Somadatta and his sons were present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(ii) Somadatta had participated in the royal consecration sacrifice of Yudhīśṭhīra. (M.B. Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(iii) This Somadatta was present at the Svayamvara of Devakī. At that time there occurred a hand to hand fight between Śīni and Somadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 114, Verse 14).

(iv) The defeat from Śīni being unbearable, Somadatta did penance to get power to vanquish him and Śiva appeared before him. Somadatta made the following request:—“God! May I be granted a son who would be powerful enough to kick down the son of Śīni in his palace.” Śiva granted his wish. Būrīrāvas was the son born in conformity with this boon. He grew up and defeated the son of Śīni and kicked him in the palace of the King. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 144.

(v) Somadatta fought against Śātyaki and Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata and fell down unconscious. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 10).

(vi) In the battle which followed this, Śātyaki killed Somadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 162, Verse 33).

SRAJA. An eternal god concerned with offering to the manes (Vivadeva). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 33).

ŚRĀMA. Son of Āpa, one of the Aśvatthas. Āpa had four sons named Vairuṇa, Śrama, Sānta and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aḥī'a 1, Chapter 15).

ŚRĀVĀ. Son of Santa, a Mahārṣi who belonged to Gṛṣsamada's family. He was the father of Tāmas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 63).

ŚRĀVA-. Son of Yuvanāśa, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the father of the King Śrāvasta. (Mahā Bhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).

ŚRĀVANA I. A son of Murāsura. Murāsura had seven sons. They were: Tāmra, Antārīkṣa, Śrāvana, Vasu, Vībhāvasu, Nabhavān and Aruṇa. They were all killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

ŚRĀVANA II. One of the twentysix stars (nākṣatras). Those who perform Śrīdṛddha on the day of this star will attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 11).

ŚRĀvana. See 3rd Para under Daśaratha.

ŚRĀVANADVĀDAŚI. A holy day. Observation of a fast on this day after a bath at the confluence of two rivers is believed to bring Mokṣa.

ŚRĀVASĀUCA. Defilement attached to the flux due to abortion. It is ordered in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 256, how to observe this defilement. It is said that women should observe defilement for as many nights as the number of the months of pregnancy, till the flux. If the flux took place in the fourth month, defilement should be observed for three nights. If it was in the fifth month that the flux had occurred, pollution for ten days would have to be observed. This is meant for Brāhmīns. In the case of a Kṣatriya woman if the flux occurred in the fifth month, she has to observe defilement for four days; and five days for a Vaiśya woman, and eight days for a Śūdra woman. In the case of a Śūdra woman, if the flux is after five months, she has to observe pollution for twelve days. In this stage the father will be purified by a bath.

ŚRĀVASTA. Son of the King Śrāva. (See under Śrāva).

ŚRĀVASTĪPUРА. Capital city of Śrāvasta, King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. It was named "Śrāvastīputra" or "Śrāvastīputra" because it was built by Śrāvasta, according to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 4.

ŚRENĪMĀN. A Rājarṣi. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 51 says that he was the rebirth of the fourth Kālaṅgeya. The following pieces of information about this Rājarṣi are gathered from Mahābhārata:-

(i) Śrenīmān was present at the Svayamīvara of Pañcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 11).

(ii) He ruled over Kumāradsa, Bhīmāseṇa, in the triumphal march of the eastern lands, defeated Śrenīmān. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 1).

(iii) Sahadeva, in his conquest of Southern lands defeated him. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 5).

(iv) In the course of the Bhārata Yuddha, Śrenīmān was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Kāraṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 35).

ŚRGĀLA. A King of the "Śrī rājya". This king had attended the Svayamīvara of the daughter of Cītrāṅgadā, king of Kaliṅga. (Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 7).

ŚRGĀLAVĀSUDEVA. See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 13, Sub Para 5.

ŚRĪBHĀNÜ. A son of Satyabhāma. She had ten sons including Śrībhānu. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

ŚRĪBIMBĀKI. Father of Mrgāṅkavatī. (See under Śrīdatta).

ŚRĪDATTĀ. Son of Kālanemi a Brāhmaṇa of Mālava land. Kālanemi and Vīgatabhāya were the sons of a Brāhmaṇa named Yajñasena. After the death of their father they went to Pātaliputra for education. The teacher gave his two daughters in marriage to them. By the blessing of goddess Lakṣmi, Kālanemi became rich in course of time and he was also blessed with a glorious son. Since he was given by the blessing of Lakṣmi (Śrī) he was named Śrīdatta. Śrīdatta grew up and became an expert in archery. Kālanemi's younger brother, Vīgatabhāya left home and went on a pilgrimage after his wife's death by snake-bite. Kālanemi's king, Vāllabhaśakti was pleased with Śrīdatta and invited him to live in the palace. In this way, he became the intimate friend of the king's son, Vīkrama Sakti. After that, Bāhuśāli and Vajrāmuṣṭhi, the princes of Avanti became the friends of Śrīdatta. Mahābala, Vāyākrahaṇa, Upendrabala and Niṣṭūraka, who were the Minister's sons also sought the protection of Śrīdatta.

One day, Śrīdatta along with Vīkramaṇa and other companions went to bathe to the banks of the Ganges. While they were there, the party of friends began to engage in some amusements. Śrīdatta assumed the role of a king and the others posed as his subjects. Vīkramaṇa, the king's son, could not tolerate it. He challenged Śrīdatta for a fight. In the fight Vīkramaṇa was defeated. But he secretly resolved to kill Śrīdatta by hook or by crook. Śrīdatta understood his secret plan. After leaving Vīkramaṇa, Śrīdatta was walking with the others along the river-bank when he saw a woman struggling for life because she was caught in a whirlpool in the middle of the river. Śrīdatta at once left his companions and jumped into the river and swam up to her. When he was almost within reach of her hair the woman sank into the water. Śrīdatta also sank and followed her, but after some time, he found neither the woman nor even water. He found himself in a Śiva temple. He offered worship there and took rest in a park close by. The next morning a woman came to worship in the temple. When she returned after worship, Śrīdatta followed her. The woman who was alarmed, walked faster and at last reached a heavenly abode. She entered the house and took her seat on a cot inside. Śrīdatta also got in and sat near the cot. Many other women came and stood around her. Without any apparent reason she began to cry. Śrīdatta who was puzzled, asked her why she was crying. She replied to him in the following words:-

"I am the grand-daughter of the Asura king, Mahābali. I am the eldest of his one thousand grand-daughters. My name is 'Vidhyutprabhā'. Viṣṇu has captured and imprisoned our grandfather, Mahābali. He has also killed our father in battle. After that he has expelled us all from our Capital city. To prevent us from entering it again, he has posted a lion as sentry.
at the palace gate. That lion is a Yakṣa who was cursed by Kubera. If any one defeats him, he would be liberated from his curse. By defeating that lion, you will get a divine sword. With that you can defeat anyone."

As soon as he heard this story, Śridatta rushed towards the lion. In the fight that followed, the lion was defeated and it was suddenly transformed into the old Yakṣa. Pleased with the hero who was instrumental in lifting his curse, he gave Śridatta a sword called "Mṛgāṅkaka" and then disappeared. Vidyutprabhā entered the palace, accompanied by her sisters and Śridatta. She gave a ring to Śridatta which had the power to destroy the effects of poison. She fell in love with him. She asked him to take a bath in the tank close by after giving the sword to her, and undertook to kill any crocodile which might attack him. Śridatta, keeping the sword in his own hand, stepped into the water and sank into it. But he rose up in the river Gaṅgā into which he had jumped earlier. He reached the bank of the river and went in search of his companions. On the way, he met with Niṣṭhūraka. In the course of their talk, Niṣṭhūraka informed Śridatta that, Vallabhaśakti passed away and Vikramaśakti was then ruling over the country. The new king had killed Kālanemi and was on the look-out for murdering Śridatta. Both of them resumed their journey and when they reached Ujjayini, they met with the rest of their friends. On their way, a woman joined their party. She had lost her way while going to the land of Mālava. Śridatta and Niṣṭhūraka walked in the company of that woman and at last they arrived at a deserted city. They spent the night in that city. During the night when Śridatta happened to wake up, he saw to his horror, that the woman had killed his friend Niṣṭhūraka and was eating his flesh. Śridatta at once drew his sword and caught hold of her hair and was about to cut off her head when she was transformed into a Rākṣasa woman. She prayed to him not to kill her and told him her story. She had become a Rākṣasa woman by a curse. Long ago Viśvāmitra did tapas to obtain Kubera's place. At that time Kubera sent her to break Viśvāmitra's tapas. Since she failed in her attempts to attract him by her charms, she tried to subdue him by assuming the form of a terrible monster. The sage thereupon cursed her to become a Rākṣasa woman with that figure. He declared that the curse would be lifted when Śridatta grasped her hair. She added that she had been killing and eating the inhabitants of that city for a long time and that explained why the city had become deserted. Now that she was liberated from the curse, she asked Śridatta what boon he wished to have.

He replied that he only wanted his friend to be restored to life. After reviving Niṣṭhūraka, she disappeared. Early next morning they reached Ujjayini. There, they met their old friends, Bāhuśālī and others. Śridatta described to them his experiences after sinking in the Gaṅgā.

Later, once when Śridatta went to a festival, he happened to meet Mṛgāṅkavati, daughter of a King named Śrībimbaki. They fell in love with each other. When she left the place, Śridatta felt very much depressed. Bāhuśālī and others also knew about it. They offered to take him to Mṛgāṅkavati. But just then she fell down unconscious, bitten by a snake. Śridatta soon restored her with the help of the magic ring which Vidyutprabhā had given him earlier. After that he returned with his friends to Bāhuśālī's house, leaving behind the ring with Mṛgāṅkavati. The King who was deeply grateful for the cure of his daughter sent plenty of wealth and gold to Śridatta. But Śridatta gave all of them to Bāhuśālī's father. He was always doting on Mṛgāṅkavati and was much pained at his separation from her. At this stage, the princess's favourite maid came to him on the pretext of returning the magic ring and informed him that Mṛgāṅkavati was also pining for him and was even prepared to die for his sake. Śridatta sent her back with a secret message of love and cheer. After that in consultation with his friends he made a plan to take the princess secretly to Mathurāpuri. On the next day, Bāhuśālī with three of his friends left for Mathurā pretending to go there for trade. He made all arrangements on the way for the secret conveyance of the princess. That night, Śridatta sent a woman and her daughter to the palace after making them senseless with heavy drink and arranged for their sleeping there. As directed by Śridatta, Bāhāvani set the palace on fire and slipped out of the building with the princess. Śrīdatta sent them at once to Mathurāpuri. The woman and her daughter who were burnt alive in the palace were supposed to be the maid and the princess. Śridatta set out to Mathurā to meet Mṛgāṅkavati. On the way he saw several evil omens. On arrival at Vindhyavana, he saw his friends lying helpless, after having been severely beaten up by unknown enemies. They informed him that a stranger leading a powerful army overpowered them and galloped away on horseback, taking the princess with him.

Śridatta immediately started in pursuit of the unknown enemy. Shortly after, he caught sight of the army led by a Kṣatriya prince who was taking Mṛgāṅkavati on horseback with him. After a fierce fight, Śridatta rescued the princess from the youth, captured his horse and rode on it with her towards his friends. When they had gone a short distance, the horse which had been wounded in the battle, fell dead on the way. At that time he went in search of water to quench their thirst, leaving Mṛgāṅkavati at the spot. By the time he returned with water, the sun had set. So he lost his way and wandered about in the forest till day-break when he reached the place where he had left Mṛgāṅkavati. But she was not seen anywhere there. To get a better view of the neighbourhood in the hope of finding her, he climbed to the top of a tree near by, after placing his sword on the ground. Just then a hunter named Śabarā came that way and took up Śridatta's sword. Śridatta saw this, but he got down from the tree and instead of attacking him, merely asked him whether he knew about the whereabouts of Mṛgāṅkavati. To this Śabarā said that he thought that she had reached his cottage and asked Śridatta to accompany his followers to the cottage. He also offered to go with him and promised to return his sword after reaching there. Śridatta reached the cottage with them. Being utterly exhausted, he fell into a deep slumber. When he woke up he found that his legs were chained together. While he was lying thus, a woman named Mocaniṅkā approached him and said:—"Why did you come here to court death? Śabarā has now gone out on some business. As soon as he returns he will offer you as a sacrifice to Bhadrakāli. It is for that purpose that he has brought you here and put in chains. But there is yet one way of escape for you. This Šabarā has a very beautiful daughter. She has fallen in love with you. If you marry her everything will turn out well.'

For his own safety, Šridatta married Šabarā's daughter according to the Gandharva method. Shortly after, she became pregnant. Her maid Mocanikā informed her mother all about it. That kind and affectionate mother came to Šridatta and said:—"Šabarā is a very cruel man. If he comes to know of this, he will never forgive you. Therefore you must leave the place at once, but you should never forget my daughter." With these words she took leave of Šridatta. Šridatta disclosed the story of that sword to her and started on his journey again, in search of Mrgāṅkavati. From a hunter whom he happened to meet on the way, he came to know that she was living in a place called Nāgasthala near Mathurā, under the protection of Viṣvadatta, the Brāhmaṇa.

Šridatta at once went to Viṣvadatta's house and made enquiries about his wife. Viṣvadatta informed him that he had entrusted her with a Brāhmaṇa who was the minister and priest of King Śūrasena. He suggested that Šridatta should stay with him that day and they could proceed to Śūrasena's place next morning. Šridatta accordingly stayed there and started for Mathurā at day-break on the next day. On the way he took bath in a tank just outside the city. While bathing he happened to get a silk cloth and a necklace of beads from the bed of the tank. After his bath, he entered the city with the silk and necklace. Mistaking him for a thief, the police arrested him. Really the silk and necklace had been hidden in the tank by thieves. Šridatta was produced before the King with the stolen articles. The King condemned him to death. Mrgāṅkavati who was staying in the custody of the minister happened to see Šridatta being taken to the place of execution. She immediately ran up to the minister and told him that Šridatta was her husband. When the King came to know it, he ordered him to be brought back to the palace. As soon as Šridatta saw the minister, he felt certain doubts about his identity. The minister had a striking resemblance to his father's brother Vigatabhaya who had left home years ago. His doubts were confirmed when the minister revealed his identity and the two embraced each other after their long separation. Šridatta narrated the whole story of his sufferings and misfortunes beginning from the murder of Kālanemi up to that time. On hearing his tragic story, the minister burst into tears and told him that he had received a boon from a Yakṣi by which he had obtained 5000 horses and plenty of wealth. All this he gave to Šridatta and his wife.

The king of that country had a daughter. Šridatta's next plan was to marry her also. Vigatabhaya gave him the necessary help. The minister took her with Šridatta and his friends on the pretext of offering worship at the temple in Avanti. They had to encounter a band of robbers on the Vindhya mountain. Šridatta was overpowered and the robbers plundered all their wealth. Vigatabhaya and others were captured. Šridatta was taken to be sacrificed to Bhadrakāli. When he was about to be sacrificed, his wife, the daughter of Šabarā arrived there with her son. It was within the territory of Śrīcāṇḍa. She stopped the robbers from performing the sacrifice and returned to her own house with Šridatta. The Čandāla band took Vigatabhaya and others to Šridatta and they were released. After the death of King Šabarā, Šridatta became the King of that wood. He got back his sword Mrgāṅkaka. He married the daughter of Śūrasena. Šridatta's friends also came there. All of them joined together and killed Vikramaśakti in a battle. After that Šridatta was crowned king of the whole country up to the ocean. (Katha-sarasītāgara, Kathāmahakalabaka, Tārānīga 2).

ŚRĪDEVĀ. Daughter of King Devaka. This princess was married by Vasudeva. They had six sons including Nandaka. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 1.18).

ŚRĪDHARA. A king who lived in Tretāyuga. (For more information see under Varatānu).

ŚRIKRŚNA. See under Kṛṣṇa.

ŚRIKUNDĀ. A holy place. If one worships Brahmā at this holy place famous in the three worlds, one would get the benefit of the gift of a thousand cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 85).

ŚRIKUNDALA. Son of the Vaiśya Hemakundāla. (See Para 2 under Yamanu).

ŚRIKUNJA. A Sarasvati tirtha situated in Kurukṣetra. By bathing in this tirtha, one gets the same reward as by performing an Agniṣṭoma yajña. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 105).

ŚRIKUMBHIAGAVADGĪTA PARVA. A sub-division of Bhīṣma Parva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 15 to 42 of Bhīṣma Parva, are included in it.

ŚRĪMĀN. Son of Nimi, who was the son of Dattātreya.

ŚRĪMĀṬĀ. An aspect of Devi who incarnated to kill the Rākṣasa named Karṇāṭaka who used to abduct the wives of Mahārīs in the disguise of a Brāhmaṇa. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3:2: 16-18).

ŚRĪMĀṬI I. A Gandharva maid. In Kamba Rāmāyana, Yuddhakāṇḍa there is a story associating this Gandharva maid with the churning of the ocean of milk:-

A Gandharva maid named Śrīmati who had acquired incomparable proficiency in music used to sing hymns in praise of Lakṣmi-devi. Devi appeared before her and presented a garland of Kalpaka flowers to Śrīmati. As she was returning with the garland, she met sage Durvāsas on the way. She offered the garland to him. Durvāsas who reached Devaloka with the garland gave it to Indra. Indra used it for adorning the tusk of Airāvata. Airāvata who was annoyed at it threw it away in a fury. Durvāsas took it as a personal insult to him and in his rage cursed all the gods to be subjected to the infirmities of old age. It is to save them from the effects of old age that the ocean of milk was churned to obtain Amṛta. (For more details see under Amṛta).

ŚRĪMĀṬI II. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 3).

ŚRIPIRAVAṬA. A sacred mountain. Those who go to this mountain and offer worship to Śaṅkara after bathing in the forest rivers get the same reward as from an Aśvamedhayāga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 18).

ŚRĪ RĀMĀ. See under Rāma.

ŚRĪ RĀMĀKRŚṆA PARAMAHAMSĀ.

A great thinker who shed new light on Indian spiritual philosophy. He was born on February 18, 1836 in a village called Kumārpukkūr. His father was Kuḍhirām Cāṭopādhyāya and his mother was Candrādevī.
SRITIRTHA. A holy place in Kuruksetra. In Mahabhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 46 it is stated that by bathing and worshipping gods and pitris at this holy place, one would be blessed with issues.

SRIVAHA. A nāga who was born to Kāśyapaprajapāti by his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 13).

SRIVATSA. A mole on Mahāviṣṇu’s chest. (For more details see under Bhṛgu).

SRMARA. A young deer. Mrgamandā daughter of Kāśyapa gave birth to Rkṣas (Bears) Śrmaras (young deer) and Camaras (a kind of deer called Bos grunniens). (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa Aranyya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

SRNGA. Siva’s special musical instrument. (M.B Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 8).

SRNGARAVALLI. Mother of Kambar the celebrated Tamil poet and author of Rāmāyaṇa.

SRNGAVĀN I. 1) General. A mountain. It is situated to the north of the region called “Iḷāvṛtra”. Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha refers to three mountains—Nilagiri, Śvetagiri, and Śrīgavān—which are the sources of many rivers and which stand at intervals of 2,000 miles.

2) Other details
(i) Arjuna crossed this mountain and entered Kurushara in the course of his triumphal campaign over the northern land.
(ii) This mountain is rich in minerals, is of outstanding brilliance, and is the abode of Siddhas and Ćārāṇas. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 5).
(iii) Śaṅjaya spoke at length about this mountain to Dhiṭtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8).
(iv) This mountain is glorious enough to be remembered with reverence at dawn and dusk. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 32).

SRNGAVĀN II. An ancient sage. He was the son of Gālava. He married by force, a woman named Vṛdhakanyā. After a night’s married life, Vṛdhakanyā departed. The sage then renounced everything and followed her. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 82).

SRNGAVAVERA. A nāga born in Kauravyakula. This nāga was burnt up in Janamejaya’s Sarpasatras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 13).

SRNGAVERAPURA. A sacred place. Guha, ruler of this place ferried Rāma and Lakṣmana across the river Gangā. It became a holy spot by the touch of Śrī Rāma’s feet. (See under Guha).

SRNGAVIṢA. A sage. In Rgveda, Manḍala 8, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 13, it is mentioned that Indra was born from the stomach of this sage.

SRNGERI. A Maṭh was founded here by Śaṅkarācārya. (See under Śaṅkarācārya).

SRNGI. The young sage who cursed Parīḵṣīṭ. (See the 3rd para under Parīḵṣīṭ).

SRṆIYAYA I. 1) Genealogy. See under Somadatta.
2) General information. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śvīti. This king Śvīti was also called Śvitya King. On the death of his father Śṛṇjayaya became king.

The hermits Nārada and Parvata were friends of Śṛṇjayaya. Once both of them came and lived in the palace of the King as his guests. Śṛṇjayaya had a beautiful daughter named Śucismitā. Both Nārada and Parvata loved her. One day Nārada directly asked Śṛṇjayaya, for the hand of his daughter. Parvata got angry at this and cursed Nārada that he would not attain heaven. Nārada retorted with the same curse. Śṛṇjayaya pacified both.

Śṛṇjayaya had no sons. He informed the hermits of this sad state. Nārada blessed the king and said that a son named Suvarṇapāthivī would be born to him and that with his birth everything in the palace would become golden. Accordingly the son Suvarṇapāthivī was born to Śṛṇjayaya and everything in the palace became golden. When the son became four years old, by the sorcery of Indra the child died. Nārada brought him to life again. (See under Suvarṇapāthivī).

The fact that gold was accumulating in the palace of Śṛṇjayaya due to the boon given to Suvarṇapāthivī, reached the ears of robbers. One night they carried the child away, and killed him. Then only did they come to understand that there was no gold inside him. Śṛṇjayaya cried aloud at the loss of his son. To pacify the King, Nārada and Parvata told him stories of sixteen kings. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55).

3) Other details
(i) Śṛṇjayaya sits in the palace of Yama, praising him. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).
(ii) When Nārada told the King the stories of sixteen Kings, his sorrow subsided. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 4).
(iii) By the power of Nārada Śṛṇjayaya’s son was brought to life again. (Drona Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 8).
(iv) Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Dharmaputra the story of Śṛṇjayaya, with a view to pacify him. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 29).
(v) Śṛṇjayaya had never eaten flesh in his life. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

SRṆIYAYA II. A royal hermit. This royal hermit was the father of the mother of Ambā, the princess of Kāśi, and a friend of Paraśurāma. At the request of Ambā who had been forsaken by Sālva, Śṛṇjayaya first approached Paraśurāma and then saw Bhīma and persuaded him to marry Ambā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 175, Stanzas 15 to 27).

SRŚTI (CREATION). The Indian theory of creation is given below:

1) Triṇīguṇas (The three attributes). The base of the universe is the set of the three attributes. They are Sattva (purity), Rajas (passion) and Tamas (inertia). Only things which could be seen, possess these three attributes. Things which could be seen are perishable. The indestructible could not be seen. Shape or form is an attribute. God has no form. So god is without attributes. The God devoid of attributes can be realised by knowledge, but cannot be seen with the ordinary eyes. The three attributes have a power each. Knowledge is the power of Sattva, activity, the power of Rajas and reason the power of Tamas.

2) The five elements. From the divine power of Tamas, five senses came into being, such as sound, touch, form, taste and smell. Sound is the attribute of ether; touch, the attribute of air; form, the attribute of fire; taste, the attribute of water; and smell, the attribute of earth. These are the minute senses or essentials. These five senses having the divine powers, joined together with the five minute essentials, make up the attribute of Tamas.
From the attribute of Sattva having the power of knowledge, the ten essentials, such as air, the Sun, Pāṇi (Varuṇa) two Aśvinī-gods, Candra (Moon), Brahmā, Rudra, Kṣetrajña and mind, came into being. From these essentials the formation of five matters took place. They are the five elements. When vigour enters the quintupled elements, egoism is given a form. This vigour with perceptible body is called Ādi Nārāyaṇa (Primordial Nārāyaṇa). Anyhow, quintupled elements will be bright with firm attributes. Ether has the attribute of sound only. Air has the attributes of sound and touch. Fire has the three attributes of sound, touch and form. Water has the four attributes of sound, touch, form and taste, and earth has the five attributes of sound, touch, form, taste and smell. The variegated expression of these five elements is called the universe. It is stated in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, that the number of species of living beings found in the universe is eighty-four lakhs.

3) The embodied three (Trinity). It has been mentioned in the last section how the three attributes came into existence and how the five elements originated from the three attributes and how vigour or energy acted upon the five elements and Ādi Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu came into being. In this section the birth of the three divine figures is being dealt with.

In the known beginning, on the surface of the wide waters, covering the universe made of the five elements, Mahāvīṣṇu lay on a banyan tree, as a child. “Who am I? How was I made, and what for? What have I to do?”, and so on were the thoughts of the child. Instantly a voice from the ether fell into his ears saying, “I am everything. There is nothing external except me.” Mahāvīṣṇu lay contemplating on the voice he heard, when Mahādevi appeared before Mahāvīṣṇu and said thus:—“Lo! Mahāvīṣṇu! Whenever the universe required creation, preservation and destruction, by the potentiality of the Omnipotence or the Brahman with no attributes, you too had taken origin. I understand that the Omnipotence is beyond attributes. We all are within the purview of attributes. Your attribute mainly is Sattva. From your navel, will be born Brahmā with Rajas as his main attribute and from the forehead of that Brahmā, Śiva with Tamas as his main attribute will be born. By the power of penance, Brahmā will acquire the power of creation and with the help of the attribute of rajas, he will create a world of the colour of blood. You will be the protector and preserver of that world, and at the end of the Kalpa (world-age) Śiva will destroy that world, I am that power of purity, which stands as help and assistance to you in creation.” Accordingly, Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu and Śiva was born from the forehead of Brahmā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) Creation. Sprouts, Animals and Humanity. After the birth of the Trinity, while Brahmā was contemplating on creation, some creations of the attribute of Tamas originated from him unknowingly. It was Avidyā (Ignorance), having inertia, desire, great desire, darkness and great darkness as its five branches. That god continued his contemplation. Then five kinds of immovables without the power of knowledge or brightness in and out alike, and with souls covered with darkness, originated. As these immovables are said to be prominent, the creation of them is called prominent creation. These are called Sprouts (Uddhāvus). Seeing that this creation was not sufficient, the god again sat in contemplation. This time animals having horizontal back bones and organs of sense were created. They were called tiryaksrotas, as they walked horizontally. They, such as cow etc. are having more of the attributes of darkness and less of knowledge. They traverse wrong paths due to lack of knowledge though they think otherwise. Egoism, pride and twenty-eight kinds of incapacities are their qualities. Though they possess knowledge inwardly they do not know each other. Thinking that this creation also was not sufficient, Brahmā again engaged himself in contemplation, and there came out another creation. It was called Urdhvāsrotas (flowing upwards). This third creation having the attribute mainly of Sattva moved in a lofty level. Those who were born in this creation, desired for comfort and pleasure and were with the light of knowledge inwardly and outwardly. When the third creation called Devas (creation of gods) originated from Brahmā he grew happy and contented. Even after creating thus much, Brahmā did not feel satisfaction. So he made the creation of Aṛvākṣrotas (moving downwards). The creations of this group were having the attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas in an advanced degree. So they are miserable and full of activity. They are human beings. Thus having completed the creation of Uddhāvus, Tiryaksrotas, and Aṛvākṣrotas, Brahmā passed on to the creation of heavenly beings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1; Chapter 5).

5) Creation. Night, Day, Evening, Morning. After this Brahmā again sat in contemplation for water-creation which is the creation of Devas, Asuras, Piśācs and Manusyas (Gods, Demons, the Manes and Man). As he was sitting in contemplation, the attribute of Tamas (inertia) advanced in him and the asuras (demons) were born from his loins. Then Brahmā discarded the figure of Tamas in him. That discarded figure of darkness became the night. Next, from the face of Brahmā, the Devas (gods) were born. They were having the attribute of Sattva (purity). Brahmā discarded that figure of purity also. That figure became the bright day. So the asuras are powerful in the night and the Devas are powerful in the day. After this, the manes were born from Brahmā. They were also discarded. They became the evening between the day and night. Then Brahmā assumed the figure having the attribute of Rajas. From this, man, who was having more of the attribute of rajas was born. Brahmā discarded that figure also. It became a very shining thing which is called the Dawn. So men are powerful in the dawn and the manes are powerful in the evening. The four creations of Day, Night, Evening and the Dawn are considered to be the bodies of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1; Chapter 5).

6) Creation. Rākṣasas (Giants), Tākṣas (Demi-gods), Serpents, Devis, Gandharvas. Brahmā again assumed another figure having the attribute of Rajas. Due to this Brahmā felt hungry. Along with hunger desire also grew in him. Then the Prajāpati (Lord of Emanation) sat in the darkness and created some creatures which were very hungry. Uncouth with plenty of hair on the face, they ran towards Brahmā. Of them those who said, ‘don’t do so, save him’ became Rākṣasas (giants). Those who said ‘We will eat him’, became Yakṣas (demi-gods). Because of Yakṣa (Wakṣa-Food), they got the name Yakṣa. Because of the dislike at seeing these creatures the hair had fallen from the head of Brahmā. They crept back again into his head. Because they did ‘sarpaṇa’ (creeping up) they were called sarpas (serpents) and as they were ‘Hina’ (fallen) they were called Abhis (serpents). After this the Lord of creation became very angry and created some creatures. Because of their colour which was a mingling of red and black, they were horrible and they became pītiśānas (those who eat flesh). Then Brahmā began to sing and from his body the Gandharvas were born. Because they did ‘dhayana’ (Appreciate) of ‘go’ (word) when they were born, they were called Gandharvas.

7) Creation. Birds, animals. After creating all these creatures, Brahmā created birds, from his ‘vayas’ (strength), as free agents, according to their actions in the previous lives. Then Brahmā created sheep from his breast and goats from his face. From his stomach and flanks he created cows, and from his legs he created other creatures such as the horse, elephant, donkey, wild bull, deer, camel, mule, antelope etc. He created plants bearing fruits and bulbs from his hairs. Though Brahmā had created vegetables and animals at the beginning of the Kālpa (world-age), they came to be properly used in sacrifices only from Tretāyuga (one of the four ages) The animals such as the cow, sheep, goat, horse, mule and donkey are called domestic animals and flesh-eaters such as the leopard, animals with forked hoof such as the wild bull, elephant, monkey, birds, and other animals and reptiles, are included in the word ‘wild animals’.

8) Creation-The Vedas etc. After having completed creation of the things mentioned above, the Prājāpati created from his face looking to the east, the Vedic metre Gāyatri, Ṛgveda, Trirṣistoma, the sāma song called Rathantara and the sacrifice called Agniṣṭoma; from his face looking to the south, Yajurveda, the Vedic metre Trayāṭubha, Paṇḍavasāma. Brāhatsāma and the sacrifice Ukha; from his face looking to the west, Sāmaveda, the Vedic metre Jagati, Saptadāstostoma, Vairūpāsāma and the sacrifice Atriātra. Thus all the creatures lofty and lower originated from the body of Brahmā. After having created Devas, Asuras, the manes and men, Brahmā again at the beginning of the world-age, created Yakṣas, Devils, Gandharvas, celestial maids, Naras, Kinnaras, Rakṣas, cows, birds, animals, serpents etc. such as have long life and short life, movable and immovable, that we see in the world. Creatures which are created again and again do perform functions which creatures of their kind had been doing previously. Habits of killing or not killing, kindness or cruelty, righteousness or evil, truth or falsehood are adopted by them as becoming to their kind in previous lives. It was Brahmā who had created the uses and differences seen in the sense organs, elements and bodies. Brahmā took from the Vedic voice the shape, form, name, activities etc. of various creatures such as the Devas etc. and allotted them to each particular kind. So also he allotted names, work etc. to hermits as seen in the Vedas.

9) Creation of the four castes. See under Čaturvaṁśya.

10) Creation of Prājāpatis. When Brahmā saw that the subjects he had created, did not flourish, he created first the Sanaka brothers and the mental sons of Bhṛgu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kṛatu, Anūgiras, Marīcī, Daśā, Atri and Vasiṣṭha, and gave these nine the name Prājāpatis (Lords of Emanation). Then he created nine women named Khyāti, Būti, Sambhūti, Kṣāma, Pṛiti, Sannatī, Urjā, Anasūya, and Prasūti and gave in marriage Khyāti to Bhṛgu, Būti to Pulastya, Sambhūti to Pulaha, Kṣāma to Kṛatu, Pṛiti to Anūgiras, Sannatī to Marīcī, Urjā to Daśā, Anasūya to Atri and Prasūti to Vasiṣṭha. The great hermits such as Sanandana, and the others created before the Prājāpatis, were not desirous of propagation as they were wise sages who had renounced all attachments and who had been indifferent. When Brahmā saw that they were not mindful about producing subjects he grew angry. (It was from the middle of the eye brows which were curved by his fury, that Śiva, one of the three divine figures was born). After this, Brahmā appointed Śvāyambhuva, who originated from himself, and was of the same shape, as the first Manu for the protection of the subjects. This divine Manu Śvāyambhuva took his sister Satarūpā as wife. Two sons named Priya-vrata and Uttanāpāda and two daughters named Prasūti and Ākūti were born to them. Of the two daughters Prasūti was given to Prājāpati Daśā and Ākūti to Prājāpati Ruci. A son named Yajñā and a daughter named Daśāni were born as twins to Prājāpati Ruci. Twelve sons were born to Yajñā by Daśāni. They were devas named the Yamas of the Manvantara of Śvāyambhuva. Daśāni begot twentyfour daughters of Prasūti. They were Śraddhā, Lakṣmi, Dṛṣṭi, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhā, Lajjā, Vapuṣ, Sāntī, Siddhi, Kṛtī, Khyāti, Śati, Sambhūti, Śmrī, Pṛiti, Kṣāma, Santatī, Anasūya, Ārjā, Śvāhā and Svadhā. Of these the first thirteen were given to Dharmadeva as wives. Of the remaining daughters, Khyāti became the wife of Bhṛgu, Śatī, the wife of Śiva, Sambhūti of Marīcī, Śmrī, of Anūgiras, Pṛiti of Pulastya, Kṣāma of Pulaha, Santatī of Kṛatu, Anasūya of Atri, Ārjā of Vasiṣṭha, Śvāhā of Agni, and Svadhā of the manes. (Visū Purāṇa, Aśā 1; Chapter 7).

11) The children of the Prājāpatis. To Prājāpati Bhṛgu, Lakṣmi who became the wife of Viṣṇu and two sons named Dhātā and Vihātā were born by Khyāti. These two married Ayati and Niṣyati the two daughters of Meru. To the two couples two sons named Praṇa and Mrkanḍu were born. From Mrkanḍu, Mrkanḍeya was born, and from Mrkanḍeya, Vedaśiras was born. To Prāṇa a son named Dyutimān and to him a son named Rājavān was born. From this Rājavān the Bhṛgu dynasty grew up.

Sambhūti the wife of Marīcī gave birth to a son named Paurṇamāsa. To Anūgiras four daughters named Sinivāli, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati were born by Śmrī. Three sinless sons named Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya were born to Atri by Anasūya. Of them Dattātreya was a hermit. A son named Dattoli was born to Pulastya by Pratīti (Prīti). That Dattoli was the Agastyā of Śvāyambhuva Manvantara. Kṣāma the wife of Pulaha gave birth to three sons named Kardama, Urvāryān and Sāhiṣu. Santatī the wife of Kṛatu, gave birth to sixty thousand hermits called Bālkhiyās. Seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Ārdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Ṣukra were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Urjā. These sons were the seven hermits of the third Manvantara. Three bright sons Pāvaka Pavamāna and Śuci were born to god Agni (fire) by his wife Svāhā. Fortyfive sons were born to them. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aśāka, Chapter 10).

12) Creation—Living things. Creations of Sprouts, animals, Men, Devas, Daivas and so on have been dealt with. But all these creations were pertaining to the world of gods only. Sprouts and animals were born in the earth only from Prājapati Kaśyapa, the son of Mārici.

Prājapati Kaśyapa married Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmā, Krodhavāsa, Manu and Anālā, the eight daughters of Dakṣa. From Aditi, the Devas, Ādiyaś, Vaas and the Rudras were born. Daityas were born from Diti and Dānavas from Danu. The asuras Naraka and Kāla were born to Kālikā. Five daughters named Kraunḍi, Bhāsi, Śyeni, Dhartrāṣṭri and Śuki were born to Tāmā. Owls were born from Kraunḍi. Bhāsi gave birth to the Bhāsas. Hawks and Vultures were born from Śyeni; Swans, geese and ruddy geese were born from Dhartrāṣṭri. Natā was born from Śuki and Vinatā was born from Natā. Ten daughters named Mṛgī, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śardāli Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadrū were born to Krodhavāsa. Mṛgī gave birth to animals. From Mrgamandā, bears, young deer and Bos grunniens were born. Lions and monkeys were the sons of Hari. A daughter named Iravati was born to Bhadramatā. Airāvata was the son of Iravati. Elephants were born from Mātaṅgī. Tigers were born from Śardāli. The eight elephants supporting the globe were born from Śvetā. Two daughters named Rohiṇī and Gandharvī were born to Surabhi. Cattle were born from Rohiṇī, and horses were born from Gandharvī. Surasā gave birth to Naṅgas (serpents) and Kadrū gave birth to Uragas (reptiles). Men were born from Manu. The trees were born from Anālā. Garuḍa and Aruṇa were born from Vinatā. Sampāti and Jaṭāyu were the sons of Aruṇa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(Facts about creation seen in various Purāṇas do not agree with each other. This essay is based on facts gathered from various Purāṇas. So disagreements may occur in it.)

ŚRUTA I. Son of Bhīmasena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ŚRUTA II. A King of the Solar dynasty. Bhīgavata, 9th Skandha refers to him as the son of Subhāśaṇa and father of Jaya.

ŚRUTA III. A King belonging to Bharata’s dynasty. He was the son of Dharmacatra and father of Drjhasena. (Bhīgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTA IV. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa by Kaṇḍiṇī. (Bhīgavata, 10th Skandha).

ŚRUTADHVAYA. A brother of King Viṛāṭa. He was a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. Viṛāṭa’s brothers were—Gajāṅka, Śrutāṅka, Virabhadrā, Sudarśana, Śrutadhvaya, Bālāṅka, Jayāṅka, Jayapriya, Viṃśa, Labdhalaṅka, Jayāśva, Rathavāhana, Candrodaya and Kāmaratha. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 41).

ŚRUTADEVA. A devotee of Śri Kṛṣṇa. In Bhīgavata, 10th Skandha it is stated that once he had described the story of Śri Kṛṣṇa.

ŚRUTADEVI. A sister of Vasudeva, father of Śri Kṛṣṇa. Vasudeva had five sisters who were—Māhīṇī, Prthvī, Śrutadevi, Śrutakirti and Śrutāravas. (Bhīgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTAHVA. A King who was on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Aśvatthāmā at the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 82).

ŚRUTAKARMĀ. Son of Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas.

Other details:

(i) Śrutakarmā fought a duel with Sudarśana on the first day of Bhārata battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(ii) Durmukha defeated Śrutakarmā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 35).

(iii) He fought a duel with Citrasena’s son. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 27).

(iv) Śrutakarmā killed Sala. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 10).

(v) He killed Citrasena, King of Abhisāra. (M.B. Karpa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 1).

(vi) He fought against Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Karpa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 13).

(vii) Śrutakarmā killed Devavṛddhakumāra. (M.B. Karpa Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 18).

(viii) Aśvatthāmā killed Śrutakarmā in Bhārata battle. (M.B. Saṃpūtika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 50).

ŚRUTAKARMĀ. (ŚRUTAKIRTI). A son of Arjuna. (See under Śrutakirti II).

ŚRUTAKIRTI I. Wife of Śatrughna. Rāma married Sītā; Bharata married Māṇḍavi; Lakṣmaṇa married Ulīmil, and Śatrughna married Śrutakirti. Of these Sītā was the daughter of Janaka and the other three were the daughters of Jānaka’s younger brother, Kuśadhvaya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālāṅka).

ŚRUTAKIRTI II. A son of Arjuna. Pāṇḍalī had five sons by the five Pāṇḍavas. Of these Pratīvindhyā was the son of Yuddhishthira; Śrutakirti was the son of Bhīmāsenā; Śrutakirti was the son of Arjuna; Śrutakarmā was the son of Sahadeva and Satāṅkī was the son of Nakula. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278). Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127 mentions that this Śrutakirti was born from a portion of Viśvadeva. In the Bhārata battle he had fought against Jayatsena and the son of Duṣṭāsana. In the end he died by the arrow of Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Saṃpūtika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 61).

ŚRUTAKIRTI III. See under śrutadevi.

ŚRUTANĪBHA. A King of solar dynasty. He was the son of Bhagiratha and father of Śindhubhīṣṭa. (Bhīgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTANIKA. A brother of King Viṛāṭa. He was a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 41).

ŚRUTAJAYA. Brother of Susrāma, the king of Trigarta. He was slain by Arjuna in the course of Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Karpa Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 12).

ŚRUTANTA (CITRANGA). A son of Dṛtrāṣṭra. He was slain in Kurukṣetra in his fight with Bhīmāsenā. (M.B.Śāya Parva, Chapter 26).

ŚRUTARVA (ŚRUTARVĀ). A King who lived at the time of Agastya. Once the sage Agastya approached him for some wealth. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 98 there is a story of how the king solved the problem by presenting the accounts of his income and expenditure to Agastya and convincing him that he was unable to oblige the sage.

SRUTARVA (SRUTARVA) II. One of the hundred sons of Dhritarashtra. In the course of the Bhārata battle he attacked Bhīmasena with twelve of his brothers and in the battle which followed Srutarva was killed, by Bhīmasena. Among the Kauravas, Srutarva was one of the mighty archers. The terrible battle fought against Bhīmasena under his leadership alarmed the other warriors. (M.B. Sāntī Parva, Chapter 26)

SRUTARYA. A sage. In Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sāktar 132, there is a passage which says that the Asvinīdevas once turned a river into honey and pleased sage Vasīṣṭha and protected two sages Srutarya and Narya.

SRUTASENA I. A brother of King Janamejaya. In Mahābhārata, there is a reference to an incident in which Srutasesa beat a dog which entered the place where Janamejaya was performing his Yāga. (For further details see under Srutasravas III)

SRUTASENA II. Younger brother of the serpent Tašaka. There is a reference to this Nāga in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 141.

SRUTASENA III. Son of Sahadeva. He is also known as Śrutakarmā. (See under Śrutakarmā.)

SRUTASENA IV. An asura. Garuḍa killed this asura. (See also under Śrutarṣi.)

SRUTASRAVAS V. A warrior on the Kaurava side. He was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10)

SRUTASRAVAS I. A sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father Vasudeva. (See under Śrutadevi.)

SRUTASRAVAS II. A king of Magadhā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha.)

SRUTASRAVAS III. A Mahārṣi. He had a son named Somaśravas. There is the following story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, about the way in which these two sages came to be associated with King Janamejaya.

Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, along with his brothers performed an elaborate Yāga at Kurukṣetra. His three brothers were Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. While they were performing the Yāga, a dog which was the son of Saramā came there. Janamejaya's brothers attacked the dog without any provocation. Saramā became angry and she cursed Janamejaya. The curse frightened him. After the Yāga he reached Hastināpura and went out in search of a priest who would be able to liberate him from the curse.

Once, as he was returning from a hunt, he happened to come across an āśrama within his country. A sage named Śrutāsraivas lived there. He had a son named Somaśravas. Janamejaya invited Somaśravas to be his priest. At that time Śrutāsraivas said to him: "This my son was born to a serpent-woman and he is endowed with the power of my austerity. He is capable of releasing you from all sins except Mahādevakṛtya." If a Brāhmaṇa prays to him for anything, the prayer would be fulfilled. If you can set it right, you may take him with you."

Janamejaya agreed and took Somaśravas with him to the palace. He made him priest and completed the Yāga. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 58 states that Śrutāsraivas was also a member of Janamejaya's Yāga.

He was among the sages who attained Siddhi (superhuman powers) by performing tapas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 292, Verse 16)

SRUTASRAVAS IV. A Rājaśi. He remains in Yama's assembly, offering worship to Yama. (Mahābhārata, Sābbhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9)

SRUTASRAVAS V. Wife of Damaghośa King of Cedi. She was the sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father and mother of Śiṣupāla. She requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa (who came to her place after Śiṣupāla's birth) not to kill Śiṣupāla. Śrī Kṛṣṇa agreed to forgive Śiṣupāla's wrongs a hundred times. (For further details, see under Śiṣupāla.)

SRUTÂŚRĪ. An asura. Garuḍa killed this asura. Once Garuḍa happened to go to Indraloka and he began to brag about his own greatness. He claimed that he had killed Śrutāśrī, Śrutasesa, Vipasvā, Rucānāmukha, Kālaka, Ahar, Pratuta and other Asuras. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 12)

SRUTÂVATI. Daughter of Bharadvāja Muni. Once Bharadvāja happened to see the Apsārā woman Ghrītacī and he had an involuntary emission of semen. Śrutāvati was born from that semen. She observed an austere tapas with the object of getting Indra as her husband. (For more information see Para 30 under Indra.)

SRUTÂYAJÑA. A king who belonged to Bhārata Vaniśa. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha states that he was the son of Karmanīt and grandson of Vivānava.

SRUTÂYUDHA. A king of the Kaliṅga land. He was the son of Varuṇa by Parṇāśa. (M.B. Sābbhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 34).

In Bhārata battle he took his stand on the Kaurava side and at first clashed with Bhīmasena. Even at the beginning of the battle, Bhīma killed Satya and Satyadeva, two of the assistants of Śrutāyudha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 69). In the end, he used his cudgel—which was given to him by Varuṇa—against Śrī Kṛṣṇa who did not take part in the battle at all. Śrutāyudha died by his own Cudgel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 43-48). (See also under Śrutāyus II)

SRUTÂYUS I. A son of Purūravas. (See under Purūravas.)

SRUTÂYUS II. (SRUTÂYUDHA.) A Kaliṅga king.

1) Birth. Śrutāyus was son of Varuṇa by Parṇāśa. (For more details see under Parṇāśa).

2) Other details.

(i) He was a member of Yudhiṣṭhīra's assembly. (M.B. Sābbhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

(ii) Śrutāyus participated in Yudhiṣṭhīra's Rājasūya yajña and presented precious stones to him. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sābbhā Parva, Chapter 51).

(iii) He had attended Draupadi's Svayānvara. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 13).

(iv) In Bhārata Yuddha, he joined the Kaurava camp and assumed command of an Aṣṭauḥīpi (a division of the army). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 16).

(v) A fierce fight took place between Śrutāyus and Bhīmasena in the field of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 67).

(vi) In the above battle, Satya and Satyadeva who were the supporters of Śrutāyus, were slain by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 76).
(vii) Another battle was fought between Śrutāyus and Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).
(viii) Śrutāyus was killed by his own cudgel. (Maḥabhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 54). (See also under Śrutāyuḍha).

ŚRUTĀYUS III. A Kṣatriya king. He was born from a portion of the Daitya, Krodhavāsa. We get the following details about him from Maḥabhārata:
(i) Śrutāyus was the re-birth of Krodhavāsa, the Daitya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 64).
(ii) Śrutāyus, who was a Maḥāratha (a great warrior) was present at the Svyāṇvāra of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 21).
(iii) This Śrutāyus was a member of Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 28).
(iv) On the first day of Bhārata battle there was a clash between Śrutāyus and Irāvān. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).
(v) He was the King of Ambaśṭha country. In the Bhārata battle he encountered Arjuna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 73).
(vi) It was this Śrutāyus who stood in the middle portion of the Krauṇḍa Vṛuṇa formed by Bhīṣma in the above battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 73, Verse 22).
(vii) Yudhiṣṭhira defeated Śrutāyus. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 1).
(viii) At Kurukṣetra, Arjuna killed Śrutāyus in the battle. Arjuna had to fight a fierce battle in order to kill Śrutāyus. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 98).

ŚRUTĀYUS IV. A warrior who fought on the Kaurava side. He was the brother of the hero Ayutāyus. In Bhārata battle both these brothers joined the Kauravas. Both were assigned the task of defending the southern wing of the Kaurava army. After a life-and-death struggle, Arjuna killed both of them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 7).

ŚRUTI. An ancient King in India. (Maḥabhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

STAMBAMĪTRA. A bird. This bird was born to the hermit Mandapāla by his bird-wife Jaritā. (For further details see under Mandapāla).

STAMBHA. One of the Saptarśis (seven hermits) of the Manu-āge (Manvantara) of Śvārociṣa. The seven rśis of Śvārociṣa Manvantara are Īrjya, Stambha, Prāṇa, Vātā, Vṛṣabha, Niraya and Parīvān. (For further details see under Manvantara).

STANAKUNDA. A holy place. Those who bathe in this tirtha, which is one of the holy places of ancient Bhārata, would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Vājapeya. (Maḥabhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 152).

STANAPOŠIKA. An ancient country of South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 68).

STANAVĀLA. An ancient place in South India. (Maḥabhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63).

STEYA. Theft. In the law of chastisement of ancient Bhārata, appropriation of the property of others unjustly, was counted as theft (steya). The punishment awarded for theft in ancient Bhārata, is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 173, as follows: "All thefts are violation of justice. The thief of gold, will have to be beaten to death with a pestle. Then only his sin will be remitted. Or, he must live for twelve years, lying on the earth, wearing matted hair and eating only leaves, roots and fruits, once a day. The thief of pearl, coral, copper, silver, iron, bronze and stone, will have to eat millet rice (Kārṇāna) for twelve days. Those who steal food products, vehicle, bed, chair, flowers, fruits, roots etc. will be made to eat Paṅcagavya (Milk, curd, butter, urine and dung of cow). He who steals grass, firewood, tree, dried rice, saccharum, cloth, hide, meat etc. will have to be made to fast for three days.

STHAṆIYELU. A son born to Raudrāśva, the third son of King Puru. The celestial maid Mitrakāshi was the mother of Sthāṇīyelu. This Sthaṇīyelu was a great archer. (Maḥabhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 8).

STHAṆU I. Śiva, the son of Brahmā. The eleven Rudras were born from Sthāṇu. (Maḥabhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).

STHAṆU II. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 6).

STHAṆU III. A hermit. This hermit shines in the palace of Indra. (Maḥabhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 17).

STHAṆUSTHĀNA. A holy place. This place is situated on the eastern bank of the river Sarasvatī. Vasiṣṭha had once built his hermitage here. This place became a holy tirtha since god Śṭhāṇu had performed penance here. It is said that the devas anointed Subrahmaṇya as the commander of the army, at this place. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

STHAṆUTĪRTHA. STHAṆUVĀTA. An ancient holy place, situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Maḥabhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 178, that these who bathe in this holy tirtha and remain there for a night will attain the world of Rudras.

STHIRA. One of the two followers given to Subrahmaṇya by Meru. The followers given to Subrahmaṇya were Sūhira and Atisthira. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

STHULAKESĀ. An ancient hermit. He was the fosterfather of Pramadvarā the wife of Ruru. (See under Pramadvarā).

STHULĀKṢA I. A giant. He was one of those giants who fought with Śrī Rāma while Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were living in the forest in Paṅcavaṭi. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26, that when Krāha, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras were killed, Maḥākapāla, Sthūlākṣa and Pramāthi confronted Śrī Rāma and were killed.

STHULĀKṢA II. A Saintly hermit. He was one of those hermits who had visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

STHULĀSIRAS I.

1) General information. A hermit. It is observed that he was alive in the ages of both Rāmāyaṇa and Maḥabhārata.

2) Other details.

(i) He shone in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11).

(ii) It is mentioned in Maḥabhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 8, that Yudhiṣṭhira once visited his beautiful hermitage.

(iii) In olden days this hermit had performed penance on the North East side of Meru. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 243, Verse 59).
(iv) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 5, that this hermit Sthūlaśiras was one of the hermits who had visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows.

(v) Kabandha became a Rākṣasa (giant) because of the curse of Sthūlaśiras. (For detailed story see under Kabandha).

STHŪLAŚIRAS II. A giant. Once a servant of Vaśravaṇa made friends with this giant and Vaśravaṇa cursed his servant. (See under Gūṇādhaaya).

STHŪLAVĀLUKA. A river famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 15).

STHŪSA. One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51).

STHŪNĀKARĀ. A hermit in the assembly of Yudhisṭhira. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 23).

STHŪNĀKARĀ. A Yakṣa. It was this Yakṣa, who gave Śikhandin virility. (For detailed story see under Ambā).

STRU. 1) Origin. In both Hindu and Christian scriptures, the story about the origin of woman appears to be similar. It is stated in Manusmṛti, Chapter 1, Verse 32, that Brahmā divided his body into two and made one part male and the other part female and the male embraced the female, from which union was born the Vīrāt-puruṣa.

Dvidhā kṛtvātmano dehamardhena puruṣodbhavat
Arđhena nāri tasyāṁ sa
Vīrājamasṛā prabhūḥ //

In the book of Genesis in the Bible, the origin of the first woman is given. It is somewhat similar to the one given above. God created Adam as the first man. God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam. Then he took a rib from Adam, made a woman with it, and gave that woman, who was called Eve, to Adam as wife.

2) Fascination. A story as given below occurs in Devī Purāṇa, which states how woman acquired fascination. Once Indra prohibited Aśvinidevas from drinking the liquor called Soma. They complained to the hermit Cyavana, who agreed to recover for them the lost right, for which purpose he began a sacrifice. Indra caused obstruction to the sacrifice. Instantly by the power of Cyavana, an asura named Mada rose up from the sacrificial fire. Finally Indra begged the hermit for pardon. Cyavana divided the asura into four parts and placed one portion in gambling, one portion in hunting, the third portion in liquor and the fourth part in woman. Thenceforward woman began to have fascination.

3) Manu, about women. The following is the place in society of women in ancient days, according to Manu. Husband or relatives should give women no freedom. Even if they became immoral, they should be kept under the control of men. As woman has to be under the protection of father in childhood, under the protection of husband in youth and under the protection of son in old age, she does not deserve freedom at any time.

"Pitā rākṣati kaumāre
Bhartā rākṣati yauvane /
Rākṣānti sthāvire putrāḥ
Na stri svātantryamarhati." //

The father who does not give his daughter to a suitable husband before she attains puberty, the husband who does not engage in coition with his wife after puberty, and the son who does not support his mother after the death of her husband, are men of mean character. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 9).

STRUŚRĪPAVARA. An important section of Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

STRUŚRĪJYA. A kingdom in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 25 that the King of this country had participated in the Rājaśūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

STRUŚRĪLĀPA PARVA. A sub-section of Strī Parva in Mahābhārata comprising Chapters 16 to 25.

STRUŚRĪA. Son of Agni (fire) named Bhānu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 14).

STRUŚRĪA. A nāga born to Kaśyapaprajapāti by his wife Kadru. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 14).

STRUŚRĪA. An aspara, daughter of Kaśyapaprajapāti by his wife Pradā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). This aspara had participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

STRUŚRĪA. A Kṣatriya King who was in fact Hara the asura re born as such. The Pāṇḍavas, thought of despatching a letter inviting this King to the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).

STRUŚRĪA. A Kṣatriya King who was Krodhavāsa, the asura, re born. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

STRUŚRĪA. One of the hundred sons of Dhītarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma in the great war. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26).

STRUŚRĪA VI. 1) General. A King of Kaśi. Subāhu had a very beautiful daughter called Saśikāla, who was married by Sudarśana, son of Dhruvasandhi. (For details see under Saśikāla).

2) Other information.

(i) Though he had never been defeated till then in battle, Bhīmasena, in the course of his triumphal tour of the east defeated him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

(ii) He was present at the wedding of Draupadi in the company of his son Sukumāra. In this context he is referred to as Sucitra as well. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 10).

STRUŚRĪA VII. A Rākṣasa. One of the two sons of Tāṭakā, the other being Mārica. A Gandharva named Sunda was their father. Subāhu and Mārica possessed, like Tāṭakā, great power and adeptness in magic. Agastya once cursed Tāṭakā and her two sons who went to fight him for his having cursed Sunda to ashes when he attacked his śrāma. Subāhu was killed in a battle with Śrī Rāma during his stay in exile in the forest. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

STRUŚRĪA VIII. A King of Cedi, son of Vīrabāhu and brother of Sunandā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 45).

STRUŚRĪA IX. A King of Kulindas whose kingdom was in the suburbs of the Himālayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 40). The kingdom was rich in many curious objects and elephants and horses. Kīrātás, Taṅgaṇa and Kulindas lived there. King Subāhu received the Pāṇḍavas with great respect when they visited his kingdom during the period of their forest-life. They actually entered the forest after spending one day there.
Subáhu fought on the Pândavas side in the great war.
(Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 24).

SUBÁHU X. A warrior who fought against the Pândavas in the great war. Both his hands were cut off in his fight with Yuyutsu. (Droña Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

SUBÁHU XI. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

SUBÁHU XII. There is a reference in Verse 66, Chapter 115 of Anuñcana Parva, Mahābhārata, about a Subáhu, who never consumed flesh in life.

SUBÁHU XIII. Father of Sagara of Solar dynasty. (For details see under Sagara).

SUBÁHU XIV. A Cola King. A great devotee of Viśnu, the King performed many yajnas. Though he lived according to the spiritual advice of his preceptor Jaimini he was denied the sight of Viśnu. Ultimately Subáhu and his queen attained heaven as they listened to Viśvala, their second son, reciting hymns addressed to Vāsudeva. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 94).

Though Subáhu and his queen worshipped Viśnu for a long time in the Ananda forest, the lord did not appear to them. Ultimately they forsook their bodies in the forest and after a very long walk came to the abode of munis. The King quenched them as to why he failed to see Viśnu though he performed penance for a very long time.
The King and queen were done up due to hunger and thirst and the munis asked them to return to Anandarāma and eat the corpses left there. While they were accordingly eating the corpses, Viśvala questioned Kuhjala a bird which lived nearby, why his parents were eating dead bodies. The bird answered that when the King and queen had recited the praises of Vāsudeva they would see Viśnu. It also taught Viśvala songs in praise of Viśnu. After having studied the songs, Viśvala went and sat on a tree at Anandarāma and sang the songs. Subáhu and his queen repeeted them and immediately Viśnu appeared before them and conducted them to heaven.

SUBALA I.

1) General. A King of Gándhāra. Subala was the father of Śakuni, uncle of the Kuravas. Śakuni was the rebirth of Nagnajit, disciple of Prahāda. Śakuni inherited the name Subala from his father Subala whose donkey daughter was Gándhāri, mother of Duryodhana.
Both Śakuni and Gándhāri were economic experts.
(Ādi Parva, Chapter 63). At the time of the marriage proposal of Gándhāri the fact of the blindness of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the prospective bride-groom, worried
Subala much, but he married his daughter to the blind King considering the great reputation of the royal family. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).

2) Other information. (i) Subala, in the company of his sons Śakuni, Acala and Vṛṣaka participated in the Rājasūya performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 6).

(ii) After the Rājasūya was over it was Nakula, one of the Pândavas, who led Subala and his sons beyond the boundaries of the Kingdom safely. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 45, Verse 49).

SUBALA II. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His son was a great friend of King Jayadratha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 8).

SUBALA III. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 3).

SUBANDHU. An ācārya, who was the high priest of King Asamātī. Once the King removed the priest from his job and appointed two priests, Kīrāta and Ākula in his stead, and after some time, the new priests, at the instance of the King, killed Subandhu.
But, three brothers of his joined together and brought Subandhu back to life again by chanting hymns from the Vedas. (Ṛgveda 10, 57, 60; Brhaddevātā. 7, 33).

SUBELA. A mountain near Lankā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 294, Verse 21).

SUBLĀ. Dhruba’s mother. According to Harivaṁśa,
Chapter 2, she was born from Aśvamedha.

SUBLĀ. Wife of Aṅgirā and mother of seven sons like Bṛhatkūṭa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 1).

SUBLADATTĀ. A wood-cutter who lived in Pātaḷiputra.

Subhadatta earned his living by cutting wood in the forest and selling it for fuel. One day, while cutting wood in the forest he saw four Yakṣas by chance. When he understood from their dress and bearing that they were divine beings, Subhadatta was frightened. The Yakṣas spoke to him and when they came to know that he was poor, they engaged him as their servant. Subhadatta served them with devotion. When it was time for their meal they pointed to him a pot and asked him to serve them food from it. But when Subhadatta saw the pot empty, he was confused. The Yakṣas, with an amused smile asked him to put his hand into the pot and assured him that he would get anything he wished to get from it.

Subhadatta accordingly took out all the things they wanted from it and served them. They took their food and were satisfied. A few days passed in this way and then Subhadatta began to think of his family. The Yakṣas understood that he was longing to return home.
So they allowed him to go after getting whatever boon he wished to ask them. Subhadatta asked for that magic pot which would supply whatever he wanted.
On hearing it the Yakṣas told him that he would not be able to keep that pot and that if it was broken everything would be lost. So they advised him to ask them something else. But Subhadatta was not prepared to accept their advice. At last they gave him the magic pot.

Subhadatta reached home happily with the pot. He told the whole story to his people at home. His neighbours grew suspicious when he stopped going to the forest to cut trees, after he returned with the pot. To their enquiries about it, he replied haughtily and informed them of his good luck. One day in his fratic joy, he danced, carrying the pot on his head and as ill-luck would have it, he slipped his foot and fell down. The SUBHADRÀ I. Sister of Sri Krsna.

1) Birth. Subhadra was the daughter of Vasudeva by his wife Devaki. She had two brothers, Krsna and Sarga and she was her father’s pet child. (Adi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

2) Married to Arjuna. During his one year’s pilgrimage Arjuna, after visiting various holy places, came at last to Prabhâsa tirtha in the plains of the western mountain. He met Gada there who described to him the unique beauty of Subhadra. The description evoked in him the desire to marry her for which purpose he assumed the form of a Sannyasin and sitting under a tree thought about Sri Krsna who understood the fact while lying on the bed with Satyabhâma and immediately he began laughing. Asked for the reason for his laughing thus, Sri Krsna told her about Arjuna thinking about him etc. Krsna then went to Arjuna and questioned him about the reason for his pilgrimage and the latter explained the circumstances of it. They then went to the Raivata mountain where Arjuna revealed to Krsna his desire to marry Subhadra. Krsna agreed and, after leaving Arjuna at the mountain, returned to Dvârakâ.

Within a few days the Yâdavas celebrated a festival at Raivata attended by prominent leaders like Balabhâdra, Ugrasena, Pradyumma, Sri Krsna and others. The sight of Subhadra among them evoked uncontrollable love in Arjuna who asked Krsna secretly about the means for him to marry Subhadra. Krsna answered him thus: “Svayamvara (marriage by self choice by a woman) is ordained for Ksatriyas. But, how would we know whom Subhadra loves. Abduction also is ordained for Ksatriyas. So you abduct Subhadra.”

Arjuna immediately sent word about the matter through emissaries to Indraprastha. After the festival at Raivata was over, Subhadra returned to Dvârakâ. As for Arjuna, he sat on a rock in the forest thinking about Subhadra when Yâdava heroes like Bala, Samba, Sârana, Pradyumma and Gada came that way by chance. They saluted the Sannyasin (Arjuna) and after blessing them he made them sit on the rock around him and related to them various stories. Then Yâdavas felt great respect for the Sannyasin and invited him and took him to Dvârakâ. Krsna and others arranged for the stay of the Sannyasin, who pretended to spend Caturmasya there. He was to be fed from Subhadra’s house and the Sannyasin was overwhelmed with joy.

As days passed on thus, Arjuna grew more and more sick with love. Subhadra felt unbounded affection for him. She heard from him many stories about the valiant Pândava, Arjuna. When he was convinced that Subhadra cherished strong love for him, Arjuna revealed the truth about him. When he told her that he, the fake Sannyasin, was really Arjuna who was living there without the knowledge of his mother and brothers, Subhadra bent down her head in shyness.

Subhadra’s wedding was decided to be held on the twelfth day from that date. Balabhâdra and Uddhava both of them short-tempered, were not informed about the decision. Sri Krsna took the lead in making preparations for the wedding and he saw Subhadra and gave her all good wishes.

Many of the Yâdava chiefs wanted Subhadra to be wedded to Duryodhana, a disciple of Balabhâdra and against this desire of theirs Subhadra and Arjuna together drove themselves away in a chariot through lines of people and this created a stir among the Yâdavas. But, Krsna pacified them all. (Adi Parva, Chapters 213-228; Bhâgavata, 10th Skandha).

2) Other information.

(i) Later on, the wedding of Subhadra with Arjuna was duly consecrated. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 10).

(ii) Arjuna came to Indraprastha with Subhadra disguised as a Gopi. Many costly things, by way of Subhadra’s dowry, were duly sent from Dvârakâ to Indraprastha. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220).

(iii) A son named Abhimanyu was born to the couple. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 65).

(iv) During the period of the ‘forest life’ of the Pândavas Subhadra and her son lived with Krsna at Dvârakâ (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 3).

(v) Subhadra too was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu at Upaplavyanagara. (Virata Parva, Chapter 72 Verse 22).

(vi) When Abhimanyu was killed in the great war, Subhadra wept before Krsna. (Drope Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 2).

(vii) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhadra returned with Krsna to Dvârakâ. (Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 85).

(viii) Remembering about Abhimanyu’s death Subhadra swooned. (Asvamedha Parva Chapter 61, Verse 4).

(ix) She went from Dvârakâ to Hastinâpura to attend the Aśvamedha yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

(x) Subhadra joined her co-wives, Ulûpi and Citrângadâ and embraced them. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

(xi) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhadra spent her days in sad silence. (Mahâprâthâna Parva, Chapter 1).

SUBHADRÀ II. A daughter of Surabhi. She lives in the western region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102 Verse 9).

SUBHADRÀ A banyan tree. Garûḍa went to Devaloka to fetch amṛta after marking this tree as a sign-post. See under Garûda. (Aranyâ Kâṇḍa, Canto 35).

SUBHADRÀHARANAPARVA. A sub-parva of Mahâbhârata. (Adi Parva, Chapters 218 and 219).

SUBHAGA. A brother of Sakuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhima. (Drope Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 26).

SUBHAGA I. Daughter of Kaśyapaprajapâti by his wife Pradhâ. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 46).

SUBHAGA II. A term of address.

According to Manusmṛti (Chapter 2, 129) one should use this word when one addresses the wives of others and women who are not one’s relatives.

Parapatni tu yâ strīyya sadamandhâ ca yonitah / Tām bhuviyâd bhavatityevaṇh subhage bhaginīti ca //

SUBHÂNU. One of the ten sons of Satyabhâma, the other nine being Bhûnu, Svarbhûnu, Prabhûnu, Bhûnumân, Candrabhûnu, Brâdhanûnu, Hâvibhûnu, Sribhûnu and Prâbibhûnu. (Bhâgavata, 10th Skandha).

SUBHÂRYA (SUDÂRYA). A daughter of Svatśalka, son of Prśnî. She was Kârûṇâ’s sister. (Bhâgavata, 9th Skandha).
SUBHAṅGADA. A king. This king had attended Draupadi's Svayamvara. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 22).

SUBHAṅGI. A virgin born in the Dāśārha tribe. Kuru, King of the Lunar dynasty married her. They had a son named Vidūra. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 39).

SUBHAŚAṆA. A king of Solar line son of Yuyudhāna and father of Śruṭa. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SUBHAVAKTRĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 7).

SUBHIMA. A son of Pāñcagānayāgūi called Tapa. This Agni is one of the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñās. Subhima, Aśīhīma, Bhīma, Bhirabālī. Bala, Sumitra, Mitra, Mitra, Mitra, Mitravadhāna, Mitradharman, Surapravīrī, Vīrā, Suvarcās. Vēśa and Surahānta are the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñās. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

SUBHΡĀJA. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanyā by Sūrya, the other one being Bhāsvara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

SUBHΡŪ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

SUBHŪMIKA. A holy place of ancient days in the plains of river Sarasvatī where Apsaras used to come daily and bathe. Deva-Gandharvas visit this place every month. Śrī Kṛṣṇa bathed there once and distributed money to brahmīns. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37).

SUBRAHMANYĀ. Son of Śiva.

1) Reason for birth. A son named Vajrāṅga was born to Kaśyapa-prajāpatī by his wife Danu and he married a girl called Vārāngī. Vajrāṅga performed penance to Brahmacarī so that he might shed his asuric aspect. When he came out of his penance, Vārāngī was missing and he wandered about the forest in search of her. Finally he saw Vārāngī crying under a tree. When he asked her the reason for her weeping, she told him about harassments by Brahmacarī during the thousand years when Vajrāṅga was immersed in trance. Indra one day threw about the vessels used by her in worship, appearing before her in the guise of a monkey; on another occasion he threatened her in the form of a lion and on a third occasion he came disguised as a snake and bit on her legs. Very much grieved over the story Vajrāṅga again took to penance with the grim determination to punish Indra and when Brahmacarī appeared before him he prayed for the boon of a son who would surpass the Devas including Indra in prowess. Brahmacarī granted him the boon. Vārāngī delivered a son twelve months after the boon. The child was christened Tārakāṣuṇa.

Tārakāṣuṇa, as a child, began practising penance and Brahmacarī duly appeared before him and granted him the boon that if he were to die, he would die at the hands of a child only seven days old. Haughty over the boon Tārakāṣuṇa very soon conquered the three worlds. The devas found no means to suppress the asura. Children would not be born to them and there was no reason for it. Once Śiva and Pārvatī started the marital act and it did not come to a close even after a hundred divya-years, with the result that the world shook like anything. Frightened at this the Devas requested Śiva to stop the act and he obliged them. Then he asked them who would bear the semen which had been discharged and they replied, "Let earth itself bear the semen." Accordingly it was discharged on the earth. It filled and over-flowed forests and mountains. What next was the problem. Ultimately the Devas asked Agni (fire) to consume it. When Agni consumed and burnt it down absolutely, the ashes thereof formed into a white hill and it became a forest.

Pārvatī did not at all relish the action of the devas and spoke to them thus: "You prevented my sexual intercourse with the desire to have a son. Therefore, in future you will not have children by your wives." Pārvatī cursed the earth also as follows: "You will become one of various forms and also a wife to many people. You, who prevented me from having a son, will not enjoy happiness from children." (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Canto 36).

Tārakāṣuṇa could be killed only by a child not more than seven days old and the Devas realised that such a child could be begot only by Śiva. It was the occasion when Śiva was lamenting over the death of Satī and Pārvatī was doing penance to secure Śiva as husband. None could stir Śiva immersed in deep meditation and the Devas entrusted the responsibility for it to Kāmadeva. Not only did Kāma not succeed in the endeavoure but also he got reduced to ashes by the fire from Śiva's eyes. When Pārvatī's penance reached its climax Śiva appeared before her and wedded her.

Time passed by and the semen of Śiva became a burden to Gaṅgā. She complained about that to Brahmacarī. Brahmacarī asked her from whom she had received the semen. Gaṅgā detailed her story to him and concluded by saying that though it was 5000 years since Śiva's semen was put into her, she did not deliver yet. Then Brahmacarī told her as follows: "You go to the Udaya mountain (where the sun rises). There is a forest there, a forest hundred crores of yojanas in extent, where Sāra, a particular variety of grass (Saccharum munjia Roxb.) grows. You deposit the semen there and a male child will be born after 10,000 years.

As directed by Brahmacarī Gaṅgā went to the Udaya mountain and deposited the focetus there through her mouth.

By the power of Śiva's semen all the trees and animals and birds in the forest became golden in colour. When 10,000 years were completed a child, as effulgent as the rising sun, was born and Subrahmanyā was the child. The child cried in a thunderous voice and six divine Kṛttikās who came that way saw the child and taking pity on it vied with one another to breast-feed it. Since the child looked at the six Kṛttikās one after the other it developed six faces and since it was breast-fed by Kṛttikās it came to be named Kārttikeya as well.
Brahma informed Agni about the birth of the child and the latter, in great happiness, hastened to it on a fast goat. Ganga who met Agni on the way and asked him about his hurried trip was told about the birth of the child and between the two developed an argument about the ownership of the child. Mahasvayu who came that way just then listened to the above argument and directed them to Siva for settlement of their claims.

Agni and Ganga asked Siva to which of them the child really belonged. Siva then told Parvati "Fortunate, fortunate." Only after seeing the child could it be decided as to whose it was and so Siva, Parvati, Agni and Ganga proceeded together to the forest where they saw the child in the lap of the Krttikas. Siva then said "Let us see whom the child looks at before settling its parentage." Understanding the ideas of the visitors the child, by its yogic power, assumed four bodies called Kumara, Visaka, Saka and Naigameya. Kumara looked at Siva, Visaka at Parvati, Saka at Agni and Naigameya at Agni and all of them felt immensely happy. The Krttikas asked Siva whether Shanmukha (child with six faces) was his son to which Siva answered as follows: "Let him be your son under the name Krtttikeya; Ganga's son under the name Kumara; Parvati's son under the name Skanda; my son under the name Guha and Agni's son with the name Mahasena and under the name Saravana Saravana's (the forest where it was born) son. He is a great yogi and will be known by these various names. As he possesses six faces he will become famous as 'Shanmukha' also.

After having spoken thus Siva thought of the Devas and under the leadership of Brahma and Visnu all the Devas appeared there. They looked at the child to their hearts' content and then told Siva thus: "Oh! Lord! You made Agni serve the purpose of Devas. Let us immediately start for Auyasa tirtha and crown Shanmukha at Sarasvati in Kuruksetra. Let him flourish as army-chief of Devas, Gandharvas and Kinnaras and let him kill the terrible Mahishasura and Tarakasura.

3) Coronation. Brahma, Visnu, Siva and others reached Kuruksetra with the child to crown him (Subrahmanyaya) as army-chief. Siva and Visnu performed the consecration ceremony with holy water from the seven seas. Gandharvas, Rishis and others sang for joy and Apsaras danced. Parvati placed the child thus consecrated on her lap and kissed him repeatedly on the head.

4) Presents. After Guha's consecration, the Devas presented the army-chief valorous armies. He was given by Siva four Pramathas, equal in prowess to Indra, called Ghanatkarana, Lohitaksa, Nandiensa and Kumudamali. Brahma and other Devas gave their own Pramathas to him. Brahma gave him the Pramatha called Sthana and Visnu gave him three sets of Pramathas called Samkrama, Vikrama and Parakrama. Indra gave him Ukkeسا and Pankaja; Sun (Surya) gave Dandakapingalas; Moon gave Manivasuamash; the Akvins gave Vatsanadis etc. In short, important Devas, Matsu, Tirthas etc. gave Subrahmanyaya priceless presents too numerous to be named.

Seeing the rush of presents the great Garuda presented his own son, the fast-going Peacock to Subrahmanyaya. Aruna gave his own son, the cock. Agni gave the Vel (three-pronged weapon, trident), Bhhaspati the danḍa (club, stick) Ganga, the Kamanḍalū (water-pot of Sannyāsin) Visnu the garland, Parvati clothes, Siva the locket and Indra the string of pearls.

5) Devāsura war. The consecration of Subrahmanyaya as Commander-in-Chief of the army kindled a new hope and enthusiasm in the Devas. They challenged the Asuras for war and they took it up. The asura army entered the battle-field under the leadership of unrivalled warriors like Tarakasura, Mahisra, Bāga, son of Mahabali, Tāraka's sons, Tārakāka. Kamalaksha, Vidyunmali etc. In the furious battle that ensued Subrahmanyaya killed Tarakasura. The other asura chiefs too were killed.

6) Vow of celibacy. After the killing of Tārakasura Subrahmanyaya became the object of too much of petting by Parvati with the result that his life became unbridled and wayward. His lust was everyday on the increase and he committed even rapε on Deva women, who were ultimately forced to complain about him to Parvati. Immediately she called Subrahmanyaya to her and showed her own image in all other women and he became so much repentant about his past actions that he took the vow before Parvati that in future he would look upon all women in the world as equal to her, his mother. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa 81).

7) Marriage. See under Devasena. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Canto 30; M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223; Anuvāsana Parva, Chapter 85; Skanda Purāṇa, Sambhava kāṇḍa; Kṛṣṇaśāsana, Gāvānkalambaka, Tarāṅga 6; Uttara Rāmāyana Kamba Rāmāyana, Bālāṅkaṇḍa; Vāman Purāṇa, Chapters 57-61; Bhāvīṣya Purāṇa).

8) Other information.

(i) On the occasion of the burning of the Khandava forest Subrahmanyaya went there carrying his weapon called 'Sakti' to fight Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 33).

(ii) Skanda was born from the semen of Siva which fell into Agni. So he got the name Skanda. (Skandfall). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223, Verse 16).

(iii) He once cut asunder the Krauñca mountain. (For details see under Krauñca I).

(iv) Noticing the very great effulgence of Skanda, Indra feared loss of his place and immediately he clashed with the former. Indra's Vajra (thunderbolt) hit Skanda on his right and from the wound emerged a person wearing golden armour, divine ear-rings and holding the Vel in his hands and he was named Viṣṇaka. Frightened by his sight Indra sought refuge with Subrahmanyaya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 227).

(v) When he married Devasena his six mothers came and blessed him and his wife; he then told the mothers thus: "You live with my father, Siva. Until I become sixteen years of age I will be functioning as a spirit which kills children and the children killed by me will serve as your food." As soon as he finished speaking, a terrible person just like Agni emerged from his body and it was called Raudragraha, which is known also by other names such as Skandāpāmaṇa, Śakunagrha, Pūtanagrha etc. This Graha is supposed to cause children's death. (Vana Parva, Chapter 230).

(vi) Subrahmanyaya once in the company of Rudradeva visited the holy place Bhadravāja. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).

(vii) Vāyuvbhagavān assumed responsibility for his protection. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).
(viii) He killed Mahiśāsura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 96).
Agni, Skanda, Dipākārī, Ānāmāya, Mayūrākṣeta, Dharmāntā, Bhūtāsra, Mahiśādana, Kāmaśī, Kānta, Satyavāc, Bhuvaneśvara, Śiśūśīghra, Śucicandā, Dipāvarṇa, Subhādana, Amogha, Anagha, Raudra, Priya, Candrānana, Prāśāntān, Dipatākāṭi, Bhadraśī, Kūṭamohana, Śaṭṭhīpriya, Pavitra, Mātrvatāla, Kanyābharā, Vihaṅkta, Śivāyena, Revatīsūtra, Viśākha, Prabhu, Netā, Naigameya, Sudurcara, Sūvrata, Lalita, Bālakridanakāpriya, Khaḍārī, Brahmacārin, Śīra, Saravāṇodbhava, Viśvāmitrapriya, Devaṇāpriya, Vāsudevaprīya, Priyākṛt etc.
Those who repeat the above sacred names of Subrahmanyā will attain fame, wealth and heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 232)
(x) In the Devasura war he killed important leaders of the asuras like Mahiśa, Tripāta and Hradodara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 90).

SUCI VI. The leader of a band of merchants. It was who he met and comforted Damayantī who lost her way in the forest after Nala left her. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 127).
SUCI VII. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).
SUCI VIII. A son of Bhrigu Mahārṣi. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 128).
SUCI IX. A Mahārṣi born in the family of Aṅgiras. By a curse of Vasiṣṭha, this Mahārṣi was born as a mortal, as the son of King Vijitāśvā. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).
SUCI. The son of Śuddha and the grandson of Anenas. Trikalpava was the son of Śuci. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).
SUCI (NEEDLE). Iron needle is Purāṇically important. There is a story connecting the iron-needle of Bhārata and Viḥīṣaṇa as follows:—
Having killed Rāvaṇa, Śri Rāma anointed Viḥīṣaṇa as the King of Lāṅka and returned to Ayodhya. During the reign of Viḥīṣaṇa, Lāṅka reached the highest stage of prosperity. Among the five metals, only gold was seen in Lāṅka. At this stage Viḥīṣaṇa got an iron needle from Bhārata. He kept it as a rare and valuable treasure, in his palace.
Viḥīṣaṇa who was an ardent devotee of Śri Rāma used to cross the sea, come to Rāmeśvara-temple and offer flower at the feet of Śri Rāma, every day. Flower was brought in a big golden pot. Once Viḥīṣaṇa placed the golden pot in the courtyard of the temple and went in with the flower. After the worship, Viḥīṣaṇa came out and taking the pot on his head returned to Lāṅka. Being immersed in the thought of Śri Rāma, Viḥīṣaṇa did not look inside the pot. After reaching the palace he looked into the pot and saw a Brahmin sleeping in it. He was very pleased to see the Brahmin. So after welcoming him with hospitality, he brought the box in which he had kept the most precious treasure and placed it before the Brahmin who returned with the box to Bhārata. He eagerly opened the box and saw only an iron needle in it. The consternation of the Brahmin need only be imagined.
SUCIKĀ. An Apsaras. She had participated in Arjuna's birth festival. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

SUCIKĀ. A figure of the giantess Karkkaṭi. (See under Brahmacalī, Parva 12).

SUCIMUKHA. A hell. (See under Kāla the section on hell).

SUCIMUKHI. Companion maid of Prabhāvatī, daughter of Vajrānābhī. (See under Prabhāvatī V).

SUCIRATHA. A King born in Bharata's dynasty. He was the son of Citrarathī and Dhrṣama's father. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SUCIROŚITA. A minister of Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 32).

SUCISMITĀ I. A Brāhmaṇī who was devoted to her husband. (For further details see under Dhanaṇṭayī V).

SUCISMITĀ II. An Apsaras. She attends Kubera's assembly (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 10).

SUCITRA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dīrghaśrī. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of the serpent sacrifice of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 18).

SUCITRA II. (SUMITRA). Father of Sukumāra the King of Pulinda. (See under Sukumāra I).

SUCITRA III. A son of Dīrghaśrī. He attacked Abhimanyu in the battle of Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 22).

SUCITRA IV. A King who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was a good fighter from chariot. (Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 27). While this king and his son Citraravmā were walking in the battlefield, Droṇa killed them.

SUCIVAKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 72).

SUCIVRATA. A king of ancient times. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236).

SUDAKSIṆA I. The son of king Paṇḍuṅḍra. Sṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa killed Paṇḍuṅḍra in battle and his head, cut off by Sṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa, fell in the country of Kāśi. Sudakṣiṇa who learned about the death of his father, went to Kāśi and recognized the head by the ear-rings. Sudakṣiṇa made up his mind to kill Sṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa somehow or other and began to do penance in Kāśi before Śiva. Pleased with his penance Śiva appeared before him and advised him to create a wicked fairy from the fire of sorcery. Accordingly Sudakṣiṇa prepared a fire of sorcery, from which a wicked fairy came out and ran towards Sṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa. Sṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa sent his weapon the Discus which cut off the head of the wicked fairy and from there the Discus flew to Kāśi and turned Sudakṣiṇa to ashes, and returned to Dvārakā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUDAKSIṆA II. A king of Kāmbhoja (Kabul). The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about this king.

(i) Sudakṣiṇa had been present at the Svayambhūva marriage of Draupadi. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15).

(ii) He came with an ākṣauḥpiṇī of army to help Duryodhana against the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21).

(iii) Sudakṣiṇa was a valiant fighter in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 1).

(iv) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata there was a combat between Śrutakarmā and Sudakṣiṇa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(v) There was another combat between Abhimanyu and Sudakṣiṇa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(vi) Arjuna killed Sudakṣiṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 61).

(vii) The younger brother of Sudakṣiṇa confronted Arjuna to avenge the death of his brother and was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 110).

SUDAKSIṆA III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Droṇācārya shot him down from the chariot with an arrow. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 56).

SUDAKSIṆA. The wife of Dilipa. (See under Dilipa).

SUDĀMĀ I. A minister of king Janaka. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāńḍa, Sarga 70).

SUDĀMĀ II. A king of Daśārtha. This king had two daughters of whom one was married by Bhīma, the king of Vidarbha, and the other by Viśravāhu king of Cedi. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 14).

SUDĀMĀ III. A country of North India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 11, that this country was captured by Arjuna.

SUDĀMĀ IV. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

SUDĀMĀ V. A cowherd. This Sudāmā was reborn as an asura, because of the curse of Devī Rādhā. (For further details see under Tulasī, para 5).

SUDĀMĀ VI. A warrior who took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 49).

SUDĀMĀ VII. The watchner of the garden of Kaṁsa. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that this Sudāmā adorned Śṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Rāma with flower garlands.

SUDĀMĀ VIII. The real name of Kucela who was the friend of Śṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa in boyhood. Though his name occurs everywhere in Bhāgavata, as Kucela, his real name is Sudāmā. (See under Kucela).

SUDĀMĀ IX. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākāṇḍa, Sarga 71, that Bharata, the brother of Śṛṣṭi Rāma, crossed this river while he was returning from Kekaya.

SUDĀṆDIKA. See under Śūryaprabha.

SUDARŚANA I. A king of ancient India. He was a contemporary of Śṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa. This king who was esteemed even by the gods, was once captured and made a prisoner by another king named Nāgaṇājī. Śṛṣṭi-Kṛṣṇa defeated Nāgaṇājī and all the other kings and made this king free. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 75.

SUDARŚANA II. A king who took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas in Kurukṣetra. This king was killed by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 14).

SUDARŚANA III. A king of Mālava. This king joined the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata and was killed by Ásvattháma. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 200, Verse 13).

SUDARŚANA V. A son of Dhrdrástra. In the battle of Bharata, he attacked Bhimascana and was killed by him. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 31).

SUDARŚANA V. Son of Dhrusvashandi; king of Kosalá. Manorama was the mother of Sudarśana. (For further details see under Dhrusvashandi).

SUDARŚANA VI. One of the five sons of Bharata. Bharata, the son of Rṣabha, had married Pañcājani, the daughter of Viśvarūpa. Five sons named Sumati, Rāṣṭrabhū, Sudarśana, Áravāna and Dhūmraketu were born to Bharata, who divided Bharata among his five sons and went to Sālagrāma and did penance there and died. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

SUDARŚANA VII. The son born to god Fire by his wife Sudarśanā. (Sudarśanā was the daughter of Duryodhana (Nila) of the dynasty of Ikṣvákú. For the story of her marriage see under Sudarśanā). Sudarśana, the son of Fire, married Oghavatī the daughter of Oghavān. That story is given below:

Oghavān had two children a daughter named Oghavatī and a son named Ogharatha. Oghavān gave his daughter in marriage to Sudarśana who was wise and learned. The couple lived in Kurukṣetra. Once Sudarśana said to Oghavatī thus: “You should honour guests in all ways. If it is the desire of a guest, you should not draw back from giving even your body. Whether I am present here or not a guest should not be insulted.” Oghavatī promised to obey the order of her husband to the letter. Sudarśana had been trying to become victorious over Mṛtyu (Death) and so Death had been waiting to find out some vulnerable point in Sudarśana’s life. While Sudarśana had gone to cut firewood, a brahmin entered the hermitage and said to Oghavatī: “If you do observe the duties of a house-holder show hospitality to me.” Hearing this, Oghavatī welcomed the brahmin and performed the usual hospitality and asked him “What shall I do for you?” “Give yourself to me”, was the answer. Seeing that the guest was not contented with the usual hostilities and remembering the words of her husband, Oghavatī gave herself to the guest. Both of them entered the interior of the hermitage. At this moment Sudarśana returned with firewood, and looked for Oghavatī and called her aloud, several times. He got no reply. Then the Brahmín who was lying inside called out: “Hei! Son of Fire! A guest has come. Your wife showed all kinds of hospitality. But I was not contented with them. Now she is offering herself to me.”

These words did not seem to make any change in Sudarśana. Dharmadeva was much pleased, as Sudarśana had come out victorious in all these tests. He came out and appeared in his own form and blessed Sudarśana. Due to the blessing of Dharmadeva, half of the body of Oghavatī flowed as the river Oghavati and the other half was dissolved in the soul of her husband. Sudarśana thus earned victory over Mṛtyu and obtained prosperity.

SUDARŚANA VIII. A Vidyādharā. Because of the curse of Aṅgiras, this Vidyādharā was changed into a mountain snake. That story occurs as follows in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

While Sudarśana was playing about in the world of Gods with some Gandhariya damsels, Aṅgiras and some other hermits came by that way. Sudarśana ridiculed them. Aṅgiras became angry and changed him to a mountain snake by a curse. Sudarśana prayed for liberation from the curse. Aṅgiras said that in Deva-parayuga, Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and when Kṛṣṇa trod upon him, he would regain his original form.

Sudarśana became a big snake and began life in Ambāḍi. Once the people of Ambāḍi went to Devī forest and worshipped Mahēśvara. They spent the night on the banks of the river Kālindī. In the night the snake mentioned above, caught hold of the leg of Nandagopa. Seeing the snake swallowing Nandagopa the rest of them crowded there and struck at the snake with burning faggots. But it was in vain. Finally Śrī Kṛṣṇa came, and gave the snake a thrash. Instantly Sudarśana got his old form. He went to the world of gods.

SUDARŚANA IX. A brahmin sinner who lived in the Tretāyuga. He used to commit sins such as eating food on the eleventh lunar day, ridiculing conventional fast and vow, etc. When he died, the men of Yama took his soul to the world of Yama. At his order Sudarśana was laid in horrible excrescements for the period of hundred Manvantaras. When he was released he was born as a horse. Because he ate food on Harīvāsara (a fast-day) he suffered hell for a long time. His next birth was that of a crow and lived on excrescences. Once the crow drank the water which fell on the steps while washing the feet of Viṣṇu. The crow obtained remission of all its sins. On the same day it was caught in the net of a forestman and died. Then a divine chariot drawn by swans came and took the crow to the world of Viṣṇu.

SUDARŚANA X. The son of Dīrghabāhu who was born in the family of Manu. He conquered all the kingdoms and ruled as an emperor. The famous hermit Vasiṣṭha was his priest.

Once Devī Mahākāli appeared to him in a dream and said to him: "Very soon a flood will occur in the world. So go to the Himālayas with your wife and the priest Vasiṣṭha and stay there in a cave." According to the instruction of Devī, Sudarśana took everybody with him and went to the Himālayas.

The prophecy of Devī came true. The earth was filled with water. This deluge lasted for ten years. After that the earth resumed its original form and Sudarśana returned to Ayodhyā. (Bhāvīṣya Purāṇa, Pratibhā Parva, 1, 1).

It is mentioned in Kālikā Purāṇa that Sudarśana had broken off a piece of a forest region of Himālaya and taken it to his country and founded on it the city called Kāḥḍavānagara and that after a short period king Vijaya of the Bhaïrava dynasty killed king Sudarśana and became the ruler of the city. (Kālikā Purāṇa, 92).

SUDARŚANA XI. A wife of God Fire. This Sudarśana was the daughter of Duryodhana, the son of Durjaya of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. The mother of Sudarśana was Narmadā. It is said that so beautiful a woman as Sudarśanā had never been born. The God Fire was once fascinated by the beauty of Sudarśanā who had been instructed to serve him, and wished to accept her as his wife. So he informed her of his desire. Being of a noble race, she said that a virgin ought to be given away by her parents. The God Fire approached the father of Sudarśana and informed him of every thing. When he knew that the person who made the request was the God Fire, the king gave his daughter Sudarśanā as wife to the God. (Duryodhana had another name Nila). In the Purāṇas there is another statement also that Nila was the ruler of Māhiṣmati. (See under Duryodhana II and Agni Para 8).

SUDARŚANA XII. An island. This is another name of Jambu-dvipa. Once Sañjaya talked to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about this dvīpa (Island). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 5).

SUDARŚANA XIII. A tree in the Jambū island. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7 that this tree was eleven thousand yojanas high.

SUDARŚANA XIV. (The Discus Sudarśana-weapon).

1) General information. The weapon of Mahāviśu. Two stories are seen about the origin of this weapon.

(i) The sun married Sañjñā the daughter of Viṣvākarmā. Sañjñā complained to her father that she could not bear the radiance of the Sun. Viṣvākarmā put the Sun in a turning machine and turned him and decreased his radiance. Out of the dust of the sun produced by this process, Viṣvākarmā made the discus-weapon, the aerial chariot Puspaka, the Trident of Śiva, and the Śakti (lance) of Subrahmaṇya. Of these weapons the discus-weapon Sudarśana was given to Mahāviśu. This is one story. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anīsa 3, Chapter 2).

(ii) During the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava, Indra showered rain, against the fire. According to the second story, the God Fire gave the discus weapon Sudarśana to Śri Kṛṣṇa and the Gāndīva to Arjuna to fight against Indra. (See the word Khāṇḍavādāyā). Besides these two stories, several statements occur in various Purāṇas, about this weapon Sudarśana. As Sudarśana was in existence even before the incarnation of Śri Kṛṣṇa, the story that Viṣvākarmā made it, ought to be given prominence. Very often Mahāviśu used to destroy enemies by this Sudarśana. Though Mahāviśu had taken several incarnations, only Śri Kṛṣṇa is mentioned in the Purāṇas as having used this weapon Sudarśana very often.

2) The power of Sudarśana. Sudarśana flies up to the ranks of the enemies, burning like fire. Once Mahāviśu sent the weapon Sudarśana towards the asuras. Then the havoc and destruction caused by this weapon, is described as follows: The moment he thought of Sudarśana, to destroy the power of the enemy, it made its appearance like the Sun in the Solar region. It was a fearful sight. Emanating light and radiance from the blazing fire, the Sudarśana rested on the hand of Viṣṇu; turning round with a tremendous speed, Viṣṇu threw it at the enemies with his powerful hand like that of the trunk of an elephant, with a view to cleave the city of the enemies into pieces. That weapon which was burning in great flames like a great fire spreading radiance, flew into the midst of the enemy’s army and instantly every one near it fell dead. Thus it flew about among the asuras and burnt them to ashes. Then turning round and round in the air it drank the blood shed on the earth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 19).

SUDARŚANA XV. Indra had a chariot named Sudarśana. (Mahābhārata, Viṣṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 3).

SUDĀSA I. A King of Kosala. This Sudāsa was a King who ought to be remembered every morning and evening. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 57).

SUDĀSA II. An Āryan King named Sudāsa is stated in Ṛgveda. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda Maṇḍala 1, Anuvaka 11, Sūkta 63, that Viṣvāmitra saved this King from a danger. (See under Dīśarājñā).

SUDĀSA III. A King of Ayodhya. He was the son of Sarvakāma and the father of Kalmāśapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 4, 30).

SUDATTĀ. One of the prominent wives of Śri Kṛṣṇa. The palace Kucumān in Dvārakā, was given to this wife. (Mahābhārata, Dākiṣṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SŪDDHA. A King of the Bhṛgu dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha mentions that he was the son of Anenas and Śuci’s father.

SUDĪSNA I. The wife of Virāṭa, the King of Matsya. 1) General information. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6, that this Sudīṣṇā, the daughter of the King of Kekaya, had the name Citrā also.

2) Other details. (i) During the pseudonymity, Pāncālī lived with Sudīṣṇā in the guise of Sairandhri. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9).

(ii) Sudīṣṇā agreed to the request of Kīcaka to get Sairandhri for him, as he was fascinated by her beauty. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 6).

(iii) Sudīṣṇā sent Kīcaka to the house of Sairandhri. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 15).

(iv) Draupadī consoled Sudīṣṇā who was miserable at the death of Kīcaka. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 48).

(v) Sudīṣṇā asked Draupadī to go away from the palace. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 9).

(vi) In connection with the marriage of his daughter Uttarā, Sudīṣṇā went to Upaplava with Draupadī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 30).

SUDĪSNA II. The wife of the King Bali. Five sons named Āṅga, Vaiṅga, Kalīṅga, Punḍra and Suhma were born to the hermit Dirghatamas by this queen Sudīṣṇā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 98: 30; Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Harivaṃśa 1, 39).

SUDĪSNA I. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. (See under Rukmiṇī).

SUDĪSNA II. A country in India, very famous, in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 4).

SUDAVA I. A brahmin who was a favourite of the King of Vidarbha. It was this brahmin who was sent by the King of Vidarbha to search for Damayantī. (See under Damayantī).

SUDAVA II. A captain of the army of King Ambariṣa. He was calm and fearless. Sudava met with a heroic death in a battle and attained heaven. Indra gave him a suitable place. Later Ambariṣa died and came to heaven. There he saw his captain Sudava and was amazed. He asked Indra how it was that Sudeva was given a place in heaven. Indra replied that to fight fearlessly in the battle-field and meet with heroic death, was a yajña (sacrifice) and that due to this yajña Sudeva attained heaven. The King asked, when this took place. Indra continued:— "Once Ambaraśa sent Sudeva to subdue the asuras and giants. Sudeva entered the battlefield and looked at the vast army of the enemy. Finding that it was impossible to defeat the army of giants, he sat down and meditated on Śiva, who appeared before him and encouraged him. A fierce battle followed in which Sudeva annihilated the army of the giants completely and he himself met with a heroic death. That is how he obtained heaven. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Sānti Parva, Chapter 98).

SUDEVĀ III. The son of Haryāśa, the King of Kaśi. He was quite valiant and radiant. After the death of his father he was anointed as King of Kaśi. As soon as he became King, the sons of King Vītahavya attacked Sudeva and captured him. After this Divodāsa became the King of Kaśi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

SUDEVĀ IV. A famous King. Nābhāga married Suprabhā the daughter of this King Sudeva. The following is a story taken from Mārkandeya Purāṇa stating how this Sudeva who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Vaiśya by the curse of hermit Pramati. Once Nala, the friend and the relative of Dhumrakṣa, after having drunk too much liquor, tried to rape the wife of the hermit Pramati. All this happened while King Sudeva was standing silently near Nala. Pramati requested King Sudeva repeatedly to save his wife. Sudeva replied: "The Kṣatriya who could help the needy, could save your wife also. But I am a Vaiśya." This arrogance of the King made the hermit angry. "May you become a Vaiśya!" The hermit cursed the King, Sudeva repented and requested for liberation from the curse, "When a Kṣatriya steals away your daughter you will recover the lost feelings of Kṣatriya." The hermit gave this liberation from the curse. Because of this curse Nābhāga stole away Suprabhā the daughter of Sudeva and Sudeva got back the lost feelings of Kṣatriya.

SUDEVĀ I. A daughter of the King of Aṅga named Ariha. The King Raśa was her son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 24).

SUDEVĀ II. A princess born in the dynasty of King Daśārha. Vikunṭha, a King of the Pūru dynasty married Sudeva. The King Ajamitha was their son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 36).

SUDEVĀ III. The wife of Iksvāku who was the son of Manu. This Sudevā was the daughter of Devarāta the King of Kaśi. Iksvāku and Sudevā are said to be the incarnations of Viśu and Devī Lākṣmī respectively. While the couple were walking about in the forest, they saw a she-hog. That hog was the cursed form of a Brahmin woman named Sudeva. Sudevā, the wife of Iksvāku gave the merits she had earned in one year by her good deeds to Sudevā the she-hog and liberated her from her curse. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 42. The story is given below: Once King Iksvāku and his wife Sudevā were hunting on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Then a big hog came there with his wife and children. The hog was afraid of Iksvāku. So he said to his wife:— "Look! beloved! Iksvāku the valiant, the son of Manu, is come for hunting. I am going to fight with him." His wife said, "How did you get this bravery to fight with the king, you who always try to evade the forest-men?" "It is not bravery, my love. It is because I could go to heaven if I fight with the king valiantly and meet with heroic death", replied the hog. The wife tried her utmost to dissuade her husband from his attempt. The children also tried to stop him. They could not change his mind. So all of them decided to help him as much as they could in his fight. They got ready for a fight against Iksvāku and his army.

The king's army saw the preparations of the hogs and their resolute stand. Struck with fear, they informed Iksvāku about it. The king ordered the noble hog to be caught. Iksvāku and his wife mounted on horse and followed the army. All the hounds ran towards the hogs barking. The army sent a volley of arrows at the hogs. The hog and his wife stopped the arrows. The army could not defeat the hogs. At last the king himself killed the hog with a club. While the king was looking on, that noble hog was changed to a noble Gandharva with four hands and divine clothes and ornaments. Leaving his old body of hog on the earth he rose up into the sky like the Sun and went to heaven. Seeing this sight Sudevā was struck with fear. She got down from the chariot and called the wife of the hog towards her. The wife of the hog, wounded all over, came to the queen Sudevā. Sudevā asked her about the previous history of her dead husband. The hog's wife said: "Lady! If you feel interested I shall tell you about the previous life of my dead husband and myself."

"My dead husband was a Gandharva named Raṅkavīddyadhara, in the previous birth. Once he sat in the shade of a tree near the hermitage of Pulastya and began to sing with accompaniment. As the singing caused disturbance to his solitude the hermit Pulastya came and requested the Gandharva to shift to some other place. Raṅkavīddyadhara did not like to comply with the request of the hermit. At last Pulastya removed his hermitage to another place. Raṅkavīddyadhara walked in search of Pulastya. Finally the Gandharva saw Pulastya. Seeing that he was alone, the Gandharva took the shape of a hog and entered the hermitage and began to wound with his tusk and to molest that radiant sage Pulastya. Thinking it to be a mere animal Pulastya suffered it for a long time. The hog continued its actions of molestation. It passed excrements in front of the sage, danced before him, played in front of him, fell down in the courtyard and rolled and did various other things. As it was an animal Pulastya forgave him. One day Raṅkavīddyadhara entered the hermitage as a hog, roared aloud, laughed aloud, cried aloud, sang aloud and in various other ways tried to change the mind of the hermit. Seeing all these, Pulastya began to think that it was not a hog. "A hog will not try to molest one continuously. I forgive him thinking him to be a mere animal. This must be that wicked Gandharva." Thus recognizing him Pulastya got angry and cursed him thus: "You tried to violate my penance in the shape of a hog. So you, great sinner; take the next birth as a hog." With grief the Gandharva ran to Indra and informed him of everything. Indra requested Pulastya to liberate the Gandharva from the curse. Accordingly Pulastya gave him remission that he would regain his original form when he was killed by the hands of the immensely good king Iksvāku." Sudevā was amazed on hearing this story of the dead hog, and asked her again. "You hog! You speak like a human being. How is it?"
The wife of the hog continued the story. "Lady! I also have taken rebirth as a hog. In my previous birth I was the daughter of a Brahmin named Vasudatta (Vasudevā) in the city of Śrīpura in Kaliyag. They named me Sudevā (Vasudevā). Because of the unlimited caring and fondling of my father I grew up as an arrogant girl. In the meanwhile a Brahmin youth named Śiva-sārmā, who was well-versed in all the branches of knowledge, and whose parents were dead, came to my house. My father gave me to that brahmin. I lived with him in my father's house. Being proud of the wealth and prosperity of my parents I did not care to render the services due to my husband. My husband who was a peaceful man bore everything. By and by I became wicked. At last because of my wickedness and immorality my husband left the country. My father hated me and expelled me from the house. My father feared that some calamity would happen to me as Kaṁsa was born to Padmāvatī, the wife of Ugrasena, by her illegal connection with persons other than her husband."

Hearing about the birth of Kaṁsa, Sudevā asked the she-hog to tell her about the circumstances which led to the illegal connections of Padmāvatī. The wife of the hog continued. "In days of old there was a king in Mathurāpuri named Ugrasena, who married Padmāvatī the daughter of king Satyaketu of Vidarbha. While the couple were living happily in Mathurāpuri Satyaketu wanted to see his daughter. He sent a messenger to Mathurāpuri and brought Padmāvatī to Vidarbha. She walked along the vicinity of the palace in which she was born, enjoying the beauty of the scenery. She walked on and arrived on the mountain called Puspavīni, and sat on the bank of a lake. At that time a Gandharva named Godila (Dramila) came there. He fell in love with her. He took the shape of Ugrasena and came near her and talked with her. Thinking that her husband had come from Mathurā to see her she embraced him. After a while she understood that the visitor was not her husband. She began to curse him. The visitor admitted that he was Godila an attendant of Vaśravaṇa. Godila went on his way. But she had become pregnant by that time. Her parents tried in various ways to destroy the child in her womb. One day the infant lying in her womb told her thus: "Mother! you do not know who I am. I am the rebirth of a powerful asura named Kālanemi. In ancient days Viṣṇu killed me in a battle between the gods and asuras. I have entered into your womb for revenge. Mother! you need not take the trouble to destroy me." Saying so, the infant stopped speaking. After ten years Padmāvatī gave birth to the mighty and strong Kaṁsa. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and he attained heaven."

Sudevā was struck with wonder at the story of Kaṁsa. She asked the she-hog to continue her own story. She continued her own story. "I have said that my father expelled me. Being shameless I walked away from there soon. Nobody helped me. Those who saw me scolded me. Days passed. Afflicted by a horrible disease, and travelling in this manner, I came to a big house. I entered the courtyard and begged for alms. It was the house of my husband Śiva-sārmā. When I abandoned him he married another woman named Maṅgalā and was leading a prosperous life. Maṅgalā gave me food. Śiva-sārmā asked me who I was. I told him my story. He remembered me, his former wife. Maṅgalā also felt compassion for me. They gave me gold ornaments and made me stay there. But my conscience pricked me. Thus burning internally I died.

My soul went to hell. After the suffering of a very long period, I took birth again as a Jackal. Then I became a dog, and then a snake. After that I passed through the births of a hen, a cat and a rat. Thus Brahmā had put me in the wombs of all kinds of animals. Now I have taken the birth of a she-hog. Lady! Your husband Iksvāku is the incarnation of Viṣṇu in portion and yourself, that of Lakṣmī in portion. If you would give me the merits you have earned for one day by your good deeds, I could leave off all these mean births and attain heaven."

The eyes of Sudevā were full when she heard the story of the hog. She gave to the she-hog, the merits she had earned by good deeds for one year. The hog was changed to a divine woman of youth and beauty. Immediately a divine chariot came down from heaven and took her to heaven, while everybody was looking on. Iksvāku and Sudevā returned to their palace much pleased at the redemption of the she-hog.

2) Other details.

(i) This royal hermit stays in the court of Yama glorifying him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 16).

(ii) While Sudyumna was the King, to do justice properly, both hands of the hermit Līkhitā were cut off. (For detailed story see under Līkhitā).

(iii) Because he had executed the duties of the King properly and righteously, Sudyumna attained heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 45).

SUGANDHA. A giant. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Śrīṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 75, that this giant was one of the seven, who were killed by Agni (Fire) in the battle between Hiraṇyākṣa and the gods.

SUGANDHĀ I. A celestial maid. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63, that this celestial maid danced in the birth festival of Arjuna.

SUGANDHĀ II. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 10, that by visiting this place one could obtain remission of sins and attain heaven.

SUGANDHI. One of the thirteen wives of Vasudeva. A son named Pūṇḍra was born to Vasudeva by his wife Sugandhi. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96, 161).

SUGATI. A King of the Bharata dynasty. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skanda 5, that he was one of the sons of Gaya.
SUGHOSA. The conch of Nakula, one of the Pandavas. (Mahabharata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 16).

SUGOPTA. An eternal Visvadeva (god concerned with offerings to the manes). (Mahabharata, Anuvasa Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).

SUGRIVA I. Bali and Sugriva were brothers. Their mother was Aruna who once put the guise of a woman. At that time he was called by the name Aruni. Bali was the son born to Indra by Aruni and Sugriva was the son born to the Sun by Aruni. Both of them were brought up in the hermitage of Gautama. When the King of Kiskindha Rkarajas died, Bali was anointed the king of Kiskindha. Sugriva lived with Bali, serving him. At this time Bali engaged in a battle with the asura Dundubhi. Bali chased Dundubhi into a cave. Placing Sugriva at the mouth of the cave, Bali went in. By the magic and sorcery of Dundubhi, it appeared to Sugriva that Bali was killed by Dundubhi. Sugriva returned to Kiskindha. Bali who came out, followed Sugriva to kill him due to misunderstanding. Bali chased Sugriva all over the world. It is mentioned in Vilmiki Ramayana, Kiskindha Kanda, Sarga 46, that the knowledge of the lay-out of the various countries in the world that Sugriva got in this running, helped him later, in the search for Sitâ.

At last Sugriva entered Ramayukacala. Bali had been once cursed that if he entered this mountain his head would be broken into pieces. Hanumân became the minister of Sugriva. It was during this period that Sri Rama and Lakshmana came by that way in search of Sitâ. Sugriva and Sri Rama entered into a treaty. Bali should be killed and Kiskindha should be given to Sugriva in place of which Rama should be helped to find out Sitâ and get her back.

Sri Rama killed Bali and gave Kiskindha to Sugriva, who sent monkey-armies in all directions to find out Sitâ. Hanumân found out Sitâ and returned to Sri Rama, who fought a great battle with Ravaõa, in which battle Sugriva took a prominent part. It was Kumbhakarna, who oppressed the monkey army much. When he caught Sugriva, Kumbhakarna lost his ears and nose. Then he caught hold of the monkey warriors and Sri Rama cut off his hands with arrows. (Agni Purana, Chapter I). After the war, when Rama and others returned to Ayodhyâ, Sugriva also accompanied them. After that Sugriva returned to Kiskindha. After a few years Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Ravaõa, carried away the daughter of Sugriva. Hearing this, Sri Rama confronted Sahasramukha Ravaõa, who was killed by the arrow of Sitâ.

Sugriva participated in the horse-sacrifice performed by Sri Rama. The control of the army was in the hands of Sugriva, the financial affairs, with Vibhishana and central powers, with Laksmâna. When the sacrifice was completed, Sugriva returned to Kiskindha.

SUGRIVA II. An asura. This asura was the minister of Sumbha, an asura-chief. (Devi Bhagavata).

SUGRIVA III. A horse of Sri Krishna. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Droha Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 47, that five horses Kamaga, Saiba, Sugriva, Meghupusa and Valâhaka were yoked to the chariot of Sri Krishna.

SUHMA I. A country famous in the Purânas. It is stated in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 29, that Pându had conquered this country which was situated on the Eastern part of Bharata. Bhimasena also conquered this country during his regional conquest of the east. (M.B. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).

SUHMA II. A country situated in the mountainous region of North India. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 21, that Arjuna conquered this country during his regional conquest of the North.

SUHOTRA. See under Subhotra II.

SUHOTRA I. A son of the hermit Jamadagni. Five sons named Rumanvâna, Subhotra, Vasu, Viśvâvasu and Paraṣurâma were born to Jamadagni by his wife Renuka (Brahmânda Purâna, Chapter 58).

SUHOTRA II. A son of emperor Bharata. (For genealogy, see under Bharata I).

Five sons were born to Bharata, the son of Durâyana. They were Subhotra, Subhotâ, Gaya, Garbha and Suket. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 278).

SUHOTRA III.

1. General information. A king of the Candra dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Âdi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24, that he was the grandson of emperor Bharata and the son of the elder brother of Bhumanyu. Puṣkârini was the mother of this Subhotra.

2. Other details.

(i) This Subhotra got suzerainty over the entire earth. After this he conducted horse-sacrifice and several other sacrifices. (M.B. Âdi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 25).

(ii) Subhotra married Suvarnâ, a princess of the Iksvaku dynasty. Three sons, Ajamidha, Sumidha and Purumidha were born to them. (M.B. Âdi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 30).

(iii) Subhotra was a generous king. (M.B. Droha-Parva, Chapter 56).

(iv) Being pleased at his hospitality, Indra showered a rain of gold in the country for a year. Rivers were full of golden water. Indra showered golden fishes also in these rivers. But the king divided all this gold among Brahmins. (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 25).

SUHOTRA IV. Son of Sahadeva, one of the Pandavas. Sahadeva married Vijayâ, daughter of Dyutiman, the king of Madra. The son Suhotra was born to them. (M.B. Âdi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 80).

SUHOTRA V. A hermit. This hermit honoured Yudhishthira to a great extent. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 24).

SUHOTRA VI. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Once this king obstructed the way of Sibi, born in the family of King Uṣīnara. He let Śibi go only after the intervention of Nārada. (See under Śibi.)

SUHOTRA VII. A giant. This giant was one of those kings who had ruled over the entire earth and had to leave the place due to fate. (M. B. Sānti Parva. Chapter 277, Verse 51.)

SUHŪ. A Yādava king who was the son of Ugrasena. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.)

SUHĪ. (SUHMA) A king of the Bharata dynasty. Sukha was the son of Bali, and grandson of Sutapas. Bali had no direct sons. Being miserable due to the absence of sons, Bali approached the hermit Dirghatamas, by whom the queen gave birth to six sons. They were Āgīa, Vanga, Kaśinga, Suhīva (or Suhma), Pūṇdra and Adrūpa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.)

SUJĀNU. A great saint. This hermit stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to Hastināpura and conversed with him. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātyapātha, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83.)

SUJĀTĀ. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He attacked Bhūmasena in the battle of Bhārata and Bhūmasena killed him. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 5.)

SUJĀTĀ. A monkey king. Sujāta was one of the sons born to Pulaha by his wife Śvetā. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 2 : 7, 180-181.)

SUJĀTĀ. The daughter of the hermit Uddālaka. (See under Khagodara.)

SUJYESTHĀ. A king who was the son of Agnimitra and the father of Vasumitra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12.)

SUKA I. (SUKADEVA). The son of Vyāsa. 1) Birth. The sage Vyāsa once wished to have a son. So he began to worship Śiva for the purpose. His desire was to have a son who would combine in him the essential qualities of fire, earth, water, air and ether. He did tapas for a hundred years. Because of the austerity of his tapas, his locks of hair began to blaze like flames of fire. At last Śiva appeared and blessed him to have a son according to his wish. After receiving his boon, Vyāsa returned to his aśrama. Soon after his arrival there, an Apsaras named Gṛhṭacī came there in the form of a parrot. On seeing her beauty Vyāsa had an involuntary emission of semen. Śuka's birth was from this semen. (For further details see Para 2, under Gṛhṭacī.)

2) Śuka's Boyhood. It was Śiva who performed the Upanayan (wearing the sacred thread) ceremony of Śuka. Since he was born out of the semen which was the result of the fascination for a parrot, the boy was named “Śuka”. He was a divine boy. Soon after his birth, he grew up into an exceptionally brilliant boy. He went to Bṛhaspati and mastered all knowledge. After staying with Bṛhaspati for some years, he returned to his father's aśrama. 3) In Vyāsa's hut. Vyāsa was very happy at the arrival of his son after completing his education. In due course he thought of getting his son married to a suitable girl and to prepare him for an ideal Gṛhstārāma. But Śuka did not fall in with his father's proposal. All the efforts of Vyāsa to persuade him were in vain. At last he told Śuka that he was pleased with his stern resolve and allowed him to pursue his life as a Sannyāśi, if he wished for it. From that time Sukadeva and Sūta, the disciple of Vyāsa began the study of Bhāgavata. But Śuka did not find happiness in that study either. Vyāsa taught him spiritual philosophy. Even then Śuka could not find mental satisfaction. So his father sent him to Mithilā. At that time there was none who equalled Janaka, the then King of Mithilā. Before sending him away, Vyāsa made his son promise that he would return to his aśrama, immediately after leaving Mithilā.

4) Śuka in Mithilā. Śuka started his journey to Mithilā on foot. He passed through many lands and cities on his way. He visited many places inhabited by different classes of people like yogins, sages, mendicants, Vākṭhānāsas, Śaktas, Pāśupatas, Sarasas, Śāivas, Vaiṣṇavas, etc. After taking two years to cross Mahāmeru and one year for crossing Himālaya he reached Mithilā. At the very sight of the land of Mithilā with its inhabitants living in luxury and prosperity, Sukadeva was filled with wonder. One of the sentries at the palace gate who saw the dignified bearing and majestic figure of Śuka, standing at the entrance, greeted him with joined palms and conducted him into the royal palace. From there, a minister took him to the interior of the palace, where a passage led him to a beautiful park full of flowering trees and swimming pools. After giving him a seat in the park the minister left the place. There, he was attended by women who were like celestial beauties. But Śuka was not happy even in their company or attentions. He spent the whole night in deep meditation. The next morning King Janaka visited Śuka. After the exchange of customary greetings, Janaka enquired of him the object of his visit. Śuka answered that he came there to learn from Janaka the way to salvation, as directed by his father. On hearing this, Janaka said:—“After Upanayana, (investiture with the sacred thread) a Brāhmaṇa should study the Vedas. He should discharge his debts to the Devas and to his Pīṭha by tapas, worship of the guru and Brahmacarya. After the study of the Vedas, after mastering the senses, he should give Gurudaksī (see to the teacher). Then the pupil may return home with the permission of the Guru (preceptor). After reaching home he should begin gṛhaṭhārāma. After the birth of children, he should follow Vānaprastha-āśrama. In that āśrama, a Brāhmaṇa should kindle fire in his soul. He should then renounce the dual state, rise above all desire and remain in Brahmāśrama.” After receiving Janaka's advice, Śuka returned to his father.

5) Domestic Life. Sukadeva married the beautiful Pivā, daughter of the Pīṭha and thus began his gṛhaṭhārāma in Vyāsa's āśrama. He had four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gaurarābha, Bhūri and Devārūtta and a daughter named Kirti, by Pivā. Kirti was married by Anu, the son of King Vibhṛaja. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha.)

6) Other details.

(i) Vyāsa composed Bhārata and taught it to Śuka. (M.B. Chapter 1, Verse 104.)

(ii) Sukadeva recited the Mahābhārata story containing 14 lakhs of stanzas to Gandharvas, Vaiṣṇas and Rākṣasas. (M.B. Aḍi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 106; Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 55.)

(iii) Sukadeva taught them the entire Vedas and the Mahâbhârata story. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 89).

(iv) Sukâ attended Yudhiṣṭhira’s assembly. (M.B. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11).

7) The End. While Sukadeva was thus leading his family life, teaching the Vedas and reading the Purâṇas, Nârada happened to pay a visit to him. His conversation with Nârada drew Sukadeva nearer to the path of Mokṣa. He left his father, Veda Vyâsa and his own family, went to the peak of Kailásâ and stayed there doing tapas on Paramâsvâ. At last he became a perfect Siddha and rising up to the Heavens shone there as a second sun. Devârjîs began to praise Sukadeva.

His father Vyâsa was in deep grief at his disappearance and left his âśrama in search of Sukâ. After wandering in many places he came to Kailásâ where Sukâ had performed tapas and called him. Siva who saw him utterly tired and weak took pity on him and comforted him in the following words: “Did you not pray to me for a son who would combine in himself the essences of the Pañcabhûtas? As a result of the tapas you have done and by my blessing, such a glorious son was born to you. Sukâ has attained the highest position which is inaccessible to those who have not conquered their senses and difficult to attain even by the gods. Why do you worry about Sukâ? The glory acquired by your eminent son will continue undiminished as long as the mountains and oceans exist. I give you my blessing that an image exactly like your son will always accompany you from today.” Just then, an image which closely resembled his son appeared before Vyâsa who was filled with rapture.

It is believed that even today if any one calls Siva at the place where Siva spoke to Vyâsa in answer to his call, Siva would respond to the call. (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapters 332 and 333; Devî Bhâgavata, 1st Skandha).

SUKA II. A messenger of Râvana. This Sukâ had a friend named Sâraṇa. These two persons were expert spies who used to gather secret and important pieces of information from the strongholds of Râvana’s friends and enemies and passed them on to Râvana.

Soon after Sûrî Râma entered Lânkâ, Râvana sent Sukâ and Sâraṇa to Sûrî Râma’s camp. After taking a distant view of the surroundings, they entered the camp of Sûrî Râma in the form of monkeys. Taking care not to come within the observation of Vîbhishâna, they went about the military camps, gathering secret information. Just then they were met by Jâmavân and Hanûmân. After closely observing them for a considerable time, they understood that they were enemy spies. The monkey-heroes promptly seized them and produced them before Sugrîva. Confused and frightened under a shower of questions they sought the protection of Sûrî Râma. While Sûrî Râma was interrogating them, Vîbhishâna happened to come there. At his sight, Sukâ and Sâraṇa were alarmed. Grasping the whole situation in an instant, Vîbhishâna kicked both of them when they assumed their former shapes as Râksasas. The monkey-leaders sprang at them. The Râksasas begged for pardon and prayed for Sûrî Râma’s protection. Sûrî Râma forgave them and set them free. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Yuddha Kânda; Kamba Râmâyana, Yuddha Kânda).

SUKA III. A king of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhâgavata, 9th Skandha).

SUKA IV. A king of the Saryâti dynasty. He was the son of Pûra. He had conquered all countries in the world and after performing many yâgas, he renounced his kingdom and attained Moksa by doing tapas on Śatârâga mountain. (Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Dâksiṇâtya Pâtha, Chapter 123).

SUKA V. Son of Subala, king of Gândhûra. He was slain by Iârvân in the course of the Bhârata Yuddha. (Mahâbhârata, Bîśma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 26).

SUKA VI. Son of the monkey Sarabha. Râksa was the son of Sukâ by Vîyâghri. (Brahmândâ Purâṇa, 3, 8, 206).

SUKA VII. A Maharshi who was the contemporary of Anuha of Daksîna Pâncâla and of king Brahmadatta. This sage lived before the time of the other Sukâ who was the son of Vyâsa.

This sage Sukâ had six sons, named Bhrîrîravas, Sambhu, Prabhû, Krîpa, Saura (Sauraprabhû) and Deva-rûta by his two wives Pîvari and Eka-pûrûta. (Brahmândâ Purâṇa, 3-8-93; Vâyu Purâṇa, 70-84; Devî Bhâgavata, 1-14; Nârada. 1-58).

SUKALÂ. A woman who loved and honoured her husband.

SUKAKSA. A mountain. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 38, that this mountain, which is famous in the Purânas, stands on the western side of Dvârakâ.

SUKAMALÂ. A Yaksha. This Yaksha was the son born to Manîvara by Devajânî. (Brahmândâ Purâṇa, 3, 7, 129).

SUKANABHA. A Râksasa on the side of Râvana. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Sundara Kânda, Sarga 6).

SUKANDAKA. A country in ancient India. (Mahâbhârata Bîśma Parva, Chapter 9, Versc 53.)

SUKANYÂ I. The wife of the hermit Cyavana. See under Cyavana, Para 3.

SUKANYÂ II. The wife of the hermit Mâtariśvâ. The hermit Mântaka was the son born to Mâtariśvâ by Sukanyâ. (See under Mântakanâka).

SUKARA. A country celebrated in the Purânas. Krti, King of Sukâra had presented thousands of Elephants at Yudhiṣṭhira’s Râjasûya yâga. (M.B. Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 25).

SUKARA. A hell. (See under Kâla, the section ‘Hell’).

SUKARAMUKHA. A hell. (See under Kâla, the section ‘Hell’).

SUKAMÂ I. One of the two followers given to Subrahmaṇya by Vidyâtâ. Suvra was the other follower. (M.B. Sâli Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 42).

SUKAMÂ II. One of the teacher priests of Sâmaveda. This Sukâma, the son of Sûtra, divided the Sâmaveda into a thousand branches. (See under Guruparamârpa.)

SUKAMÂ III. A Brâhmaṇa who had earned merits of good deeds by serving his parents. (For further details see under Pippalâda I).

SUKASANGITI. A Gandharva. (For further details see under Pramohini).

SUKESÂ (SUKEŚI).

1) General information A râkṣasa (giant) who was the son of Vidyûtkesa and Śalakaṭākika. When Brahmâ asked the Subjeets to look after his creation those who said ‘Râkṣamahe’ became Râkṣasas (giants) and those who said ‘Yakṣa’ the Yakṣas (a clan of semi gods). Once two brothers named Heti and Praheti were born. in the clan of Rākṣasas. Praheti remained unmarried and entered the life of penance. Heti married Bhayā the sister of Kāla. A son named Vidyutkēśa was born to the couple. Vidyutkēśa married Sālakaṭāṇkā, the daughter of Sandhyā. Sālakaṭāṇkā delivered a son. But wishing to enjoy the company of her husband, she abandoned the son and lived with her husband. The child which was as bright as the rising Sun, putting its folded fist in its mouth, cried aloud. Paramāśa and Pārvatī who were travelling along the sky mounted on the bull, heard the cry of the infant and looked at the spot from which the cry arose. On seeing the infant, Pārvatī took pity on it. Siva blessed the child, which instantly grew as old as its mother. Siva gave the Rākṣas prince immortality and a city which could travel through the sky. Pārvatī said that Rākṣasas women would, in future deliver the moment they became pregnant and that the child would grow equal to its mother in age, as soon as it was born. Sukeśa was the son of Vidyutkēśa and Sālakaṭāṇkā. Sukeśa was delighted at the boons he got, and travelled wherever he pleased, in his city. Sukeśa married Devāvatī the daughter of Grāmānī a Gandharva. Máli, Sumáli and Mályavān were the sons of this couple. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

2) The city of Sukeśa fell on the ground. Sukeśa pleased Siva by penance. Siva made him invincible and gave him a city which travelled through the sky. Because of these boons, the Rākṣasas became righteous and pious. He lived in the city with other Rākṣasas. Once Sukeśa went to the forest Māgadhā and visited the hermits there. He asked them about the means to attain prosperity in this world and the other worlds. The hermits gave him long exhortations. They told him about the various hells given to sinners. Thus Sukeśa became righteous-minded and saintly. He returned to his city and called together all the other Rākṣasas and spoke to them about what he had learned from the hermits. He said: "The hermits taught me the means to attain heaven. They are Non-killing, Truth, not stealing, cleanliness, control of all outward going energies, liberality, kindness, forgiveness, abstinence, good usages etc. So it is my order that all of you observe these good things." The Rākṣasas were pleased at the words of Sukeśa. They began to lead a righteous life. In this way they got wealth and prosperity. Their radiance increased to such an extent that the Sun and the moon and the stars found it difficult to continue their travels.

Thus the city of the Rākṣasas shone as the sun in the day and as the moon in the night. The progress of the Sun in the day became indiscernible. Due to its brightness the Rākṣasas city seemed to be the moon and thinking that it was night, the lotus flowers folded in the day and bloomed in the night. Havoc was caused in the earth as well as in the world of the gods. The sun became unpopular. So he tried to find out the cause. At last he found out the cause. He became angry. He looked with fury at the city of the Rākṣasas. Hit by the look, the city lost its merits and began to sink down to the earth.

When the city fell down Sukeśa called Siva and cried aloud. Siva looked round to see what happened to his devotee. He understood that the sun was the culprit. Siva looked at the sun with furious eyes. Instantly the sun was dropped from the Solar region to the air. The hermits saw the Sun coming slowly to the earth. They called out loudly, "If you want to be well in falling, go and fall in Harihātra." The sun called out, "What is Harihātra?" "Harihātra is Vārāṇasī from Yuga'āyī to Keśavadarśana," the hermits replied. Hearing this the Sun fell in Vārāṇasī. Then to lessen the heat the sun dipped and splashed in Asi tīrtha and Varunā tīrtha.

Brahmā knew this, and informed Siva of it. Siva came to Vārāṇasī and took the sun by his hands and gave him the name 'Lola' and sent him back in the chariot. After that Brahmā went to Sukeśa and sent his city with the Rākṣasas in it, back to the sky, and the Sun was fixed in the sky as before. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

SUKESI I (SUKESA). See under Sukēśa.

SUKESI II. The daughter of the king of Gandhāra. This Sukēśi was the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38 that Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave her a palace, the doors of which shone as the gold of Jambūnada.

SUKESI III. A celestial maid of Alakāpuri. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anu'asana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45, that she performed a dance in honour of the visit of Āstāvakra, in the palace of Kubera.

SUKESI IV. The daughter of Ketuvīra the king of Magadha. She was married to Marutā (the third). (Markandeya Purāṇa, 128).

SUKETANA. A king of the Bāhrū family. He was the son of Sunīta and the father of Dharmaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9 that this king was the son of Nandivardhana and the father of Devārāta.

SUKETU II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He became famous under the name Viratha. He was one of the five sons of Bhārata. The five sons were Suhotra, Suhotā, Gayā, Garbha and Suketu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUKETU III. A king of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 9, that this Suketu and his son Sunāmā were present at the Śvayamvar marriage of Draupadi.

SUKETU IV. A son of Śiśupāla. He was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Droṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 33).

SUKETU V. A mighty king who stood on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas in the Bhārata-battle. This king was the son of Citraketu, was killed by the arrow of the teacher Kṛpa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 21).

SUKETU VI. The father of Tāṭakā. It is stated in Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, that this Suketu was the son of the Gandharva King Surukṣaka. (See under Tāṭakā for further details).

ŚUKI. A daughter of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Five daughters named Krauṭacī, Bhāsi, Śyenī, Dīhtrārāśtri and Śuki were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Tāmrā. Krauṭacī gave birth to owls. Bhāsas were born to Bhāsi and eagles and kites were born to Śyenī. Dīhtrārāśtri gave birth to swans and Cakravākas. Śuki gave birth to Nāṭa and Vīnāṭa was the daughter of Nattā. (Valmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakaṇḍa, Sarga 14).

ŚUKLA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was a native of Pāṇḍula country, Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 45, mentions that he was slain by Karna during the Bhārata battle.

SUKRA (SUKRĀCARYA) I. Preceptor of the Asuras. 1) Birth. Views differ as to whether Sukra was the son or grandson of Bhṛgu. The Purāṇas state that Pulomā was the wife of Bhṛgu. Sukra has another name, Kāvya. Kāvya means the son of Kavi. Some authorities say that Kavi was Bhṛgu's son, while others think that Kavi was Bhṛgu himself. Sukra's mother is referred to as "Kāvyanātā" in many places. Sukra is referred to as the strongest of the seven sons born to Bhṛgu and Pulomā. In the light of these references it is reasonable to consider Sukra as the son of the sage Bhṛgu. "Kavi" must be supposed to be another name of Bhṛgu. Uṣanas was another name for Sukra. 2) Love story. Once the sage Bhṛgu lived in the valley of Mandara mountain, performing austerities. Tapas. who was then a boy, used to attend his father. One day when Bhṛgu was absorbed in "Nirvikalpasamādhi" (deep meditation) the lonely Sukra was appreciating the beauty of the sky above him. There was no one else by his side. At that time he happened to see an exceptionally beautiful Apsarā woman passing across the sky. His heart was filled with delight at the sight. All his thoughts were centred on her and he sat absorbed in her bewitching charm. In his imagination he followed Indra and reached Indraloka. Indra greeted him with honour. After that Sukra, attended by the heavenly beings went about sight-seeing in Heaven. There he unexpectedly came across the Apsarā beauty whom he had seen earlier, in the midst of several other women. They fell in love at first sight. To fulfil his desire Sukra enveloped the whole place in darkness. The other women left the place. The apsārā beauty approached Sukra and both of them entered a hut formed by the thick foliage of creeping plants and indulged in sensual pleasures. Since Sukra spent a period of eight Caturyugas like this in her company, he became weak in his virtue and descended to the earth. Then he became conscious of his physical being. His depraved soul was stopped at the moon. It reached the earth through mist and grew up as a paddy plants. A Brahmana who was a native of Daśārpa land ate the rice which was cooked from the ears of those paddy plants. Sukra's soul in the shape of Sukra entered the womb of the Brahmapā's wife and in due course took his birth. Because of his close association with Munis, that boy grew up like a sage and spent a period of one Manvantara, leading an austere life in the valley of the Meru mountain. At that time his Apsarā woman had been born as a female deer, as the result of a curse. By their connection in the previous birth, the Brahmana fell in love with that female deer and begot a human child by his union with her. With that the austerities of his life were at an end. All his thoughts were now directed towards the future glory of his son and he ignored even his spiritual duties. Not long after, he died of snake bite. Later, he was born as the son of the king of Madra and ruled the country for many years. After that he took birth in many other wombs and at last was born as the son of a Mahārṣi living on the bank of the river Gaṅgā. Sukra's body which was by the side of Bhṛgu dropped to the earth after being exposed to the wind and sun for a long time. But owing to Bhṛgu's power of tapas and the holiness of the āśrama, birds and animals did not eat the body. After 1,000 divyavatāras, sage Bhṛgu opened his eyes from his samādhi but he did not find his son near him. A famished and worn out body was lying before him. Within the wrinkles of the skin, small birds were nesting and frogs took refuge in the hollow of the stomach. Enraged at the premature death of his son, he was about to curse Yama, the god of Death. Coming to know of this Dharmarāja (Yama) appeared before him and said: — "We honour and adore you as a great tapasī. You should not ruin your tapas. I have devoured numerous Brahmāṇḍas. I have already swallowed Rudras and Viṣṇudevas many times. All of you are my food. It is ordained by Fate. Even Brahmā is not indestructible at the end of a Kalpa. Knowing all these facts, why do you think of cursing me? Your son fell into this state because of his own act. While you were in a state of Samādhi your son's mind left its body and went up to Heaven. There he spent many years indulging in sensual pleasures in the company of the celestial beauty Viśvācī. Then he was born as a Brahmana in Daśārpa country. In his next birth he became the King of Kosalā. After that passing through many births in succession he is now performing tapas on the bank of the river Samaṅgā as the son of a Brahmapa, under the name, Vāsudeva. Open your inner eye and see for yourself." After saying this Dharmarāja revived the body of Sukra who rose up and did obeisance to his father. (Jāna- vāśiṣṭha, Sihiitiprakāraṇam).

3) Domestic Life. It is seen that Sukra had several wives and children. In Devī Bhāgavata there is a story of Jayantī, daughter of Indra who was Sukra's wife for about ten years. (See under Jayantī II). Priyavrata, the brother of Utānapāda had a daughter named Ujīrjasvatī by his wife Surūpā. In Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha it is stated that Sukrācarya married Ujīrjasvatī and he had a daughter Devayānī by her, Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 65 mentions that Sukra was the acārya (preceptor) of the Asuras and his four sons were the priests of the Asuras. Sukra had a daughter named "Ara". (See under Arā). Besides, Sukra had another wife named Sataparvā. But no child was born to Sataparvā. Devī, wife of Varuṇa's elder brother, was a daughter of Sukra. Ujīrjasvatī was the most famous among Sukra's wives.

4) Resived his mother. See under Kāvyanātā.

5) Jamadagni was restored to life. See the 8th para under Jamadagni.

6) Sukra cursed Daṇḍa. See under Arā.

7) Cursed Tajātī. See the 4th Para under Devayānī.

8) How Sukra lost his eye. Sukrācarya lost one of his eyes during the time of Mahābali, the Asura King. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Vāmana and begged three feet of earth from Mahābali. Since Sukra tried to obstruct it, Viṣṇu put out one of Sukra's eyes with the point of a darbha grass. (For more details see 3rd Para under Mahābali).

9) Siva swallowed Sukra. Once Sukra invaded Kubera and plundered all his wealth. The distressed Kubera informed Siva about it. Siva at once started up with his weapon, shouting "Where is he?" Sukra appeared on the top of Siva's trident. Siva caught hold of him and swallowed him. Sukra who moved about in Siva's... stomach found the excessive heat there, unbearable and soon became exhausted. In his helpless state he began to worship Śiva for his mercy. At last Śiva permitted him to escape through his penis and Sukra thus came out. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 290).

10) Other details.

(i) Once Sukrācārya had adorned the office of Education Minister of Mahiṣaśūra. At that time Cikṣura was the War Minister, Tāmrā was Finance Minister, Asiloma was the Prime Minister, Viḍāla was the Foreign Minister, Udāka was the Military Commander and Sukra was the Education Minister. (Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

(ii) Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51 states that Sukra should be installed in temples with his Kamaṇḍalu (a vessel for carrying water) and wearing his garland.

(iii) At the time of the war between Devas and Asuras, Sukra taught Surasa a mantra to destroy everything. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

(iv) Sukra was Prahlāda’s Guru (preceptor). (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha kāṇḍa).

(v) Sukra worshipped Śiva and received from him “Mṛtaśajñīvari Mantra” (Mantra having power to revive the dead). (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(vi) Sukra had prohibited drinking. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 57).

(vii) He had gone in Indra’s assembly. (M.B. Chap. 7, Verse 22, Sahbhā Parva).

(viii) Sukra exists in Brahma’s assembly in the form of a planet. (M.B. Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(ix) Sukra resides with other Asuras on the top of the Meru mountain. All precious stones are in the possession of Sukra. Even Kubera (the god of wealth) lives by borrowing one-fourth of Sukra’s wealth. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 22).

(x) Sukra was among those who visited Brahma as he lay on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

(xi) Once Sukrācārya was the priest of Emperor Pṛthu. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 110).

(xii) On another occasion Sukra sent Indra to Prahlāda to obtain prosperity. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 27).

(xiii) By his power of Yoga Sukra once grabbed all the wealth of Kubera. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 9).

(xiv) He got the name “Sukra” because he came out through “Sivalīṅga” (Śiva’s penis) and thereby became a son of Pārvaṭi. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

(xv) Sukra learnt Śiva’s Sahasranāma (Thousand names) from the sage Tāṇḍj and taught it to Gautama. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 177).

(xvi) Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129, mentions that Bhṛgu had seven sons-Cyavana, Vajrāśīrṣa, Śuci, Aurvá, Sukra, Savana and Vībhu.

(xvii) Once in answer to a question of Mahābali, Sukra referred to the importance of Puspadāna (gilt of flowers). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 98).

(xviii) In his old age Sukra observed Vānaprastha and attained Heāven. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

(xix) In Mahābhārata, several other names like Bhārgava, Bhārgavādīyāda, Bhṛguṣreṣṭha, Bhṛguḍhvaha, Bhṛgukulodvaha, Kaviṇputra, Kāvyā and Uśanas are given for Sukra.

SUKRA II. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Uṇjā; they were, Rajas, Gotra, Uṛdhvavāhū, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra. All these seven persons were the Saptarṣis of the third Manvantaram (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10). In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 the names of the seven sons of Vasiṣṭha and Uṇjā are given as Rajas. Gātra, Uṛdhvavāhū, Savana, Alagha, Sukra and Sutapas.

SUKRA III. A king who belonged to the dynasty of Emperor Pṛthu. Two sons, Antardhāna and Vādi were born to Pṛthu. Antardhāna had a son named Havir-dhāna by wife Śikhaṇḍini. Havir-dhāna married Dhiṣāṇa who was born in Aṅgikula. Six sons were born to them. They were, Prācinabarhis, Sukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14).

SUKRATU. A king in ancient India. When once Saṅjaya talked in praise of the ancient Kings of fame in India, this king Sukrato also was mentioned. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, 235).

SUKRṣA. A liberal hermit. A story about this hermit occurs in Mārkandeyea Purāṇa.

Once Indra wanted to test Sukrṣa. So he came in the guise of a bird and requested for human flesh. Then the hermit called his sons and asked them to give their flesh to the bird. They were not prepared to do so. Sukrṣa got angry and cursed his sons that they would be born as birds. Accordingly the sons of the hermit left in the Garuda family under the names Dṛṇaputra, Prīṭīgāva, Vībhadha, Suputra and Sumukha. As a remission of the curse, the hermit said that even if birds they would be having wisdom and knowledge. After this, to keep his word, Sukrṣa got ready to cut his own flesh for the bird. Then Indra appeared in his own form and blessed the hermit.

SUKS̱ATRA. A heroic warrior who fought in the Kurukṣetra on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was the son of the King of Kosala. (M.B. Draṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 57).

SUKS̱MA. A notorious Daṇava, who was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Daṇu. The King Jayadratha, was the rebirth of this Daṇava. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 18).

SUKSMAPRAKṚTI. The cause which is indestructible, not clear and having always goodness as its form is Sukṣmaprakṛti. That unspeakable nature has no base. Sukṣmaprakṛti is immovable and indestructible. There is no sound or form or touch in it. This nature which has no beginning or end, which has only three attributes is the root cause of the universe. This entire universe was pervaded by this power from the beginning of the great deluge to the beginning of creation. Then there was no night or day, no earth or Sky, no light or darkness. Then there was only Brahman the union of Prakṛti and Puruṣa which could not be perceived by sense organs or intelligence. (See under Prakṛti).

SUKȘMAȘARIRA. See under Punarjana.

SUKTIMĀN. A mountain which was subdued by Bhimasena in the course of his conquest of the eastern country. (M.B. Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 5).

SUKTIMATI I. A river which used to flow by the side of Uparicaravasu’s capital city. There is a story about this river. Once the Kolāhala mountain fell in love with this river and kept it within himself. Uparicaravasu who came to know of this, gave a kick to the mountain. The kick produced a hole in the mountain and the river emerged through that hole. Sukumāra had a son and a daughter by Kolāhala mountain. The river presented them to the King. The King appointed the son as his military commander. Gīrīkā, the daughter of the river became the King’s wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 34).

SUKITMATII. The capital city of Ďhṛṣṭaketu, King of Cedi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 50).

SUKUMĀRA I. A Pulinda King. The name of the capital of this King was also Sukumāra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 10, that King Sukumāra was the son of King Sumitra. It is stated in some other Purāṇas that Śucitra was the father of Sukumāra and that during his regional conquest of the east Bhīma saṇa had defeated both. On another occasion Sahadeva, who had gone for the regional conquest of the south, also defeated both Sukumāra and his father. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 4).

When the battle of Bārata was about to begin, Sukumāra, the King of Pulinda joined the side of the Pāṇḍavas. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15, that King Sukumāra became one of the prominent chariot-fighters of the Pāṇḍava army.

SUKUMĀRA II. A nāga (serpent) who was born in the family of Taksaka. This serpent was burned to death in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

SUKUMĀRA III. A King of the Puru dynasty. The father of this King was Vibhu, the son of Vārṣaketa. Two sons named Ānarta and Sukumāra were born to Vibhu. The King Satyaketu was the son of Sukumāra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUKUMĀRA IV. A Sanskrit poet. There is a story about the devotion of Sukumāra to his teacher. Though Sukumāra was a dutiful student his teacher used to scold him always. Consequently Sukumāra harboured malice in his heart against his teacher. One night Sukumāra got on the upper attic of the house of the teacher with a big stone. His aim was to drop the stone on the head of the teacher. But that night the conversation of the teacher and his wife was about Sukumāra. The wife asked the teacher why he was scolding his disciple so often, when he was so dutiful and righteous. The teacher said that he loved him most and that the chastisement was meant to make him better and better. When Sukumāra heard this his heart was broken. With tears in his eyes, he got down with the stone and disappeared in darkness.

Next morning Sukumāra had no peace of mind. He approached the teacher. He asked the teacher “What is the punishment destined for him who had tried to kill his teacher?” The teacher replied that he should die a slow death in the fire made by the husk of paddy. Instantly Sukumāra made a pit and stood in it and filled the pit with husk up to his neck and set fire to the pile. When the teacher knew that the culprit was Sukumāra, he was filled with grief. He tried his best to dissuade his beloved disciple from his attempt. But it was in vain. While he was slowly burning in the fire he composed and sang the great poem ‘Śrī Kṛṣṇa Vilāsa’. The poet was not able to complete the twelfth Sarga of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Vilāsa.

The sixty-sixth stanza was the last one he sang. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was showing Satyabhāmā, the various countries and describing the prominence of each, when they had reached the earth after obtaining the Pārījāta flowers from the world of the gods. After having described the kingdoms of Pāṇḍya and Cōla, the poet was beginning to describe the natural beauty of 'Saptakoikāpas' (the seven Koṅkaṇa countries). The story says that when he had sung the last line of that stanza his tongue was burnt and he could not proceed with the rest of the poem.

SUKUMĀRA V. The son of King Bhāvyā who was the ruler of Śāka Island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 26).

SUKUMĀRA VI. An ancient place. This place was near the mountain Jaladhrāṣtrī in the Śāka Island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 21).

SUKUMĀRA VII. The capital city of the Pulindas. (See under Sukumāra III).

SUKUMĀRI I. A river in the Śāka Island. This river is famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 3).

SUKUMĀRI II. Daughter of King Śṛiṇāya. This Sukumāri was a wife of Nārada. (See under Parvata, Parva 2).

She detected Damayantī conversing with the brahmī named Subhāu, who came to Cedi in search of the latter and reported about their meeting to the queen mother. The name of the father of Sunandā and Subhāu was Virabahu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 63, 68 and 69).

SUNARTAKA NĀȚA. The name Śiva assumed when he appeared before Pārvatī, in disguise. Pārvatī was engaged in tapas then. (Śiva-Stotrasaṭaka, 34).

SUNASSAKHA. Indra. Once Indra disguised himself as a Sanyāsī and travelled in the company of a dog. At that time, he made an attempt to steal lotus flower from Brahmasaras in Kauśikī tirthā. Indra struck down at a single blow, Yātudhāni, the woman guard of the saras, who opposed him. From this time when Indra went about in the company of the dog, he got the name “Sunassakha”. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

SUNASSEPHA (DEVARĀTA). The story of a Brāhmaṇa youth who was to be offered as human sacrifice and who was saved by Viśvāmitra, is famous in the Purāṇas. The name of the Brāhmaṇa youth was Sunas-śepha. But even in the Purāṇas there are two versions of this story. In one of them, Sunasśepha is referred to as the son of Rcgkamuni. In the other, it was Hariś-candra who performed the yāga and Sunasśepha who was brought for sacrifice, was the son of a Brāhmaṇa named Ajigarta. After Viśvāmitra saved the boy, he got another name, “Devarāta”. (For details of the two versions, see under Ambariṣa and the 4th Para under Viśvāmitra).

Sunasśepha later became a Mahārṣi. He composed Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 1st Aṣṭaka. Besides in Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 6th Anuvaṇka, 30th Sūkta it is stated that Indra had given a golden chariot to Sunasśepha.

SUNAYA II. A region famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

SUNDA. An asura. He had a brother named Upasunda, and their father was Niśumbha alias Jharjha. Sunda and Upasunda were very cruel asuras. The two brothers performed tapas on the Vindhyā mountain with the object of conquering the three worlds. All attempts made by Devas to break up their penance failed and ultimately Brahmā appeared before them. They secured from Brahmā a boon to the effect that they would not be killed by anyone else but only mutually by them. Swollen-headed by the boon the brothers conquered the three worlds and none could kill them. Ultimately the Devas sent Tilottamā, the celestial damsel to them and she made them quarrel with each other. Both of them who fell in love with Tilottamā and wanted her as wife fought with each other and got killed. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 19). For details see under Upasunda and Tātākā).

ŚūRA VI. A Yādava King. He was the father of Vraṣūdeva and grandfather of Śīri Kṛṣṇa. By his first wife, Māriśa, he had ten sons and four daughters. The sons were, Vraṣūdeva, Devabhāga, Devasaṇa, Anaka, Śṛiṣṭījaya, Śyāmaka, Kaṅka, Saṁika, Vatsaka and Vṛka. The names of the daughters were, Prīthi, Śrutadeva (Śrutavedā), Śrutāvāra and Rājādhīdevi. The eldest of these, Prīthi, was given as an adopted daughter to Kuntibhoja. (Harivarīṇa, 2-34; 17-28; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 43; Verse 3, Chapter 104, Verse 1; Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). In Vṛūṇa Purāṇa it is stated that he had three more wives besides Māriśa, and from them Devas and mortals were born. (See under Śūrasena I).

ŚūRA VII. Father of Daśaratha's wife, Sumitṛa. He was invited to the Putraṇāmeśṭi Yāga performed by Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bīla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 13, Verse 26).

SURABHĪ. The cow of the Devas. (For details see under Kāmadhenu and Suraśabhi).

SURABHĪ II. A cow born from the 'Huṅkāra' (the sound 'hum') of Brahmā. As the cow grew up, milk began dripping down on earth from its udder and gradually it formed into the Kṣirasāgara (ocean of milk). Four daughters, Surūpa, Harīśikā, Subhadrā and Sarvakāmadhuk were born to Surabhi and they are considered to be protectors of the four regions. Surabhī lives in the seventh world beneath the earth i.e. Rasātāla. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).

SURABHIMĀN. An Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 18).

SURABHĪPAṬIŅĀ. An urban area of olden days in South India. During the Mahābhārata days Sahadeva deputed an envoy to this place and brought it under his control. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 68).

SURABHŪ. A sister of Kaṁsa. Ugrasena, the Yādava King had 80 sons including Kaṁsa and five daughters Kaṁsa, Māriśa, Kākā, Surabhī and Rāṣṭrapālīka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SURĀDEVĪ (VĀRŪṆI). A daughter of Varuna born of Deīvī, his brother's wife. She was the apple of the eye to the Devas. She is the presiding Devatā over liquor. She lives in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42; Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 35 and Chapter 66, Verse 52).

SURAHANTĀ. A son of Tapa, the Pāncajanya who is one of the Agnis who cause hindrances to Yajñās. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 13).

SURĀJA. An apsarā, woman daughter of Kaśyapa prayāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). Surāja gave a dance performance at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

SURĀKRṬ. A Brahmanadī son of Viṣāvāmitra. (M.B. Amśāṭa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57).

SURĀKṢAKA. A Gandharva King. He was the grand-father of Tātākā (See under Tātākā).

SURAPADMA. An asura hero. This asura invaded Devaloka with a huge army. Skanda Purāṇa mentions that in the battle that followed, Indra, who was defeated, fled to the place called Siyāli in Tanjore District in South India and did tapas to Siva.

SURAPRAVIRA. Son of Tapa, the Pāncajaya who cause hindrances to yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 13).

SURĀLI. A King in ancient India. He was invited by the Pāṇḍavas to participate in the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

SURASĀ I. Mother of nāgas (serpents).

1) Birth. Ten daughters were born to Kaśyapaprayāpati by his wife Krodhaśā, daughter of Daśa including Surasā. From Surasā were born all the nāgas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

Nāgas and Uragas are two sects of serpents. From Surasā were born Nāgas and from Krodhaśā, Uragas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 28).

Surasā was born from the wrath of Krodhaśā and the former had three daughters called Anala, Ruha and Virudā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 61).

2) Obstructed the passage of Hanumān. To test whether Hanumān, who jumped into Lāṅka to seek out Sītā, possessed power enough for the purpose, Devagandharvas backoned Surasā to them and told her as follows: "You mother of nāgas, do please assume a terrible form like a big mountain and appear before Hanumān and obstruct his passage. As soon as she heard the injunction, she jumped before Hanumān and attempted to devour him. In spite of Hanumān's earnest pleadings she stood before him with her mouth opened wide. Hanumān then, by his power of illusion, grew ten yojanas in size. Then Surasā opened her mouth twenty yojanas wide. Hanumān then grew thirty yojanas in size and Surasā opened her mouth forty yojanas wide. In this competition ultimately when Surasā opened her mouth hundred yojanas wide, Hanumān reduced his size to that of a finger, entered Surasā's mouth and came out through her ear. Surasā was pleased and blessed Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Canto 1).

3) Other information.

(i) Surasā lives in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 39).

(ii) Rohinī, mother of Balabhadrarāma, was an incarnation of Surasā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SURASĀ II. A deva woman who danced at the birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 63).

ŚūRASENA I. A King of Yaduvarṇa. 1) General. Śūrasena's kingdom was Mathurāpurī. This country was originally ruled by Kings of the Solar dynasty. Devi Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha explains how the Yādava Kings came to rule over Mathurā. There was a region called Madhuvanam in the Kālindī river valley. Madhu, the Asura, who lived in Madhuvanam had a son named Lavaṇa. Lavaṇa who was a tyrant and an oppressor of the gods, was killed by Śatrughna who established his rule there. In course of time, the place came to be known as “Madhurā”. After Śatrughna’s time his two sons ruled over the country. Thus the Solar dynasty came to an end and Mathurā puri came under the rule of Yadus. The first King of Yaduvānśa was Śūrasena. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Ka赊ṣa was the son of this Śūrasena. After the death of his father, since Vasudeva took up the occupation of tending cows, Ugrasena became King there. Ka赊ṣa was the son of this Ugrasena.

2. Other details.
(i) Śūrasena’s daughter Kunti was adopted and brought up by the king named Kuntibhojā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Refer Chapters 67, 109 and 110).
(ii) Devamīdhā, father of Śūrasena had another name, “Citraratha”. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 29).

Śūrasena II. A son of Kārttavīrya. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 86, it is mentioned that this Śūrasena killed Jamadagnī. (See under Śura II)

Śūrasena III. “Śūrasena was the old name for the region now known as Mathurāṁḍalā or Vrajāṁḍalā. The natives of this place were called “Śūrasenas”. The following pieces of information are given about the Śūrasenas in the Mahābhārata :—
(i) The Śūrasenas who were afraid of Jārāsandhi, fled to the southern lands. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).
(ii) In the course of his southern campaign, Sahadeva conquered the Śūrasenas. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 1).
(iii) The Śūrasenas offered presents at Yudhiṣṭhīra’s Rājasthalya. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 13).
(iv) It was between the two countries, South Yākṛṭlōm and Śūrasenam that the Pāṇḍavas travelled from the land of Pāṇcāla to Mātsyaeducta. (M.B. Viśrāta Parva Chapter 5, Verse 4).
(v) Śūrasenas were the body-guards of Bhīṣma during the Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12).
(vi) The Śūrasena forces once stopped Arjuna on the way. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).
(vii) Śūrasena attacked Arjuna and Sātyaki in Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 9).
(viii) Yudhiṣṭhīra soaked the earth with blood by killing the Śūrasenas at Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva Chapter 157, Verse 29).
(ix) Bhīmaṣena butchered the Kṣatriyas of Śūrasena by hundreds. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 4).
(x) Kṛpācarya, Kṛtavarmā and Śakuni from the Pāṇḍava side fought against the Śūrasenas. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 16).

Śūrasena IV. A king who fought against the Pāṇḍavas from the Kaurava side in the Bhārata Yuddha. He stood by Duryodhana in the “Kramaṇcavatyaśa” formed by Bhīṣma. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75 Verse 18).

Śūrasena V. A king of the Somavānśa of Praṭīṣṭhānapura. Śūrasena, who was childless, tried to propitiate the gods in many ways to obtain a son. In the end he got a son in the form of a serpent. But to keep it a secret, he performed the usual ceremonies connected with his son’s Upanayana, marriage etc. in the usual manner. At last by the mercy of Gautamidevi Śūrasena’s son obtained human form. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 111).

Śūrasenāpura. The city of Mathurā. Śūrasenā, Wife of Pravīra, the son of King Puru. A son named Manasyu was born to Pravīra by Śūraseni (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 76).

Surāṭram. I. A kingdom of Purāṇīc fame on the south-western part of ancient India. Akṛti, king of this country, was once defeated by Sahadeva, one of the Paṇḍavas. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 61). Holy place like Čamasoddhāda, Prabhāsakṣetra, Piṇḍāraka etc. are situated in this area. (Vana Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 19).

Surāṭram. II A Kṣatriya dynasty. Rūṣardhikha was a wicked King born in this dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74 Verse 14).

Surata. A celestial damsels, daughter of Kaśyapa-prajapati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). She gave a dance performance at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

Sūratara. A king who killed the mighty Rākṣasa named Paṭaccara. During the Bhārata Yuddha, Paṭaccara had taken his stand on the Kaurava side. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 58).

Suratha I. A king in ancient India. (See under Saṃdhi Chetṭiyār).

Suratha II. A king of the Puru dynasty. Suratha was one of the sons of Jahnū, the other sons being Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmaṇṣa. (Agni Prāṇa, Chapter 278).

Suratha III. One of the two sons of Janamejaya, the other one being Mahiṃān. Suratha had a son called Viṣūratha. (Agni Prāṇa, Chapter 278).

Suratha IV. Husband of Citrāṅgadā, daughter of Viśvakarmān. See under Viśvakarmāṇa, Para 2.

Suratha V. A king born from an asura called Krodhavaṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 62).

Suratha VI. Father of King Koṭikāya of Śibiḍēṣa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 6).

Suratha VII. A king of Trigarta. He was a dependant of Jayadratha. In the battle that followed Jayadratha’s abduction of Draupadi, Suratha was killed. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 18).

Suratha VIII. A warrior who fought against the Paṇḍavas in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

Suratha IX. A son of Drupada. He was killed by Aśvatthāmā in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 180).

Suratha X. A Paṇcāla mahārātha who fought on the Paṇḍava side in the great war. He was killed in battle by Aśvatthāmā. (Śaḷya Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 37).

Suratha XI. Son of Jayadratha by his wife Dūṣāla. Jayadratha was killed by Arjuna. When Suratha got the news that Arjuna, leading the yājñic horse had reached Sindhuśa, he ended his life in great fright. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 28).

SURATHA XII. A king who ruled over Kuṇḍalana-gari. He captured Śrī Rāma’s yājñic horse and also took Hanumāna, Sugriva, etc., prisoners. At last Śrī Rāma himself appeared on the scene, defeated Suratha and released the captives: (Padma Purāṇa, Pātala Khāṇḍa, 49, 52).

SURATHĀ. Mother of Emperor Sibī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 197 Verse 25).

SURATHĀKĀRA. A particular region in the Kuṣa Island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).

SURĀVĀN. Name of the horse attached to the chariot given to Agastya by the maharṣi called Ilvāla. (Śec under Agastya).

SURĀVITHI. A famous orbit of stars in Indraloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 12).

SUREṆU. A tributary of the river Sarasvatī flowing through Rṣabha island. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 26).

SUREŚA I. A son of Tala, the Pāṇcajanyāgni, one of the fifteen Agnis who cause hindrances to yājñas. (Vana Parva. Chapter 220, Verse 13); SUREŚA II. A Saṅātana Viśvadeva (eternal lord of Universe). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

SUREŚVARA. One of the eleven Rudras. (Śānti Parva Chapter 208, Verse 19).

SUREČANA. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 29).

SUREČIS. A son of Vasiṣṭha by Arundhati. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SUREDO. One of the seven seas, filled with Madya (wine). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 2).

SUREMĀN. A serpent belonging to the family of Tākṣaka. He was burnt at the Sarpsatara of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

SŪRPAṆAṆKĀḤ. Rāvaṇa’s sister.

1) Viśravas, son of Brahmā and Kaikasi daughter of Sumālī lived in the forest called Śṛesmātaka. Once Kaikasi had a sexual union with Viśravas at an untimely hour. As a result of this union, Kaikasi gave birth to four children at intervals of one Yama each. These children were, Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarna, Vibhīṣaṇa and Sūrpaṇākhaḥ. (Kamba Rāmaẏaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

2) Domestic life. Sūrpaṇākhaḥ was married to the Rākṣasa, Viḍyujiḥva. The son who was born to the couple was named Sambhuḥukmāra.

The Kālakeyas were the brothers of Viḍyujiḥva. At the time of Rāvaṇa’s return after his triumphal march, a battle took place between him and the Kālakeyas. The Kālakeyas fell under the sword of Rāvaṇa. Enraged at the death of his brothers, Viḍyujiḥva encountered Rāvaṇa. In the battle that followed, Viḍyujiḥva was killed. "On hearing about her husband’s death, Sūrpaṇākhaḥ went to Rāvaṇa waiting and lamenting. Moved to pity at the sight of her tears, Rāvaṇa said: ‘Dear Sister! You may travel through the three worlds and accept any man you like as your husband. Is there any one who would not wish to become my relative? Go and marry a husband suited to you. If any one turns down your proposal, just inform me. I shall come and make him your husband.’" Sūrpaṇākhaḥ was pleased. She at once started going round the three worlds with Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa; Kambārāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa).

3) Before Lakṣmaṇa. Sūrpaṇākhaḥ’s son, Sambhuḥukmāra was performing tapas to Siva in Daṇḍakāranya. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa arrived in the forest, accompanied by Siṭā. They reached the place called Paṅcavaṭī in Daṇḍakāranya. Śrī Rāma wished to set up his hermitage in the middle of the five “vaṭa” trees in Paṅcavaṭī.

At the very sight of Siṭā, Sambhuḥukmāra fell in love with her. He stood there in the form of a tree. While building the hermitage, Lakṣmaṇa felled that tree and thus Sambhuḥukmāra was killed. (See under Sambhuḥukmāra).

The widowed Sūrpaṇākhaḥ, in her search for a suitable husband happened to reach and settle down at the southern border of Daṇḍakāranya. She had failed in her search so far.

It was at this stage that she came to know of Śrī Rāma and his party. She disguised herself as Lalītā and entered Śrī Rāma’s aśrama. The sight of Śrī Rāma made her a victim to carnal passion. She submitted her desire to him, but he turned down her prayer. The disappointed Sūrpaṇākhaḥ left the aśrama at once. But she appeared again in front of Siṭā. Feeling that so long as Siṭā was alive, Śrī Rāma would not be prepared to court her, Sūrpaṇākhaḥ rushed furiously at Siṭā. Lakṣmaṇa who was watching the whole scene, suddenly rushed to the spot and pushed her out of the aśrama. He cut off her ears, nose and breasts. Sūrpaṇākhaḥ, bleeding profusely from her mutilation, hastened to her brother Rāvaṇa to inform him of the calamity. In obedience to Rāvaṇa’s command, Khara, Dūṣaṇa and others who came and encountered Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, were also slain in the battle. (Kamba Rāmaẏaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa).

SŪRPAṆĀKĀḤ. Another name for Kerala. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 99, we read that Pārīṣuṭrāma threw a “Śūrpa” winning basket from Gokarṇa southwards and the ocean up to the spot where the Śūrpa fell, became dry land. Since the land was formed by throwing the Śūrpa, it came to be called “Sūrpaṅakaḥ”. References to Śūrpaṅakaḥ in the Mahābhārata, are given below:–

(i) In the course of his triumph of the southern lands, Sahadeva conquered “Sūrpaṅakaḥ”. (M.B. Sahābh Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 65).

(ii) There is a sacred bath here, known as “Sūrpaṅakaḥ tīrtha”. By bathing here, one would obtain golden rāsis. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 43).

(iii) In Śūrpaṅakaḥ Kṣetra, there is a sacrificial platform originally used by Jamadagni. Close by, there are two holy places called “Pāśaṇa tīrtha” and “Candra tīrtha”. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).

(iv) Yudhiṣṭhira once happened to visit this sacred place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 8).

(v) Śūrpaṅakaḥ is the land formed by the withdrawal of the ocean. It is also called “Aparāntabham”. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 66).

(vi) Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50 states that by bathing in the water of Śūrpaṅakaḥ Kṣetra and observing a fast for a fortnight, one would be born as a prince in the next birth.

SURIKA. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 3).
SURUCI. A wife of Uttanapada. Svayambhu Manu had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttanapada. Uttanapada married Suruci and Suniti. A son called Uttama was born to Suruci and to Suniti was born Dhruva, (For details see under Dhruva).

SURUPA. A daughter of Visvakarman. Priyavrata, son of Svayambhu Manu married Suruppa and Barishmati, the beautiful daughters of Visvakarman. Suruppa had ten sons. They had a younger sister called Urjasvatī. (Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 8).

SURYA I. The God who gives light to the worlds.

1) Birth. It is said that the Sun was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. Mahāvisṣṇu begot Brahmā and Brahmā begot Marici. Prajāpati Kaśyapa was born from Marici. Several sons were born to Kaśyapa by Aditi the daughter of Dakṣa. They are known by the names Adityas, Vasus, Rudras and so on. Of these, Adityas are twelvel in number. (Aditya means the son of Aditi). There is a difference of opinion as to who these twelve Adityas are. According to Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, the twelve Adityas are Varuṇa, Sūrya (the Sun), Sahasrāṇā, Dhatā, Tapana, Savitā, Gabhasti, Ravi, Parjanya, Tvaṣṭa, Mitra and Viṣṇu. (See under Dvādaśādityas). But in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15, it is stated that the twelve Adityas are Dhātā, Aryamā, Mitra, Sukra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣa, Savitā Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu.

Very often these names are used as synonyms of the Sun. So it is better to assume that there are several Adityas and that it is the Sun who gives light and heat to the worlds. Vivasvān is this sun because it is said that from this Vivasvān the Manu Vaivasvata was born and from this Vaivasvata, Ikṣvāku, the first king of the Solar dynasty, was born.

2) The chariot of the Sun. The Sun rises in the east and sets in the west, in consequence of which days and nights occur. The Purānic assumption is that the Sun travels in a very big chariot. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long. The wheel is fixed to this. The great wheel of time with three centres, five tyres and six spokes, is fixed on that indestructible year. It has seven horses, which are the seven Vedic metres, called by the names Gāyatṛi, Brhaṭi, Uṣṇik, Jagaṭi, Trīṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh and Paṅkti. Another axle used for the chariot of the Sun is forty-five thousand five hundred yojanas long. The length of each half of the Yoke is proportionate to the length of the axle. The short axle of the chariot with the small half of the yoke is fixed on Dhruva. The wheel fixed on the other axle rests on the mount Mānasottara.

Separate Adityas, hermits Gandharvas, celestial maids, Yakṣas, serpents and giants sit, in the chariot of the Sun every month. In the month of Caitra, which is also called Madhumāsa, the seven officers of the month who travel daily in the chariot, are the Aditya Dhatā, the celestial maid Kraṭushalā, the hermit Pulasya, the serpent Vasuki, the Yakṣa Rathabhṛt, the gaint Heti, and the Gandharva Tumburu. In the month of Vaishāka also called Mādhava, the Aditya Aryaman, the hermit Pulaha, the Yakṣa Rathaujaś, the celestial maid Puṇḍjakasthalā, the giant Prabhati, the serpent Kacavira and the Gandharva Nārada sit in the chariot. In the month of Jyesṭha, the Aditya Mitra, the hermit Atri, the serpent Taṅkaka, giant Puruṣeya, the celestial maid Menakā, the Gandharva Hāhū, and the Yakṣa Rathasvana, sit in the chariot. In the month of Āṣāḍha, the Aditya Varuṇa, the hermit Vasiṣṭha, the serpent Nāga, the celestial maid Sahajanyā, the Gandharva Hūhū, the giant Ratha and the Yakṣa Citarathara, travel in the chariot. In the month of Śrāvaṇa, the Aditya Indra, the Gandharva Viśvavasu, the Yakṣa Srotas, the serpent Elāputra, the hermit Aṅgiras, the celestial maid Pramlocā, and the giant Sarpī travel in the chariot. In the month of Bhādra, the Aditya Viśvasvān, the Gandharva, Ugarsena, the hermit Bhṛgu, the Yakṣa, Āpuruṣa, the celestial maid Anumlocā, the serpent Saṁhapaḷa and the giant Viśyāgra sit in the chariot. In the month of Āṣāṇi, the Aditya Pūṣa, the Gandharva Vasuruci, the giant Vāta, the hermit Gaitama, the serpent Dhan añjaṇya, the Yakṣa Suṣeṇa and the celestial maid Gṛhbāci sit in the chariot. In the month of Kṛṣṇa, the Gandharva is another Viśvasvān, the hermit Bhadravāja, the Aditya Parjanya, the serpent Airavata, the celestial maid Viśvaņi, the Yakṣa Senajit and the giant Āpā sit in the chariot. In the month of Mārgaśīra, the Aditya Aṁśa, the hermit Kaśyapa, the Yakṣa Tārksya, the serpent Mahāpdam, the celestial maid Urvāśi, the Gandharva Citrasena, and the giant Viḍyut travel in the chariot. In the month of Pauṣa, the hermit Kratu, the Aditya Bhaga, the Gandharva Urṇāya, the giant Spṛjha, the serpent Karkotaka, the Yakṣa Arişṭanemi and the celestial maid Purvāciti travel in the chariot. In the month of Māgha, the Aditya Tvaṣṭa, the hermit Jamadagni, the celestial maids Kambala, the celestial maids Tilottama, the giant Brahmopeta, the Yakṣa Rājajiti and the Gandharva Dhrārāṣṭra sit in the chariot. In the month of Phālāguna the Aditya Viṣṇu, the serpent Aśvatarā, the celestial maids Raṁbhā, the Gandharva Suvarcas, the Yakṣa Satyajit, the hermit Viśvāmitra, and the giant Yaṁnopeta travel in the chariot. These seven persons live in the region of the Sun in their time. The hermits praise the Sun, the gandharvas sing; the celestial maids dance; the giants walk behind as guards. The serpents prepare the horses to be yoked; the Yakṣas hold the bridle and the Bālakhilyas stand round the Sun. These groups of seven in each month are responsible for heat, coldness, rain etc. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

3) The Vedic figure of the Sun. Even though the sun is only one of the seven groups, he is above the others in prominence. The complete power of Viṣṇu is the three Vedas Rg, Yajus and Sāma. The power in the form of the three Vedas blazes in the form of the Sun. That power destroys all the sins in the world. Viṣṇu stays inside the sun in the form of Rg, Yajus and Sāma for the sustenance and protection of the world. As said before, the three Vedas are the parāṣakti, or the feminine supreme power of Viṣṇu. She is the three Vedas themselves. Every month she stays inside that particular Aditya of the month. In the morning the Rgyveda praises the Sun. At noon the Yajurveda praises the Sun and in the evening the Sāmans such as Brhad Rathantara and so on. The three Vedas Rg, Yajus and Sāma are portions of Viṣṇu. This power of Viṣṇu stays in Aditya always. It stays not only in the Sun, but also in the three godheads Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva. At the time of creation Brahmā was pervaded by Rg. At the time of sustenance, Viṣṇu is pervaded by Yajus. At the end Rudra will be pervaded by Sāman. So the sound of Sāman will be unpalatable. Thus this Vaiśṇavite power which is having the attribute of purity (Sattva) and Vedas, pervades mainly the sun though it remains on the seven groups also. Being the seat of this power, the Sun blazes with his rays and destroys the darkness in all the worlds. Such a Sun is praised by the hermits. The Gandharvas sing in front of the Sun. The celestial maids dance before him. The giants guard him, the serpents prepare his chariot, the Yakṣas hold the bridle and the Bālakhīyas stand around him. Viṣṇu who is having the figure of the Sun pervaded by the power of the Vedas, never rises or sets. The seven groups are separate from that Viṣṇu. As the figures of those who approach, are reflected in a mirror fixed on a post, that power of Viṣṇu, without separating itself from that chariot, pervades them who come every month in turn. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aīśa 2, Chapter 11).

4) The direction of the sun. The Sun starts from the east and goes to the western ocean. The directions east and west originate from this rising and setting. As a matter of fact when the sun rises in the east it is bright in places behind it. But it does not shine in the palace of Brahmā on the top of Mahāmeru. The rays of the sun which enter the palace are driven back by the radiance of the palace. The Mountain Meru is north to all islands and countries. So on one side of that mount it is always day and on the other side it is always night. When the Sun sets his light enters fire. So at night the light of fire goes far. In the same way, at day time, the light of fire enters the sun. So the sun shines more. Thus because the light of the sun and fire enter each other the day and the night wax when the sun shines on the southern and northern hemi-spheres. The dark nights and bright days enter water gradually. The water seems a little red, in day time because darkness has entered it in the night. After sunset the water seems a little white because the day has entered the water. Thus when the sun passes through the middle of the island Puṣkara, the change of the Sun to one thirteenth portion of the earth is called ‘Mauhūrtikagati’ (covering the distance in a mahūrta – 48 minutes). The sun, like a fly sitting on the circumference of the wheel of a potter travels round the earth inclining a portion of a thirteenth of the earth, and making day and night. In the beginning of the transit in the Tropic of Cancer, the sun passes into the zodiac of Makara, and then to Kumbhā and Mina. After having completed the three zodiacs, the sun makes the day and night equal and enters Visuva. At the end of travelling in the Northern hemisphere the sun enters the zodiac of Karkata and transit to the south begins. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aīśa 2, Chapter 8).

5) The Sun in the clutches of the giants. The Sun is being attacked daily by a kind of giants called the Mandehas.

6) Family life. The Sun married Saṅjñā, the daughter of Viśvakārma. Three children Manu, Yama and Yamī were born to him by Saṅjñā. By Chāyā, the maid of Saṅjñā, three children, Sānaśicara, Manu and Tapati were born to the Sun. Aśvinikūrmas and Revanta were born by Saṅjñā to the sun who took the form of a horse. (See under Saṅjñā and Chāyā).

On several occasions other sons such as Sugrīva, Kālindī, Karna and so on were born to the Sun. (For details see under those entries).

7) The rising delayed. A story stating that the rising of the sun was delayed because of the curse of Śilavatī, is stated in Mahābhārata. (See under Śilavatī).

8) The Sun and the Syamantaka. Once the King Satrājiit did penance and got the jewel Syamantaka from the Sun. (For detailed story see under Prasena).

9) The Sun and Rāhu. Once the Sun and the moon pointed out Rāhu who had come to partake of the Amṛta (Ambrosia) in stealth and Mahāviṣṇu cut off his head. (For detailed story see under Amṛta, Para 4).

10) The Sun the teacher of Hanumān. The Sun is the teacher of Hanumān. (See under Hanumān).

11) The Sun and Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa happened to reach the Solar region, while he was conducting regional conquest. That night he rested on Mahāmeru, and then got into his plane Puspakāda, ready for fight in the morning. Seeing the Sun rising up, Rāvaṇa called his minister Prahasta and said to him, “Minister, go and convey my words to the Sun. ‘Rāvaṇa has come to fight. Either get down and fight or admit defeat.’ Prahasta walked towards the sun and told the words of the King to the two gate-keepers Pīṅgala and Daṇḍī. The Sun was informed of this by Daṇḍī. The Sun told Daṇḍī thus: ‘Daṇḍī, I don’t mind whether I defeat or I am defeated by Rāvaṇa. The thing is, that I have no time.’ Daṇḍī informed Rāvaṇa of this. Rāvaṇa went away shouting that he had defeated the Sun.

12) Fight with Śiva. See under Śiva Para 7, Sub para 7.

13) The Sun lost his lustre. See under Sukeśa.

15) The Sun and Karna. See under Karna.

17) The names of the Sun. Once the hermit Dharmāya repeated to Dharmāputra the one hundred and eight names of the Sun. Those names are given in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3.

13) Other details.

(i) Once Paścāti worshipped the Sun. The Sun created an unseen giant for her protection. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).

(ii) Paścāti did penance before the Sun and procured the ‘Aṣṭayaṇapātra’ (the pot that never became empty). (See under Aṣṭayaṇapātra).

(iii) The Sun destroys the ungrateful asuras (demons). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 16).

(iv) There is a story connecting the Sun and the South. In days of old the Sun performed a sacrifice according to the Vedas, and to Kaśyapa who was the ministerial priest, he gave the South as daksinā (offering). So the south got the name ‘Daksinā’. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 1).

(v) The west is the place where the Sun pours his rays after the end of the day. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 2).

(vi) When Karna and Arjuna confronted each other in the battle of Bhārata, the Sun boasted to Indra that Karna would come out victorious. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 57).

(vii) The Sun gave Subrahmāya two attendants named Subhṛāja and Bhaśvara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

(viii) Once Śiva anointed the Sun as the king of all the planets. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 31).
The Sun once gave Yajñavalkya the boon that he would get knowledge of the Vedas. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

The story of one who had attained the region of the Sun by ‘Uchchavṛtti’ (Living on the grains fallen on the field) is given in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, a few Chapters from 353, as follows:

There was a Brahmin in a place called Mahāpadma on the banks of the Ganges. He wandered here and there for knowledge of Vedas. Once a hermit met him and directed him towards a Nāga named Padmanābha. Padmanābha is the serpent which supports the chariot of the Sun. The Brahmin-hermit started in search of Padmanābha. At last he found out his house. But there was the wife of Padmanābha only. She said that her husband would return within a few days. Accordingly he remained on the banks of the Ganges without any food. Padmanābha returned and both of them met together. The hermit asked the nāga what he should do in order to get merged in God. The Nāga replied that he could become one with God by Uchchavṛtti. The Nāga continued: “The Sun is a god who had invoked into himself a saint who had lived only by the fallen grains in the field. The activities of that Sun are wonderful. The hermits and saints attach themselves to the rays of the Sun as birds attach themselves to the branches of trees. The great storms arising from the Sun spread wide in the sky. I saw once a person sitting inside that Sun who was a wonder of wonders. When that person as shining as the Sun came to him in the noon the Sun embraced him and scated him inside him. I asked him who he was. The Sun replied that he was a person who had attained heaven by Uchchavṛtti.”

Hearing the advice given by the Nāga, the Brahmin engaged in Uchchavṛtti and attained heaven.

The Sun gave Subrahmany ā shining beauty.

The Sun gave the hermit Jamadagni an umbrella and slippers. (See under Cherippu).

In old days when a war between the Devas and the Asuras was drawing near, Rāhu wounded the Sun and the moon. Along with that the universe fell in darkness, and the asuras began to destroy the Devas. At this time according to the prayer of the gods the hermit Atri assumed the figure of the Moon and made the Sun as shining as of old. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 2).

The Synonyms of Sun according to the Amarakośa are given below:

Sūrya II. An asura (demon). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26, that this asura was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. The King Darda was the rebirth of this asura.

Sūryadatta. A brother of King Virāṭa. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 11, that this Sūryadatta was known by the name Śatānika also. Sūryadatta also took part in the fight following the theft of the cattle of Virāṭa by Duryodhana and others. After killing the hundred warriors in the army of Trigarta, this Sūryadatta entered into the midst of the enemies and was killed by Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

Sūryadhvaja. A King in Ancient India. He was present in the Svaṇaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 10).

Sūryagrahaṇa. To know in detail about the view of the Purāṇas regarding the Solar eclipse, see under Candra IV, Para 4.

Sūryaketu. A dayita (demon). Once this dayita conquered the world of the gods and expelled Indra. At that time Purāṇajaya was the King of Ayodhya, who was born in the Solar dynasty. Indra requested for his help. Purāṇajaya agreed to help Indra, on condition that Indra should stand as an ox and that he would sit on the hump of that ox and fight. Accordingly he sat on the ‘Kakud’ (hump) of the ox and fought in the battle, killed Sūryaketu, and reinstated Indra in his former position. Because he sat on the ‘Kakud’, Purāṇajaya got the name Kakutśtha. The dynasty of the King came to be called by the name Kakutśtha. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

Sūryākṣa. A King in ancient India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 57, that this King was born from a portion of the King Kratha.

Sūryamāsa. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata Abhimanyu killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 15).

Sūryanetra. A bird born in the family of Garuḍa. Mention is made about this bird in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 13.

Sūryasāvitra. An eternal god of offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

Sūryāśī. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

Sūryatīrtha. An ancient holy place situated in Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 48, that by bathing here and worshipping the manes one may attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma and go to the region of the Sun.

Sūryavāmśa. An important dynasty of ancient Bhārata. It is stated in Deviḥāgavatī, Skandha 7, as follows about the origin of this Solar dynasty.

The Lord of creation Brahmā originated from the lotus in the navel of Viṣṇu. That Brahmā did penance for ten thousand years and pleased Parāśakti, the great goddess of power, and started creation. First of all he created seven mental sons. Of them Marici became expert in creation. Prajāpati Kaśyapa the son of Marici became a greater expert. The Sun is the son of Kaśyapa. Nine sons named Ikṣvāku, Nābbha, Dhrṣṭa, Śaryati, Nāriśyanta, Prāṇi, Nṛga, Diśta, Karuṣa and Pṛṣadāra were born to the Sun. Of these Ikṣvāku became King. This line of Kings born from the Sun is called Sūryavarṇā (Solar dynasty). (See the Genealogy.)

SŪRYA VARCAS. A Deva Gandharva. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55, that this Deva Gandharva born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa took part in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

SŪRyāVARMA. A King of the country of Trigarta. This King had a brother called Ketuvārma. Sūrya-vārma and Ketuvārma fought with Arjuna when he was leading the sacrificial horse of Yudhiṣṭhira. Both the Trigartas were killed in that fight. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

SUSĀMAN. A noble Brahmin born in Dhananājaya Gotra. He participated in the Rājasūya conducted by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 34).

SUSĀNKULA. A famous urban area in North India. Arjuna once conquered this region. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 11).

SUSĀNTI I. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was Sānti’s son and father of Puruja. (Bhīṣma Parva, Skandha 9).

SUSĀNTI II. Indra during the third Manvantara. (See under Manvantara).

SUSĀRMĀ. King of Trigarta desa. The following information about him is gathered from Mahābhārata.

(i) Suśarman, son of Vṛūḍhakṣema attended Draupadi’s wedding. (Adī Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 9).

(ii) Once he incited Duryodhana to attack Matsya, the Vīrāṭa King. Accordingly Duryodhana attacked the Vīrāṭa city and Suśarman aided him in the battle. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 30).

(iii) In the battle that followed the lifting of the cows of the Vīrāṭa King by the Kauravas, Suśarman took the Vīrāṭa King as captive. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 7).

(iv) In the battle that followed the abov incident Bhīma caught Suśarman as prisoner. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 25).

(v) At the instance of Yudhiṣṭhira Bhīma set Suśarman free. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 58).

(vi) Suśarman fought against the Paṇḍavas and on the first day of the great war he fought a duel with Cekitana. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

(vii) Arjuna defeated Suśarman. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 1).

(viii) He fought with Arjuna, Bhīma and Dṛṣṭadyumna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 114; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14).

(ix) He vowed that he would kill Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 11).

(x) When Dronācārya was killed, he ran away from the battle-field. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 18).

(xi) Arjuna killed Suśarman. (Salya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 45).

(xii) Names like Prasthalādhipa, Rukmaratha, Trai-garta and Trigarta are used as synonyms of Suśarman.

SUSĀRMAN II. A Pāñcāla warrior who fought on the Paṇḍava side in the great war. He was harassed in various ways by Bhīṣma and was ultimately killed by Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 46).

SUSĀRMAN III. Last of the Kings in the Kaṇḍa dynasty. He was killed by his minister Bali. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUSĒNA I. A nāga born in the Dhṛtarāṣṭra dynasty. The nāga was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Adī Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

SUSĒNA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma in the great war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 34).

SUSĒNA III. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was the grandson of Avikṣit and son of Parikṣit. (Adī Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

SUSĒNA IV. A son of Sage Jamadagni. The Sage asked Susena to kill his mother, but he did not obey his father, Jamadagni, therefore, cursed him and Parasurāma redeemed him from the curse. (Vana Parva, Chapter 116).

SUSĒNA V. Father in-law of Bāli, the monkey king. Susena, father of Tārā, deputed one thousand croe monkeys to search for Sītā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 2). Susena, an expert in the science of medicine and the art of warfare, was the son of the monkey called Dharma. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa).

In the Rāma-Rāvana war Susena fought the Rākṣas forces and killed Vidyumnāli. Lakṣmana swooned on being hit by the arrows of Rāvana who fought with redoubled vigour following the death of Indrajit. Many monkeys also swooned. Then Susena, the medical expert, brought back to consciousness the swooned folk with the help of Viṣālayakaṇṭa, Sauvānyakaṇṭa, Saṅjivani and other herbs.

Susena also attended the coronation ceremony of Śī Rāma. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapters 101, 123, 154).

SUSĒNA VI. A son of Karna. He fought with Nakula in the great war. Uttarāyujaś killed him in battle. (Karna Parva, Chapter 73, Verse 13).

SUSĒNA VII. Another son of Karna. Nakula killed him in the great war. (Salya Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 49).

SUSĒNA VIII. A king of the Bharata dynasty. He was the son of Dhṛṣṭa and father of Sūṅthita. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUSĒNA IX. A king, who married Rambhā. (See under Rambhā, Para 5).

SUSĪLĀ I. A daughter of the Gandharva named Susīla. (See under Pramohini).

SUSĪLĀ II. A brahmin who got rich due to the observance of Navarātri-penance. He led a very hard life with many sons and was naturally thinking of means of making money and a noble brahmin taught him about the greatness Navarātri. Accordingly Susīla observed for nine years the Navarātri-penance and at last Devī appeared before him and made him rich. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3).

SUSĪLĀ I. A Gandharva lady. (See under Pramohini).

SUSĪLĀ II. A cow, the sister of Surabhi. She was the cow used in connection with sacrificial offerings made in the ārama of the sage Jamadagni. Jamadagni once got his wife Reṇukā killed by Paśurāma. Though he brought her back to life as desired by Paśurāma, Jamadagni felt deep sorrow for having got his wife killed. So, he went to Goloka and pleased Surabhi by his penance and she gave him Susīlā, her sister. Jamadagni gave the cow (Susīlā) to Reṇukā. It was this Susīlā which later on Kartavīrya juna took away by force. (See under Jamadagni, Para 8). (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

ŚUSKA. A Mahārāja who lived in the Gokarna temple. When Bhāgiratha brought Gaṅgā from heaven to the earth, sea water began to rise and the temples situated near the sea were submerged. At that time Śuska went along with other Mahārājas to visit Paśurāma at the Mahendra mountain. In response to Śuska's prayer, Paśurāma raised the submerged temples including the Gokarna temple, above the water.

ŚUŚNA. An asura. In Rgveda we find that once Indra bound the magician Śuspa in chains and put him in prison.

SUŚOBHANĀ. A Mahākāla princess. King Parikṣiṭ of Iksvāku dynasty married her and three sons Śala, Dala and Bala, were born to the couple. (See under Parikṣiṭ II).

SUŚRAVAS I A Vidarbha princess. King Jayasena of the Puru dynasty married her and a son called Arvācēnā was born to them. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

SUŚRAVAS II. A king of the Rgveda period. When enemies encircled him he prayed to Indra who helped him by diving away the 10099 enemy warriors. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Śūkta 53).

SUŚRAVAS III. A spy of the Devas. He once informed Sarasvatī secretly about the penance by the Sage Kātyāyana. Sarasvatī appeared before the Sage and told him that he would get from Sage Sarasvati the knowledge he wanted. Accordingly Kātyāyana ended his penance and went to Sage Sarasvata.

SUŚRUTA. Reputed master of the science of Surgery, Suṣruta was the grandson of King Gādhī and son of Viśvamitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55). He is the author of Suṣrutasyanāhitā, one of the famous texts on Ayurveda.

SUŚTHALĀ. A place of Purānic fame in ancient India. The people who lived here were called Susthalas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 16).

SUṢUPTI. One of the four states or conditions of man. Jāgrat, Svapna, Suṣupti and Turiya are the four states of man. (For details see under Jāgrat).

SUŚVARA. A Gandharva woman. (See under Pramohini).

SUŚYĀMĀ. An apsara woman. She was the wife of R唐代va, son of Ārṣīṭeṣa. The couple had a daughter called Vṛddhā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

SŪṬA I

1) General information. A hermit who recounted the Purāṇas to other hermits at Naimiṣāraṇa forest. He was a disciple of Vyāsa. Vyāsa composed the Purāṇas and taught them to his son, hermit Sūka who was a man of abstinance and who was not born of womb. At this time Vyāsa had another disciple named Śūta. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that this Śūta who was a fellow-disciple of Sūka, who had learned all the Purāṇas directly from the teacher Vyāsa, and who was capable of saying stories so convincingly, was the son of the hermit Lomaharṣa.

2) In Naimiṣāraṇya. Śūta who had learned the Purāṇas directly from Vyāsa, happened to reach Naimiṣāraṇya once. (See under Naimiṣāraṇya). Naimiṣāraṇya is the abode of hermits in the Kali-age. In days of old, hermits, who were miserable because of the evils of Kali-yuga, which was fast approaching, gathered here at the end of Dwāparayuga. They went to the world of Brahmā to consult about the means and ways of preventing the evils of Kali-yuga. Having heard their complaints Brahmā brought a wheel of the figure of mind and placing it before the hermits told them thus: “You follow this wheel. The place where this wheel falls down will be a place of purity, which will not be affected by the evils of Kali-yage. There you can live in peace, without being affected by the evils of Kali-age till the coming of the Satyayuga.” Saying these words Brahmā set the wheel rolling in front of them. The hermits followed it. The wheel rolled on till it reached the earth, fell down and was crumpled to powder in a particular place. That place became famous later under the name Naimiṣāraṇya. Śūta came to this place.

As soon as they saw Śūta, the hermits such as Saunaka and others who were living there welcomed Śūta with hospitality and told him thus: “Oh! hermit, you are the disciple of Vyāsa. You have learned the eighteen Purāṇas from Vyāsa. We are eager to hear them. So please recite to us the Purāṇas, the hearing of which will remit all sins and secure heaven.”

According to this request Śūta recited the eighteen Purāṇas to the gathering of the hermits. It is in the form of the teaching of Śūta to Saunaka and the others, i.e. in the form of a dialogue between Śūta and Saunaka, that the people got the Purāṇas. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

3) Śūta was beheaded. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there occurs a story, stating how Balabhadradāma cut off the head of Śūta as the battle of Kurukṣetra had started when Śūta had been reciting the eighteen Purāṇas in Naimiṣāraṇya and how his head was fixed in its place again and he was brought to life. (For further details see under Balabhadradāma, Para 6).

4) Other details. Śūta was one of the hermits who visited Bhīma on his bed of arrows during the battle of Bharata. (MB, Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 47 Verse 12).

SŪṬA II. One of Viśvamitra's sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahābāhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57.)

SŪṬA III. A blended class of people. (See under Varna).

SUTALI. A part of Pāṭāla (netherworld). (See under Pāṭāla).

SUTALI. The wife of Aṣvasuta, the son of the King of Vajra. Sutala was the daughter of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96, 250).

SUTALI II. The daughter of Ahuka otherwise called Ugrasena. (Mahābāhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33) Śri Kṛṣṇa made Akrūra marry this Sutala.

SUTAPAS I. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Homa and the father of Bala. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUTAPAS II. A Prajāpati who lived in days of yore. A son named Prśnigarbha was born to this Prajāpati by his wife Prśī. That son was a partial incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. (For further details see under Aditi Para 7).

SUTAPAS III. A son of Vasīṣṭha. Seven sons named Rastras, Gotras, Urdhvabāhū, Saṇaṇā, Anagha, Sutap and Šukra, were born by his wife Urjā. All the seven of them were the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) of the third Manvantara. (See under Manvantara).

SUTAPAS IV. Father of the hermit Upamanyu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

SUTAPAS V. A hermit of the family of Bhṛgu. (See under Ugratapas).
SUTAPAS VI. A hermit who was born in the dynasty of Bharadvaja. This hermit had two wives. A son named Kalâyamaśita was born by Pitārkaṇyakā, one of the two wives.

The glamour of the second wife of Sutapas attracted the sun, who raped her once and from this, the son Aśvinīśuta was born. On seeing that his wife was a harlot, Sutapas abandoned her with her son. Afterwards, at the instance of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the hermit received his wife and her son back. (Brahmavaivarta: 1: 11).

SUTAPAS VII. A hermit. This hermit once approached the princess Utpalāvatī and requested her for coition with him. The princess refused. Then he cursed her, to become an animal. Utpalāvatī begged for liberation from the curse. Sutapas felt pity for her and blessed her thus:—"A son named Lola will be born to you. He will become the Manu of Tāmasa Manvantara." (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

SUTARĀ. A Gandharva damsel who had been cursed. (For further details see under Pramohini).

SUTASOMA. The son born to Bhrimasena by his wife Draupadī. The information regarding this Sutasoma, taken from Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Sutasoma took birth from a portion of the Viśva-devas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).
(ii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 28, that this prince was given the name Sutasoma, because he was born by the blessings of Candrā (Moon).
(iii) Sutasoma had a combat with Vikarṇa on the first day of the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīmā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).
(iv) He rescued Śrutakarmā from the hold of Durumukha in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīmā Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 39).
(v) Sutasoma fought with Viśvavati. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 24).
(vi) Sutasoma fought with Śakuni and was defeated. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 18).
(vii) There was a severe fight between Sutasoma and Asvathāmā. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 14).
(viii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sautāktra Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 55, that in the battle of Bhārata, Asvathāmā entered the camp of the Pāṇḍava army in the night and killed Sutasoma.

SUTEJANA. A King who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

SUTITRTHA. An ancient holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 54, that the Devas and the manes would come to this place, and that if offerings to the manes are given at this place, one would get the merits of performing horse sacrifice.

SUTIKSHA. A hermit. While Śrī Rāma and Laksmanā were living in the forest with Sītā, they visited the hermitage of hermits such as Sarabhaṅga, Sutikṣa, and others. Once Indra came to the hermitage of Sutikṣa and invited him to the world of gods. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma came to the hermitage with Sītā and Laksmanā. When they were nearing the hermitage, Indra said "I shall see Rāma later when he has completed his great task." Saying thus, Indra went away from the hermitage. Śrī Rāma and his wife and brother asked the hermit, where in the forest, they were to live. The hermit told them that they could live in that hermitage itself.

This hermit was the brother and disciple of Agastya. Once Sutikṣa changed a wicked and cruel man named Duṣṭanī to a good and righteous man by sprinkling holy water of Gaṅgā on him. (See under Duṣṭanī). (Vāmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

SUTRA (VEDASUTRA). See under Veda.

SUVARṾĀSTHĪVĪ. Son of King Śrījaya. While sages Nārada and Parvata were living in that King’s palace the following incident took place.

Śrījaya expressed his sorrow over having no issues to Nārada who then blessed him to have a son named Suvarṇāsthi. The King began performing Yajñas from that day onwards and his queen conceived and in due time delivered a child who was named Suvarṇāsthi and he became an ascetic even as a boy. Indra got alarmed by the penance of Suvarṇāsthi and tried to frighten him by assuming the forms of various cruel beasts. He also sent his Vajrāyuḍha against the ascetic, but all to no purpose.

The boy became four or five years old when one day while strolling in the company of his mother on the banks of the Ganges, a tiger jumped upon him. This tiger of illusion had been sent by Indra and the tiger killed the boy. His mother wept aloud and people in the palace gathered around her. Śrījaya wept bitterly. Ultimately Nārada appeared, consoled the King and with the permission of Indra brought the boy back to life. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 31; also see under Śrījaya).

SVADHĀDEVī. Wife of the Manes. There is a story, as given below, in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, about the birth of this goddess.

At the beginning of creation Brahmā created seven groups of Manes of whom four were embodied and three were lustrous ones. The deities called the Manes are the Agnisvātās, the Barhiśadas, the Somapās, Yama, Anala, Soma and Aryanān. The Śrāddhās (oblations offered to the manes) were stipulated as the food of these manes. It was ordered that the Brahmin who does not make offerings to the manes, will be as mean and despicable as the Brahmin, who has not learned the Vedas, who has not eaten meals presented to an idol in temples, and who has not worshipped Devī (goddess), and that he would not be eligible to perform any religious ceremonies. Thus Brahmā meant Śrāddha as food for the manes. But the portion of the rice balls offered by the Brahmins stipulated as the food of the manes, seldom reached them. At last the manes complained to Brahmā. Then Brahmā created a woman of beauty, youth, knowledge and power to grant boons, and of good character, from a portion of pure nature. She was named Svadhā, and was given to the manes as wife. Then Brahmins were ordered to give offerings to the manes only with the spell (Mantra) of Svadhā. When the Brahmins began to do as they were ordered, the manes also began to get food, and they became contented.

Two daughters named Menā and Dhārīṇī were born to the manes by Svadhadēvi. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa I, Chapter 10, that both of the daughters were expounders of Vedas, full of knowledge and the seat of all good qualities.

SVĀHĀ. A daughter of Bṛhaspati. This Svāhā who was always angry had a son named Kāma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 22).

SVĀHĀDEVī.

1) General information. Wife of god Agni (fire). There is a story about the birth of this goddess, as given below, in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

In the beginning of creation sufficient arrangements had not been made for food to be supplied to the Devas (gods). They were in misery. At last the devas reached Satyaloka and requested Brahmā to make some arrangements for their food. Brahmā pacified them by saying that he would make available to them, the ‘havis’ offered by Brahmins as food. Then Brahmā meditated on the Mūla-Prakṛti. A particle of Mūla-Prakṛti appeared before Brahmā and asked him what boon he required. Brahmā said thus:—Oh Goddess! The gods are miserable due to lack of food. The fire is not powerful enough to digest the ‘havis’ offered by Brahmins in the fire, so as to convert them as food for the gods. The fire would become powerful to digest the havis only if your esteemed self would reside in fire as the power of digestion. Only the havis offered, with the mantra, (spell) ending with the holy name of your glorious self could be digested by fire and taken to the gods as food, and they could accept it as food. So it is my request that your gracious self would become the power that dwells in fire as the figure of wealth and prosperity, adored by men and gods.”

But that goddess said that her desire was to get Śrī Kṛṣṇa as her husband. She did penance to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who appeared and said: “Devī! you will take birth as the daughter of King Nagnajit in Varāha Kalpa (a world-age) and then you will become my wife. Now you have to become the wife of Agni under the name Svāhādevī and become the power of digestion, and part of the spell (mantra). You and Agni will be worshipped together by all. From that day onwards Svāhādevī became the wife of Fire. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 10, that three sons Pāvaka; Pavamāna and Śuci, were born to the couple. (See under Devi).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42, that Svāhādevī remains in the court of Brahmā, glorifying him.

(ii) Once Svāhādevī appeared among the wives of hermits. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 7).

(iii) When Subrahmanya was anointed as captain of the army, Svāhādevī also was present. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

SVAITREYA. Son of Śvitrā, There is a story in Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 7th Anuvāka, 33rd Sūkta that Śvaitreya once hid himself under water for fear of enemies.

SVAKṢA. A region in India, very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīrma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

SVANA. Son of the Agni (fire) called Satya. It is said that this Agni is the agent which causes disease to living things. This agni got the name Svana because human beings produce Svana (pitiable cry) when they are afflicted with diseases. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 15).

SVANAYA. Son of Kṛṣṇa Bhāgayayavya. The daughter of this King, who is praised in the Rgveda, was married by the hermit Kaksīvān. (For further details see under Kaksīvān 1, Other details, Para 6).

SVAPHALKA. Father of Akṛura. Vṛṣṇi, a Yādava King had two sons Svaphalka and Cītakra. It was divinely ordained that there would not be epidemics and drought in the place where Svaphalka lived. Once there was no rain for a period of three years in the land of the King of Kāśi. So the King of Kāśi took Svaphalka with him to his country. With his arrival there was rainfall in the land and the King who was pleased at it gave his daughter Gandini in marriage to Svaphalka.

There is a story about the birth of Gandini also. Gandini remained in her mother’s womb for many years. At last the King of Kāśi called to the child in the womb and said, “Take birth at once; why do you remain there so long?” The child replied, “I shall come out if you allow me to offer a cow as gift every day.” The King allowed it and the child was born. She was named “Gandini.” She used to offer the gift of cows to Brahmaṇas daily. After she married Svaphalka, several sons including Akṛura were born to her, (Harivarīśa, Chapter 34, Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SVAPNA (DREAM).

1) General information. One of the four states of mind.

2) Result of Svapna. The Indians believe that there are two kinds of dreams and that they have the power to suggest things going to happen in future. So Indian sages have classified dreams as good dreams and bad dreams.
Bad dreams:—
Seeing the following in dream is bad.

1. Grass and trees have grown all over the body except the navel. (2) The dust of bronze was sprinkled on the head. (3) The head was completely shaved. (4) One (the dreamer) had been nude. (5) He (the dreamer) had worn dirty clothes. (6) He had applied oil on the body. (7) One is smeared with mud. (8) He had fallen from a higher level to a lower level. (9) He had married. (10) He had sung songs. (11) He had amused himself by playing a lute etc. (12) He had seen a stream of birds or semen of sesame oil or oil-cakes. (13) He had entered the womb of his mother. (14) He had been on a funeral Pyre. (15) The flag post of Indra had been broken down. (20) The Sun and the Moon had fallen down. (21) The gods, Brahmins Kings or teachers had been angry. (22) Stars or planets have fallen. (23) He had engaged himself in dance or playing musical instruments or singing. (24) He had played musical instruments except the lute. (25) He had been carried down by the current of a river. (26) He had taken bath in muddy water or cowdung water or Ink. (27) He had embraced virgins. (28) He had engaged in pederasty. (29) Limbs of the body were damaged. (30) He had vomited and passed excrements. (31) He had gone to the south. (32) He had caught disease. (33) Fruits have been destroyed. (34) Cleavages occurred in minerals. (35) The house was covered with dust. (36) He had swept the house clean. (37) He had played with devils or cruel animals or monkeys or low caste people. (38) He had suffered molestation and hurts from enemies. (39) He had worn hermit’s coloured cloth or played with coloured clothes. (40) He drank oil and got immersed in water. (41) He has worn blood-coloured garland and cosmetics.

If the dreams mentioned above are seen it should not be mentioned to anybody. After the dream, either he should sleep again or take bath. To counteract the effects of bad dreams, do one of the following such as offering sesame as oblation in fire; worshipping Viṣṇu or Śiva, or the Sun or Gaṇeṣvara; singing hymns of praise; reciting sūktas (verses) such as Puruṣa-sūktā etc. The dreams seen in the first watch of the night will come into effect within one year; dreams seen in the second watch of the night will take effect within six months; those seen in the third watch of the night will take effect within three months and those seen in the fourth watch of the night will take effect within half a month and those seen at dawn will be realized within ten days. If a bad dream and a good dream are seen in one night, the last one will take effect. So it is better not to sleep any more in the night after seeing a good dream.

B. Good dreams. Seeing that—

1. He has climbed on a mountain or the upper storey of a building, or on the back of an elephant, or horse, or bull or on the top of trees having white flowers, or in the sky. (2) Grass has grown in the loins. (3) Several heads have grown. (4) Hair is turned grey or adorned with white flowers. (5) One is wearing white cloth. (6) He has caught the Moon, or the Sun or the stars and patted them. (7) One has embraced the flag of Indra or hoisted the flag of Indra. (8) He held the earth and fountain. (9) One has attacked the enemies. (10) He has won a controversy, or gambling or a battle. (11) He has eaten raw flesh or pudding. (12) One has bathed in blood. (13) He has drunk Śūrā (liquor) or blood or milk. (14) One has handled weapons. (15) The sky is clear. (16) Drank the milk of cow, buffaloes, elephant or mare, by mouth as their calves do. (17) One got blessings from the gods, or Brahmins, or teachers. (18) One is appointed with water in the horn of cow or water oozed from the lunar region, or appointed as the ruler of a kingdom. (19) The head is wounded or he himself was dead. (20) Houses etc. have caught fire. (21) One received the emblems of kings. (22) He has played the instrument lute. (23) A king or elephant or horse or gold or an ox or a cow comes before.

If at the end of the dream he is seen as having climbed on the back of an ox or an elephant or on the top of a house or a mountain or a tree, or as having smeared ghee or excrement on the body or gone to a prohibited woman, or seen white cloth, clear water, tree with fruits, or a clear sky, it forebodes good futurc. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 229.)

ŚVAYAMBHUVA MANU. Son of Brahmā and the first of the Manus.

1) Birth. Śvayambhuva Manu was born as the mental son, and Śatarūpā as the mental daughter, of Brahmā. Śvayambhuva did penance and acquired boons for ruling over the subjects. He married Śatarūpā herself. Brahmā appointed him as the first Manu to rule over the subjects. Two sons named Priyavrata and Uttanapāda and two daughters named Prasūtī and Ākūti, were born to Śvayambhuva by his wife Śatarūpā. Of the two daughters Prasūtī was given to Prajāpata Dakṣa and Ākūti to Prajāpata Ruci as wives. A son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakṣiṇa were born to Ruci by Ākūti. The children were twins.

It is believed that Śvayambhuva and Śatarūpā are the first human beings. A story as given below, occurs in Matsya Purāṇa. Brahmā took birth as a man somewhere in Kāśmira. Brahmā who took birth as man, created Śatarūpā from his own body, without any decrease in its radiance. Śvayambhuva (Brahmā) appreciated the beauty of Śatarūpā. He grew amorous. But Brahmā was ashamed of his feeling, as Śatarūpā being half of his body, was his daughter. Being subjected to love and shame at the same time Śvayambhuva stood there, looking at Śatarūpā. To avoid the look of Brahmā, Śatarūpā moved to one side. Brahmā had no courage to turn his face to that side. So another face sprang up on that side for him. Śatarūpā turned to four sides and Brahmā thus got four faces. His amour subsided. When the desire subsided, a man originated from Brahmā. That man is Śvayambhuva. (For further details see under Manvantara).

SVAYANJATA. A son born to a man by his own wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 119 Verse 33).

Syayamprabhā, the celibate, became the maid of Rambhā. (For the rest of the story, see under Rāma Parva 25). (Kathāsārtisāgara, Madanāmahikālambaka, Tārāṅga 3).

SVAYAMVARA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This sub-section comprises Chapters 183 to 191 of Ādi Parva.

SVAYAMVARA II. A Kṣatriya custom of princesses selecting their husbands themselves. There are three kinds of Syayavnāvara. These three types are stipulated for Kings only. The first type is Icchāsvayavnāvara, the second one is Sayavasthāsvayavnāvara and the third is Sauryaśulkasvayavnāvara. No condition is attached to Icchāsvayavnāvara. Anybody may be chosen as husband according to the wish of the bride. Damayanti Syayavnāvara is an example of this. In the second it will be stipulated that the bridgroom will have to possess certain qualifications. In Śtā-Svayavnāvara Śrī Rāma drew the bow of Tryambaka, and married Śtā. This is an example of the second type of Syayavnāvara. The third type is meant for adventurous heroes. Arjuna’s marrying Subhadra is an example of the third type of Syayavnāvara. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandaḥ 3).

SVEDAJA. An asura (demon). (See under Raktaja).

SVETAI. A King in ancient India. By his moral and spiritual power he was able to restore his dead son-to life. He did not cat meat. Mahabhurata, Anushasana Parva, Chapter 159 mentions that he was one of the few Kings who deserve to be remembered with reverence at dawn and dusk. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 233; Santi Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 66; Anushasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

SVETI. II. A King, Mahabhurata, Sabh Parva, Dikshitya Patha, Chapter 14 mentions that he was one of the prominent Kings in India.

SVETI. III. A son of the Virata King. Sveta was the son of King Virgin by his chief wife Surathi, who was a princess of Kosala. Sveta had attended Yuhiṣṭhīra’s Rājaśya. This distinguished warrior was killed by Bhishma in Bharata Yuddha. (M.B. Dikshitya Patha, Virata Parva, Chapter 16; Sabh Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 20; BhISHMA Parva, Chapter 48).

SVETI. IV. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahabhurata, Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 64).

SVETI. V. Son of the elder brother of King Sudeva. There is a story of how Sveta, who was a sinner, attained Mokṣa (salvation) by a vision of sage Agastya. Towards the end of his life, Sveta attained Mokṣa by performing austere tapas. But since he failed to earn God’s grace by giving food to the hungry, even in Heaven, he was tormented by hunger and thirst. His hunger was so severe that he began eating his own flesh. At last as suggested by Brahma he was born again on earth and after a visit to Agastya re-entered Heaven.

SVETI. VI. A daughter of Dakṣa. Ten daughters were born to Dakṣa by his wife Krodhavasī, including Sveta. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranya Kāṇḍa, 14th Sarga).

SVETI. VII. A mountain in Uttarā Khaḍa. In Mahabhurata, Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 1, we find that the Paṇḍavas crossed the Sveta mountain during their life in the forest.

SVETI. VIII. A country situated on the northern side of the Nila mountain. The region known as “Hiranyakam” is situated to the north of this country. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 37).

SVETABHADRA. A Ghyaka (guardian of treasury). Mahabhurata, Sabh Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15 mentions that he serves Kubera in Kubera’s assembly. He was the guardian of Kubera’s treasury.

SVETADVIPA. An island. It was on this island that Mahavishnu performed his austere tapas for obtaining “Brahma Vidyā”. It is situated on the northern side of the ocean of milk. It is 32,000 miles above Meru mountain. The inhabitants of Svetadvipa are without the sense organs. They do not take food. They are rich in “Jīna” (knowledge). Their bodies give out perpetual fragrance. These sinless people are of white complexion. Their bodies and bones are as hard as Vajrayudha. Their heads are as broad and flat as umbrellas and their voice as loud as thunder. Each of them has four arms and sixty teeth. All of them worship Śiva. (M.B. Santi Parva, Dikshitya Patha, Chapter 335).

SVETAKETU. A Maharsi.

1) Birth. Svetaketu was the son of the sage Aruni or Uddalakā who was born in the Gautama clan. Svetaketu had a sister named Sujātā. Aśṭāvakra was her son by the sage, Kahota. Thus Svetaketu was Aśṭāvakra’s uncle. Svetaketu and Aśṭāvakra grew up together in Uddalakā’s sārama. (See under Aśṭāvakra).

2) Pride perishes. Under his father’s training Svetaketu became a great scholar. With the increase in his scholarship, he became very proud. The father who understood this called him to his side and asked him:—“By studying all about what you can see, hear and understand, have you learnt anything about what you cannot see, hear or understand?” Svetaketu admitted that he did not know. Then Uddalaka explained to him the mystery of Paramātma (universal soul) which is without beginning or end. (Chândogyopanishad).

3) Svetaketu in Pātēlā. After completing his education under his father, Svetaketu went to Pātēlā. There, in the royal assembly Jaivali, the Pravahana King asked him the following questions:—“Where do people go from this world? How do they return? Where do Devayāna and Pitṛyā na meet? From where do they diverge? Why is Pīṭloka imperfect? What is the fifth yajñabal?”

Svetaketu answered that he did not know because his father had not taught him these things. Then he went to his father Aruni and told him about his failure to answer these questions. The father admitted that he too did not know them and suggested that they should ask Pravaha himself. Since Svetaketu refused to go with him to see the King, Uddalaka himself went to Pravaha. The King enlightened him on the above topics and sent him back. (Chândogyopanishad 1.8).

4) Ācārya of Yajña Rules. In Kausitaki Brahmaṇa, Svetaketu is described as the Ācārya of the rules of Yajña. He has laid down definite rules and procedures for priests officiating in Yajñas. Besides, he has suggested the different customs and practices to be observed by Brahmācārins and tapasvins. In the treatises dealing with Dharmaśāstra before his time, food of sweet taste was denied to Brahmācārins. But Svetaketu has pointed out that it was an entirely wrong doctrine. (Gopātha Brahmaṇa, 1.33; Sāṁkhyaśātra Brahmaṇa, 1.33).

Once an ācārya named Jātikārya became the priest of the Kings of Kāśi, Kosala and Videha. Svetaketu who was angry at this complained bitterly about this to his father. Then Uddalaka reminded his son that priests should yearn for wisdom instead of being attracted by worldly pleasures.

5) Author of Kāmaśāstra. It is more or less clear that it was Svetaketu who abridged the original work on Kāmaśāstra by Nandi, into 500 chapters. This abridgement of Svetaketu was again abridged after some years by Bāhravya. It was after abridging it again and adding Dattakācyārya’s “Vāṣika” and Suvarṇanābha’s “Sāṁprayogika” etc., that Vātsyāyana composed his famous treatise “Kāmasūtra”. Really speaking, the basis of Vātsyāyana’s “Kāmasūtra” was the works of Bāhravya and Svetaketu on Kāmaśāstra.

It has been observed that the first person who raised his voice against the evils of drinking and adultery by the Brahmaṇa community was Svetaketu. There is a story in the Mahabhurata about the fact which prompted him to bring marriage within the framework of law. Svetaketu was Uddalaka’s son, born to his wife by one of his disciples. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 22). Once his mother was abducted by a Brahmaṇa. This incident inspired him to make stringent laws insisting on monogamy for men and women.

SVETAKI. A King. He was mostly occupied in performing Yajñas. Mahābhārata gives the following details about this yajña lover:

(i) Svetaki performed numerous Yajñas. He was a King who was deeply absorbed in Yajñas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222).

(ii) Once the Yajña he performed was so prolonged that the Rtviks were utterly tired and left the Yajña in the middle. After that the King had to bring in other Rtviks to complete it. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 223, Verse 21).

(iii) He worshipped Śiva and propitiated him to get a blessing to enable him to perform many Yajñas. Śiva advised him that he should do “āhuti” (homa or sacrifice) in Agni continuously for twelve years. Accepting this advice, the king invited Durvāsas to make arrangements for the Yajña. Appointing Durvāsas as Rtvik, Svetaki continued the Yajña for a hundred years. (For more information see under Khaṇḍavadāha).

SVETAPARṆA. King of the city of Bhadrāvati, which was situated to the east of Hastināpurā. In Jaimini Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15, it is stated that Bhima after a fight captured and took with him the beautiful horse of this King for the purpose of Yuddhiṣṭhira’s Āsvamedha Yajña.

SVETARAŚMI. An elephant. A Gandharva happened to be born as a white elephant in the Kaliṅga country, as a result of a curse. Śvetaraśmi is the name of that elephant. The King Ratnādhipa mounted that elephant and did many exploits.

Kratnādhipa was the ruler of the island Ratnakūṭa. He was a prominent Vaiṭavāva. He did tapas to Viṣṇu with the object of conquering the whole earth and to get all princesses as his wives. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him and said:—“A Gandharva has been born in the land of Kaliṅga by a curse as a white elephant. His name is Śvetaraśmi. As directed by me, he will come to you. You may ride him and he will take you through the air across the sky. All the Kings against whom you fight, will be defeated and they will offer their daughters to you as tribute.”

Next day, the elephant Śvetaraśmi descended before him through the air. As advised by Mahāviṣṇu Ratnādhipa mounted the elephant and conquered the whole world and secured numerous princesses. One day as the King was riding the elephant and travelling through the air, an eagle came and pecked at the forehead of the elephant. Ratnādhipa drove it away by a thrust with his spear. But the elephant fell down unconscious. Even after five days he did not rise. The King offered prayers to the “Lokapālakas”. He was about to cut off his own head and offer it as sacrifice to them. Just then he heard a mysterious voice saying:—“Do not be rash; Śvetaraśmi will rise at the touch of a chaste woman.”

The King at once went to the palace and brought his chief queen who was kept closely guarded and asked her to touch the elephant. But he did not rise. Then he ordered all the rest of his wives in turn to touch the elephant. Still the elephant did not rise. When he found that none of his 80,000 wives was a “chaste woman”, the King was ashamed of himself. Then he brought every one of the women in his kingdom and made them touch the animal one by one. But it was all in vain. At this stage, when Ratnādhipa was very much depressed, a merchant named Harṣagupta from Tāmrālipī happened to come there. He was accompanied by his wife Śīlavatī. She touched the elephant and immediately it stood up. Ratnādhipa was very much pleased and married Śīlavatī’s sister Rājadattā. After offering many rich presents to Śīlavatī and Harṣagupta Ratnādhipa took Rājadattā on the back of Śvetaraśmi to a deserted island Catussālādāvīpa and left her there under the protection of several women attendants. The King spent his nights at Catussālādāvīpa and days in his own palace.

One day Rājadattā was remaining alone in her residence. The attendants had gone out to attend to various duties. At this time a man happened to arrive there from somewhere. He was Bhavanacena, the son of a Vaiṣya. He reached the island with the help of a piece of wood which was floating in the sea after a shipwreck. Rājadattā who heard his story, was irresistibly attracted by him and she embraced him. Just then the King arrived on the scene. Consoling himself by thinking that this was also the will of Fate, he left off the Vaiṣya youth.

The King returned to his palace and decided to spend the rest of his life by doing tapas in the forest, after giving away all his wealth and property to the poor. When he was about to mount Śvetaraśmi, the animal suddenly transformed itself into a man of divine glory, dressed in gorgeous clothes and jewels. He spoke to the King as follows:—“I am a Gandharva. My name is Somaprabha. There is my elder brother Devaprabha who lives on the Malaya mountain. My brother had a wife named Rājavati. Once the three of us went to worship in a Viṣṇu temple at a place called Siddhāvāsa. At that time my sister-in-law sang a devotional song. A Siddha who was enchanted by her song was looking fixedly at her. Enraged at it, my brother asked the Siddha why he was staring at his wife with lustful eyes. The innocent Siddha was naturally provoked by the question and pronounced a curse that my brother and his wife would be born in human wombs and in that birth, he would see his wife having sexual union with a stranger. When I heard my brother being cursed I became very angry. I hurled a toy elephant which was in my hand at the time, at the Siddha. He then cursed me also to become a white elephant just like the toy with which I hit him. I am that younger brother and you are my elder brother. This Rājadattā, your queen was my sister-in-law Rājavati. Our curse is now over.” As soon as he concluded, all the three of them renounced their earthly bodies and were restored to their original forms. (Kathāsārītsāgara, Ratnaprabhālambaka, Tāraṅga 2).

SVETASIDDHA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

SVETĀSVATARA. He was the author of the famous Upaniṣad known as “Śvetāsvatara. Many spiritual and philosophical topics are discussed in this work divided into six chapters.

SVETAVĀHĀ. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

SVETAVAKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

SVIṢṬAKRT I. Another name of Agni (Fire). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 22, that this Agni was the sixth son of Bhṛṣpati.

SVIṢṬAKRT II. The Agni (fire) called Viśvapati, who was the second son of Manu. Rohiṇi the second daughter of Manu also is known by the name Svisakrt.
It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, that the offering in fire, of the fat portions of the sacrificial animals, is carried out properly by the help of this fire.
SVITRAPUTRA. See under Svatitreyas.
SYOTTHA. A King. (See under Sarasvati).
SYAMÅ. One of the nine daughters of Mru, including Syamá. They are called Navakanyas. They were married by the sons of Agnídhra. (Bhágavata, 5th Skandha).
SYAMA. A mountain in Sákidváp. It is as dark as clouds and very tall. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).
SYAMABALÅ. A heroine of great prosperity. (See under Bhadraśravä).
SYAMAKA. A son of Śūra by Māriśā. (Bhágavata, 9th Skandha).
SYAMANTAKA. A divine jewel. (For further details see under Prasenä).
SYAMŚRAMA. An ancient holy place. By bathing and living here for a fortnight one would obtain the power of "Antardhana" according to Mahabharata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30.
SYAMAYANA. One of the sons of Visvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55).
SYANDIKÅ. A river in Kosala. This is very famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 49, Verse 12, that Śri Rāma, who had started for forest-life, crossed the river "Syandikā where peacocks and swans called."
SYÅPARNA (S). A priestly community. They were the priests of King Viśvantara. Once Viśvantara decided to perform a Somayāga. Without allowing Såparnas to take part in that yāga, the King invited other priests for the purpose. At that time, Rāmahārgaveya, one of the Syaparnas devised a new method concerning Somayāga and established his claim to priesthood. (Aitareya Brähmana, 7, 27).
SYÅVÅŚVA. Son of the sage Arcanānas. (See under Arcanānas).
SYENA I. A class of birds. A daughter named "Syeni" was born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Tāmār. Syenas were the sons of Syeni. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 56).
SYENA II. An ancient sage. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva Chapter 7, Verse 11, describes him as shining in Indra's assembly.
SYENACITRA. A King in ancient India. This King had never eaten meat. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).
SYENAGAMI. A military commander of Khara the Råkṣasa. In his battle with Śri Rāma, Khara had twelve military commanders including Syenagami. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26).
SYENAJIT I. Son of Dala, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 63 mentions that he was the most beloved son of his father.
SYENAJIT II. Uncle of Bhīmasena. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 27).
SYENI. See under Syena.
SYUMARASMİ. An ancient hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 238, that this hermit got into the stomach of a cow and sitting there, talked with the hermit Kapila about the ways of Karma and renunciation. This hermit Syumaraśmi is as ancient as the Rgveda. A statement as follows, occurs in Rgveda, Mantra 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112. "Ye Ávins who are the Leaders. Come here also with those protective weapons by which you gave protection to Atri, Śāmiyu and Manu, and the arrows by shooting which you saved Syumaraśmi."

T
TA (fa). This letter means a thief or the inner down of a bird. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).
TA (fa). This letter means the act of singing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).
TADITPRABHA. A female follower of Subrahmanyas. (Verse 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).
TAJASA. A holy place. This is situated in Kurukiṣṭrtra. The importance of this place lies in the fact that it was at this place that all devas together crowned Subrahmanyas as their Commander-in-chief. (Sloka 16, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).
TAITTHIRI. A celebrated sage of the Taitthirya branch of sages. He attended the Yāga conducted by Uparicaravas. (Śanti Parva).
TAKṢA. A son born to Bharata of his wife Māṇḍavi. This prince along with his brother Puskara conquered Gandhērvaśa and created Taś̐kaśilānagarī there. (Uttarakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, and Vāyu Purāṇa).
TAKṢA KA I. A fierce serpent.
Kaśyapamuni got of his wife Kađrū serpents and Taśkaśa was one of the serpent chiefs. (Sloka 5, Chapter 35, Ádi Parva). See also under Kađrū.
2) Taśkaśa and Parīkṣit. In his boyhood Taśkaśa went out from the family. The reason was a curse by his mother. Once Kađrū and Vinatā, another wife of Kađrū, entered into a controversy regarding the colour of the hair of the tail of the horse Uccaiśravas. Kađrū said, it was black and Vinatā said it was white. It was decided that she who lost the wager should become the servant of the other. That night Kađrū called her children and asked them to go and hang on the tail of the horse so that it should appear black. Some of the righteous children opposed this deceitful attempt of their mother and refused to go. Kađrū cursed them saying that they would be burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. Kađrū sent those children out from home and Taśkaśa became their leader.
At that time Parīkṣit (King of Bharata) became the victim of a curse that he would die by the bite of Taśkaśa within seven days. (To know more details regarding this curse of the sage see under Āśīka). The worried King in consultation with his ministers decided to take protective measures. At first he moved to a seven-storeyed palace and stayed on the seventh storey. Physicians of fame and those well-versed in mantras were posted at the palace. Brahmans were put on duty for prayers. The entire palace and precincts were guarded by huge elephants. Security arrangements were such that even wind found it impossible to enter the palace without permission. The King did all his daily routine activities in the palace itself.
At that time Kaśyapa [There is a version that it was Dhanvantari who was thus sent back by Takṣaṅka. 9th Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata] was the greatest of all physicians and maṃtrikas and, greedy that he was, he started to the palace of Parīkṣit thinking that it would be the best opportunity to obtain some money from the King. Takṣaṅka also was going to the palace in the guise of a brahmin. On the way Takṣaṅka met Kaśyapa and knowing well that the presence of the celebrated Kaśyapa at the palace would be an obstacle to the achievement of his mission, he approached Kaśyapa. They talked on the way and Kaśyapa said he was going to the palace to save the King from the bite of Takṣaṅka. Then Takṣaṅka, revealing his identity, said that it was impossible to save anybody from the result of his bite. Both then decided to test their skill then and there. A huge banyan tree with many branches spreading wide was standing nearby and Takṣaṅka gave it a bite. Within seconds the huge tree was charred to destruction; Kaśyapa then took some water and reciting a mantra poured the water over the ashes of the tree and then to the surprise of Takṣaṅka, the tree rose up and stood in its original form. On seeing that Takṣaṅka confessed that Kaśyapa was superior to him. Takṣaṅka then coaxed him to his side and giving him a huge amount as bribe bade him return home.

Six days went by and on the seventh day Takṣaṅka reached the palace of Parīkṣit. He found the palace well-guarded and watched. There was no way to go in. Takṣaṅka then called all his relatives and had them disguised as brahmins. He sent them in with fruits and roots, like people who had come to pay homage to the King. Takṣaṅka crept into one of the most attractive of the fruits as a tiny worm. The guards at the gate stopped them. The fake brahmins then said that they had come a long way from a far off tapovana and should be allowed to see the King. The information was carried to the King. The King said he would see the brahmins the next day but ordered their gifts to be brought to him. When the fruits and roots were brought to him, he gave a fruit each to the ministers, himself taking the most beautiful fruit of the lot. When he cut the fruit open he saw a worm with two black eyes and a red body sitting inside it and was a bit surprised. Then he addressed his ministers thus: "Oh, best of ministers, by your earnest and sincere endeavour nothing has happened to me till now. The Sun is going to set and the term of the curse is going to end. There is no need to be afraid of any poison now. But let not a curse of a sage go futile. Let this worm bite me and fulfill the curse." So saying the King took the worm and placed it on his neck. The worm changed itself into the fierce Takṣaṅka and bit the King and the King fell down dead. (12th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How Takṣaṅka became Indra's friend. Once the son of a sage of great divine splendour named Uttanka was studying under a Guru named Veda. When his education was complete, the Guru asked him to bring as daksīṇā (fees) the ear-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pausya. Indra made Takṣaṅka steal the ornament and created many obstacles on the way. (For details see under Uttanka). That incident made them mutual friends and gradually Takṣaṅka became an intimate friend of Indra.

From that day onwards Uttanka waited for an opportunity to take vengeance on Takṣaṅka. It was at that time that Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, became the king. Janamejaya was only eleven years old when he became king and he was not then aware of the details of the death of his father. Uttanka went to him and told him how Takṣaṅka killed his father. Janamejaya became furious and asked him how to wreak vengeance on him. Uttanka suggested the performance of a Sarpasatra to which all the serpents should be attracted by mantras and burnt to death there. The young king agreed and Uttanka with other rṣis commenced the Sarpasatra.

One by one all the serpents came and fell into the sacrificial fire but Takṣaṅka was not to be found. Where is Takṣaṅka? This question was heard from many lips. Takṣaṅka was specially invoked by Uttanka. Takṣaṅka could not bear the power of Uttanka and he ran and prostrated before Indra. Indra not only did give refuge but gave him half of his seat in the throne and Takṣaṅka sat on it fully confident of security. Uttanka was enraged, when after repeated calls by mantra, Takṣaṅka did not appear and so he sat in meditation for some time to know the cause. He then saw Takṣaṅka sitting on the throne of Indra and the sight threw him into fury and he invoked Takṣaṅka, Indra and the throne and all. Lo! in an instant Indra, Takṣaṅka, the throne and all started moving towards the sacrificial fire! Within seconds all would have been burnt to death but for the timely intervention of a brahmin boy named Aśīka, son of the sage Jatākāru. (See under Aśīka, Takṣaṅka escaped death that time).

Takṣaṅka by instructions from Indra was living in the forest of Khāndava and when that was burnt by Agni, it was Indra who saved Takṣaṅka from the fire. (See under Khāndavadāha).

4) Other details.

(i) A King called Candrāṅgada lived in the house of Takṣaṅka for some time. (See under Candrāṅgada).

(ii) Takṣaṅka in the guise of a brahmin named Kṣapaṅka went to the sage Uttanka and stole the ornaments from him. (See under Uttanka).

(iii) Once the Earth was made into a cow and everybody milked from her what each wanted. The serpents milked poison from her and they then used Takṣaṅka as the calf. (See under Pṛthu).

(iv) During the burning of the forest of Khāndava, Arjuna slew the wife of Takṣaṅka. (See under Khāndavadāha).

(v) When the soul of Balabhadrāma, after his death, reached Pātāla, Takṣaṅka received it with respect. (Sloka 15, Chapter 4, Mausala Parva).

(vi) Takṣaṅka lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Sloka 8, Chapter 9, Sambha Parva).

TAKṢAṅKĀ I. The elder of the two sons of Lakṣmāna of his wife Urmilā. The other was Chatrakeṭu. Following the instructions of Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmāna went to the east sea coast, defeated the forest tribe there. He then constructed a city there named Agati and made Takṣaṅka the king there. He then went to the west sea-coast and destroying the barbarous tribe there constructed a city there called Candramatī and made Chatrakeṭu (? candrakeṭu) the king. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

TAKṢAŚIĻĀ. A place of Purānic celebrity situated in the north-west of Bhārata. Even from ancient times this TĀLA. A hell. There are many hells under water including Tāla. (Chapter 6, Aṃśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).
TĀLACARA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bharata. (Sloka 26, Chapter 140, Udyoga Parva).
TĀLADHVAJA. The phantom husband of Nārada. Once Nārada became a woman and a king called Tāladhvaja married her (Devī Purāṇa). It was to show how the mind is controlled with illusion that Mahāviṣṇu made Nārada into a woman.

Once Nārada went to Mahāviṣṇu and asked him about the secret of life. Mahāviṣṇu said that there was nothing called life and life exists because of Māyā the illusion of the mind. Nārada insisted that he should see Māyā (illusion) and so Viṣṇu got down to Vaikunṭha with Nārada on the back of Garuḍa.

Crossing forests, rivers, cities, lakes, villages and mountains they reached Kanyākubja. There they saw a beautiful lake. Garuḍa landed and Viṣṇu and Nārada got down. They walked along the shore of the lake for some time and then they sat beneath a tree for some time. After some time Mahāviṣṇu asked Nārada to take a bath in the lake. Pleased at this command Nārada placed his violin and deer-hide on the shore and after first washing his face and feet and doing 'ācāmana' with Kuśa grass in his hand stepped into the water for his bath. Mahāviṣṇu stood near the violin and deer-hide of Nārada and Nārada dipped himself in the water. What a surprise! Nārada was changed into a woman of great beauty. She had no memory of her previous birth and getting herself to the shore she stood there watching the surroundings there. Then a king called Tāladhvaja came on horse-back that way. He addressed the beautiful woman as Saubhāgyasundarī and started talking with her. Within hours they got married and Tāladhvaja took her to his palace and spent the honey-moon there happily. Twelve years went by and Saubhāgyasundarī became pregnant. In due course she got a son named Viravarmā. After another two years she got another son named Sudharmā. Thus she delivered a son every two years for twenty-four years becoming the mother of twelve sons. After some time she bore eight more sons also. When all the twenty sons came of age they were married according to the custom and in due course those sons also got sons. Thus Tāladhvaja and Saubhāgyasundarī became the heads of a large family of children and grand-children and lived happily. One day a king from a far-off place with a great army suddenly came and surrounded Kanyākubja. In the fight that ensued most of the sons and grand-sons of Saubhāgyasundarī were killed. The king fled from the battlefield and came to the palace. Saubhāgyasundarī was in great distress and when the enemies left the battlefield she secretly went there to have a last look at her sons and grandsons lying dead. The sight terrified her. They lay there without heads, hands or legs, eyes protruded, stomach cut open, intestines lying out and blood oozing out from everywhere. She fell to the ground and wept bitterly. Then Mahāviṣṇu came there disguised as an old brahmin and talked to her. He gave her instructions on some truths about life. Saubhāgyasundarī then called Tāladhvaja and they both went to the old lake and as instructed by the old brahmin Saubhāgyasundarī took a dip in the water. Lo! she became the old Nārada.

When Nārada got up from the lake Mahāviṣṇu was still standing near his violin and deer-skin smiling at him. The sight of Viṣṇu gave him knowledge of all that had happened. He stood there counting in his memory how he had requested Viṣṇu to show him Māyā and how he had taken a bath in that lake and how he had spent a long period of married life ending in misery and how Viṣṇu had come to her in the form of an old brahmin when she had cried to him in agony and how the old brahmin had taken her and Tāladhvaja to the lake again and how he had become his old self again. He stood there still pondering over these when Viṣṇu called him and said "Come on Nārada, how slow you are. Finish your bath and come soon. What are you thinking about?" Tāladhvaja, however, was unmoved by any of these. He was puzzled to find a bearded Sannyāśī rising up from the place where his beautiful wife had dipped herself for a bath. He went to Nārada and asked "Oh best of sages, where is my wife who has just dipped herself in this same place? From where do you come then?" Even before waiting to hear a reply from him the King began to make a hue and cry about the loss of his wife. Then Mahāviṣṇu went to him and consoled him by saying with illustrations that 'human ties are only ephemeral' and asked him to take a bath in the lake. Tāladhvaja after his bath became diseased with life and after doing penance in the forests attained mokṣa. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TĀLADHVAJA II. See under Sinhhadhvaja.
TĀLAJANGHA. Jayadhvaja, fifth son of Kārttavīrya, got a son named Tālajangha. The sons of this valiant man are called Tālajangha. There was once a great fight between Viṭṭhotra, the eldest of these sons, and Paraśurāma. (Chapter 88, Brahmanda Purāṇa).

TAMAS I. A hell.
TAMAS II. One of the three qualities of the soul. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are the three qualities. It is through the union of these three qualities that the inner soul enters the life of all animate and inanimate objects. The attributes of Tamas are greed, sleep, bravery, cruelty dishbelief in god, bad habits, begging and indifference. It is because of the action of tamognata that one becomes a prey to lust. It is the worst result of tâmasic activities that people are born as inanimate objects, worms, insects, fishes, serpents, tortoises, cows and deer. As a better result of Tâmasic activities people are born as elephants, horses, Sûdras, barbarous people, lions, tigers and hogs. It is the good result of tâmasic deeds that produce pilgrims, good castes, egoistic people, demons and devils. (Chapter 12, Manusmriti).

TAMASA. A sacred river. People of Bharata were using the water of this river for drinking. (Sloka 3, Chapter 9, Bhûṣma Parva). The famous âśrama of Vâmiki was on the banks of this river. This place was the scene of the well-known episode of the Kraûñca birds and the famous curse of Vâmiki beginning with ‘Mâ niśāda’. (Bâla Kânda, Sarga 2, Vâmiki Râmâyana).

TÂMASÂ. The fourth Manu. (See under Manvantara). Sâyamabhava Manu, son of Bhûrma, was the first Manu. He had two sons of Purânic fame named Priyavratas and Uttanâpâda. Of these Priyavratas married the beautiful and virtuous daughters of Vîśvákarma the Prajåpatis. They were Surûpâ and Barhiûşmati. Of his first wife Surûpâ, he got ten sons Agûndhra and others. The youngest child was a daughter named Ûjjvasvati. Of the sons, Kavi, Savana and Mahávâra became detached from worldly life and became learned in spiritual knowledge. Priyavrat got of his second wife Barhiûšmati three sons named Uttama, Tûmasa and Raivata. They were very valiant and they gradually became chiefs of Manvantaras. (8th Skandha, Devi Bhâgavata).

TÂMISRA. A hell. (See under Kâla).

TAMOD NTAKRT. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 58, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

TÂMRA. A demon, son of Murâsura. The demon Mûra had seven children named Tûma, Antariksa, Srâvana, Vasu, Vîbhâvasu, Nabhvasân and Arûpa. Of these Tûma was Mahûsâsura’s minister for a long time. The Chief Minister of Mahûsâsura was Asîloamh. Of his three daughters named three sons named Uttama, Tûmasa and Raivata. They were very valiant and they gradually became chiefs of Manvantaras. (8th Skandha, Devi Bhâgavata and 5th Skandha, Devi Bhâgavata).

TÂMRA. Daughter of Daksâ. Tûmra was married to Kaśyapa and he begot of her five daughters named Kraûñca, Bhûs, Sûnî, Dêttrârâstri and Sukî. Of these Kraûñca delivered owls, Bhûs delivered Bhâsas, Sûnî, Kites and Vultures, Dêttrârâstri, swans, geese and cuckoos, and Sukî delivered Natâ and Natâ in turn in Vînata. (Sarga 14, Aranyana Kânda, Vâmiki Râmâyana).

TÂMRA OUDÂ. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 18, Chapter 46, Anûsasana Parva).

TÂMRADVÎPA. An ancient place of habitation of Daksîna Bharata. This place was conquered by Sahadeva in his victory march. (Sloka 68, Chapter 31, Sahabha Parva).

TÂMRA LIPTA. A King in ancient Bharata. Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this King. (Sloka 24, Chapter 30, Sahabha Parva).

TÂMRA LIPTA. A King in ancient Bharata. Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this King. (Sloka 24, Chapter 30, Sahabha Parva).

TÂMRALIPTA. A King in ancient Bharata. Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this King. (Sloka 24, Chapter 30, Sahabha Parva).

TÂMRAAPARÂTI. A holy river of Dakṣiṇa Kerala. Once the Devas did penance on the banks of this river to obtain salvation. (Sloka 14, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

TÂMRÂRUṬÂTÂRTHA. A sacred place. He who visits this place would get the benefit of doing an aśvamedhayajna and he would go to Brahmaloka. (Sloka 154, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TÂMRÂVATI. An ancient river. It is believed that fire is generated from this river. (Sloka 23, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

TÂMROŚÂTHA. A Yâksa who sits in the court of Kubera. (Sloka 16, Chapter 10, Sahabha Parva).

TÂMSÂ. A King of Purûvanâ. He was the son of Matiûrâ and father of Iûna a King. (Chapter 94, Aûpa Parva).

TÂNYA. A place of habitation of ancient Bharata. (Sloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhûṣma Parva).

TÂNDI. A celebrated sage. It was the sage who represented to Brahma the thousand names of Sûva. (Chapter 14, Anûsasana Parva).

TÂNDUKÂŚÂRAMA. A sacred place of ancient Bharata. He who visits this place would enter Brahma-loka. (Sloka 43, Chapter 82, Vana Parva).

TÂNDYA. A sage. He was a friend of Indra. He once took part in the Yajña of Uparicaravasu. He observed correctly the duties of Vânaprastha and attained sva. (Sloka 17, Chapter 244, Sânti Parva).

TÂNGA. A place of habitation of Bharata. (Sloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhûṣma Parva).

TÂNTRIPÂLÂ. The false name adopted by Sahadeva when he lived incognito in the city of Virûta. (Sloka 9, Chapter 3, Virûta Parva).

TÂNTU. A Brahmacâdi son of Vîśvâmîtra. (Chapter 4, Anûsasana Parva).

TÂNU. An ancient sage. This sage lived in the palace of King Vîrâdûyuna for a long time. (Chapters 127 and 128, Sânti Parva).

TÂPA. A Deva of fire-like splendour. Born of the power of penance of five sages named Kaśyapa, Vâsîśtha, Prâna, Cyâvana and Trîvarcas, this Deva has got a name Pâñcâjanyâ (born of five) also. He did severe penance (tapâs) and got the name Tapa. His head is like fire, his hands like Sun, his skin and eyes are of golden hue and his waist, blue. (Sloka 4, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

TÂPÂNA. A soldier of the country of Pâncâla. He was killed by Karna in the Mahâbhârata battle. (Sloka 15, Chapter 48, Karna Parva).

TÂPÂSÂRÂNYA. A Sacred place crowded with sages. (Sloka 20, Chapter 87, Vana Parva).

TÂPÂSVI. A son born to Câksûsa Manu of Naîvala. (Chapter 13, Anûsasana Parva).

TÂPÂTI. A daughter of Sûrya.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Vînuc are Brahma—Marici—Kaśyapa—Sûrya—Tapa.&lt;\/p&gt;

2) Birth. Sûrya married Sânîjah daughter of Viśvâkarma. He begot of Sânîjah two children named Kâlinâ and Yama. At that time Sûrya (Sun) was not of the form as seen now. Sânîjah, unable to bear the splendour of Sûrya who was of the shape of an egg entrusted her maid Châyâ with the work of serving her husband and left for a temple in the guise of a mare to do penance. Chayā disguised as Saṁjñā served Sūrya for a very long period. Sūrya begot of her two children, Śaṇaścara and Tāpati. Besides these, Sūrya had another daughter named Sāvitrī also. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

3) Marriage. There was a mighty king in the Lunar race called Rṣa in the beginning of Kṛtayuga. He had a son named Saṁvarana. He was made king of his country by his father even while he was a boy. He was a pious and righteous man. Vasiṣṭha was his Guru and he taught Saṁvarana the Vedas along with the Anīgas.

Once Saṁvarana entrusting the administration of the state to Vasiṣṭha went to do penance in the forests. On his way he followed a deer for a long distance on horse-back and reached a deep forest named Vaiśrājā alone. There he saw a lotus pond full of blossomed lotuses and Kañhāra flowers. Celestial maidens were playing there without interruption. Among them he saw a very beautiful maiden. She was Tāpatī daughter of Sūrya. Even at first sight they became lovers. The king looking at her lost his balance and fell from the horse. At once great and charming Gandharvas approached the king and sprinkling water on his face brought him back from swoon. Tāpatī was also upset and the other nymphs took her to her father's house and consoled her.

Saṁvarana returned on horse-back to his residence the city of Pratiṣṭhā. But the king neither slept nor ate any food. The sage Vasiṣṭha knew that all the ailments of the king were due to his love for Tāpatī, daughter of Sūrya. So he flew up by his yogic powers and met Sūrya sitting in his chariot in all splendour. The sage described to Sūrya the love affair between Saṁvarana and Tāpatī and pleaded on behalf of the king for giving Tāpati to Saṁvarana. Sūrya was pleased to hear that and sent Tāpatī along with Vasiṣṭha to Saṁvarana. Before long the marriage of Tāpati with Saṁvarana was celebrated solemnly at Pratiṣṭhānagara. The celebrated emperor Kuru was the son born to Tāpati of Saṁvarana. (Chapter 21, Vāyu Purāṇa).

4) How she got that name. Because she was the daughter of Sūrya who makes the sky hot (tapa) by his brilliance, she was called Tāpati. (Śloka 6, Chapter 171, Ādi Parva).

5) Tāpati becomes river Narmadā. Sūrya, father of Tāpati, blessed her and said she would thereafter flow west from the Vindhya as a river named Narmadā. The present holy river Narmadā is but Tāpati devī transformed. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

TAPATYA. Kuru was the son born to king Saṁvarana of his wife Tāpati. All the descendants of Kuru were known as Kauravas and because they were of the generation of Tāpati, they were known as Tāpatyas also. The young Gandharva, Citaratha, who fought against Arjuna on the banks of the river, Gaṅgā addressed Arjuna as Tāpatya. (Śloka 79, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

TAPOLOKA. The place of abode of Vairājas who could not be burnt by fire. This is above Dhruvapada by eleven crores of yojanas. (Chapter 7, Arīḍa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TAPTAKUMBHA. A hell. There are twenty-eight hells according to Viṣṇu Purāṇa including Taptakumbha.

TAPTAMŪRTI. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

TĀRA. A monkey who was a devotee of Śrī Rāma. This big monkey was the son of Bṛhaspati. Bṛhaspati made this monkey greater in size and intellect than all other monkeys. This Tāra was the minister of Bāli. (Śloka 10, Sarga 17, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana and Uttarā Rāmāyana). In the Rāma-Rāvanā battle this monkey fought against the demon Nikharvaṭa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

TĀRA I. Wife of Bāli, best of Vānaras (monkeys). There are two stories different from each other regarding the birth of Tāra. One version is that Tāra was born during the churning of the Milk-Ocean. Airāvata, Uccāśravas, Kaḷāpavrīka, Cintāmani, Kaustubha, Candra, Apsaras, Mahālakṣmi Tāra and Rūmā rose from the sea of Milk. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyana). The second version is that Tāra was the daughter of Suṣeṇa. Bāli at the time of his death is said to have spoken thus of his wife Tāra "Tāra, daughter of Suṣeṇa, is well learned and is capable of assessing a situation and suggesting the correct thing to be done at that time. If she says a thing is good, it is never otherwise." (Chapter 22, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana). From this it can be understood that Tāra was the daughter of Suṣeṇa and we get an idea of the character of Tāra also from this. (See under Bāli).

TĀRA II. Wife of Bṛhaspati. She was extremely beautiful. Once she fell in love with Candra (Moon) and leaving her husband started living with him. Candra was the disciple of Bṛhaspati. The devas were angry when they found the wife of their preceptor staying with a disciple of his. Bṛhaspati sent word to her to return home but she did not heed. At last the Devas decided to fight against Candra. Then they came to a compromise and Tāra was sent back to Bṛhaspati. In due course Tāra delivered a son. He was Budha, father of Purūravas. There arose then a dispute between Candra and Bṛhaspati regarding the fatherhood of the child. Then the Devas called Tāra and asked her to name the child's father. Tāra said that the child was of Candra and so Budha was looked after at the house of Candra. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TARĀDATĀ. Wife of Kaliṅgadatta, King of Taksāśilā situated on the shores of the river Vītaśā. Once a celestial maiden named Surabhidattā came to be born as the daughter of Tārādattā due to a curse of Indra. She was then called Kaliṅgasenā. (See under Dharma-dattā).

TĀRAKA (TĀRAKĀṢURA) I. An asura chief (demon). This demon even while he was very young did penance to propitiate Śiva and got a boon to the effect that none other than a son born to Śiva should be able to kill him. He became arrogant with the power of this boon and soon became a terror to the world. Then to kill Tārakāṣura Subrahmāṇya was born as the son of Śiva. In the great battle between the devas and the asuras Tārakā was killed by Subrahmāṇya.

Tārakāṣura was the father of Tārākṣa, Kamālikā and Vidyunmālikā. (See under Subrahmāṇya). (Śloka 5, Chapter 33, Karṇa Parva).
TĀRAKA II. Śiva Purāṇa mentions about a Tāraka, son of the minister of Bhadrasena, a King of Kashmir. This Tāraka was the rebirth of a he-fowl. Bhadrasena had a son named Sudharmā. He was the rebirth of a monkey. There is a story regarding how this fowl and the monkey came to be born in Kashmir as above.

Once in the village of Nanda there was a prostitute named Mahānandā. Though she was a great devotee of Śiva she was living the life of a prostitute for her livelihood. She was having a monkey and a he-fowl as pets. She would adorn the necks of her pets with the rudrākṣa necklace (rosary) made of berry beads favourite of Śiva and when she sang songs in praise of Śiva those pets danced to the tune.

One day a Vaiśya came there. He had a diamond Śiva linga with him. Mahānandā felt a great fancy for that and so promised the Vaiśya that if he gave her the diamond linga she would remain a faithful wife to him for three days. The Vaiśya agreed and the diamond linga was kept in a very secure place. That night when both the Śiva and Mahānandā were sleeping tired after a hectic amorous sport, the house got fire and the diamond was burst into pieces. The Vaiśya greatly grieved at the loss of the diamond, jumped into the fire and committed suicide. Mahānandā faithfully promised to the promise that she would remain his wife for three days started to jump into the fire and abandon her life. At once Śiva appeared before her in person and said thus: “Oh, Mahānandā, do not commit suicide. I came to you disguised as a Vaiśya to test your devotion. You can now ask of me any boon.”

With tears of joy running down her cheeks she said she wanted to live with Śiva. So Śiva blessed the fowl and monkey and said they would be born as devotees of Śiva in their next birth and attain maṇḍa at the end of their life on earth. Accordingly the monkey and the fowl were born in Kashmir as Sudharmā and Tāraka.

TĀRAKŚA (TĀRAKĀṢA). A son of the demon Tārakāśu. This demon was the lord of a golden city called Tripura. Śiva killed him during Tripuradahana (burning of the Tripuras). See under Tripuradahana. (Chapters 33, 34, Kārpa Parva).

TARALA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. This place was conquered by Karna. (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Kārpa Parva).

TARANTUKA. A Yākṣa. This Yākṣa is installed on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. If one spends one night in this holy place one would get the benefit of giving away a thousand cows as gifts. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TĀRKYŚA I. Garuḍa. See under Garuḍa.

TĀRKYŚA II. A sage. He was a member of the court of Indra. He was known as Arīstanemi also. He had no fear of death. He once discussed with Sarasvatidevi about the soul. (Chapter 194, Vana Parva).

TĀRKYŚA III. A Kṣatriya youth of the country of Tārkṣya. He came to the Rājasūyā of Yudhīṣṭhira and gave much wealth for the purpose. (Śloka 15, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva).

TĀRKYŚA IV. A synonym of Śiva. (Śloka 98, Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

TARUNAKA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtārāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpa-satra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

TĀṬAKĀ. A fierce demoness. It was because of a curse of the sage Agastya that Tāṭakā became a demoness. There was once a great Yakṣa named Suketu, a son of Surakṣa. He did penance to propitiate Brahmā to get a child and by the blessing of Brahmā Suketu got a daughter named Tāṭakā. Brahmā gave her the strength of a thousand elephants. Tāṭakā was by nature interested in cruel and violent deeds and doing deeds of magic. She made Sunda, son of Jharja, her husband. She got two sons named Māriča and Subhā. They also became mighty ones great in deeds by magic.

Once Sunda attacked the āśrama of Agastya in a mood of intoxicated arrogance. Sunda was burnt to death in the fire of his fury. Tāṭakā coming to know of the death of her husband got angry and attacked the āśrama of Agastya with her sons. Agastya cursed them and made them into demons. Tāṭakā and her sons who immediately turned themselves into fierce-looking demons went first to Pātāla with Sumallī, father of the demon race and then went with Rāvaṇa, King of the demons, to Lanka and stayed there. With the help of Rāvaṇa, Tāṭakā conquered the great deep forest near Kūrśa and stayed there with her sons. None, devas, demons or men, dared to step into that forest. Even the Sun or Clouds avoided passing above that forest.

It was at that time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came to that forest with Viṣvāmitra. Tāṭakā attacked Śrī Rāma and Rāma killed her with one arrow. The heavy body of the demoness fell to the ground like a big mountain.

Her soul then rose up as a beautiful Gandharva lady and Tāṭakā who was thus released from the curse praised Śrī Rāma and left the place. Chapters 24 to 26 of Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa and Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

TĀṬAKĀṆĀ. A Brahmavādī son of Viṣvāmitra. (Śloka 56, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TĀṬAṆĀ. The name of Śīhādhiwāja, King of Śīhaha, in his previous birth. (See under Śīhādhiwāja).

TEJÅṢCANDA. A deva who adorns the god Sūrya with a flower garland daily. The idol of Tejas caṇḍa is also used to be installed in temples. The idol is figured as one with a huge face and holding a sword and a lotus in his hands. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

TEJASAŅṬI I. A heroine in a story in Kathāśārītāgara intended to show that all happenings either good or bad are but the workings of fate.

Tejasvāti was the daughter of king Vikramasena of Ujjayinī and was very beautiful. She never liked any male and so never wished to marry. One day while she was sitting upstairs in her palace, she happened to see a young man passing that way and surprisingly was attracted by him. She sent her companion to him and informed him of her liking for him. He did not like the idea first, but the clever persuasions of the maid made him agree to a clandestine meeting with the princess at a temple at night that day. Tejasvāti anxiously waited for the night to come.

About that time a Rajput prince greatly grieved at the loss of his father and subsequent loss of his kingdom started on a tour to see an old friend of his father. That night, by sheer accident, he came and rested in the same temple where the rendezvous of the princess was fixed. When night fell the princess came to the temple and without the least suspicion went and embraced the solitary figure sitting in the temple. The prince did not show any surprise and responded fully. The princess then understood all details of her lover and took him to his father the next morning. Somadatta (that was the prince's name) then told Vikramasena all his mishaps and Vikramasena got back all the lost kingdom of Somadatta and also gave his daughter in marriage to him. (Taranaga 4, Madana Mañcukālambaka, Kathāsāritisāgara).

TEJASVITI II. The queen of Ādiyāsa a king of Ujjayini.

TEJASVÍ. One of the five Indras. (See under Pāñcāli).

TEJÉYU. A prince born to Miśrakesī of Raudrāśva, son of Pūru. (Śloka 11, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

TEJOVATI. The capital city of Agni. This is situated on the south-east corner of Mahāmeru. In the centre is Manovati, capital city of Brahma. To the east of it is Amarāvati, capital city of Indra. In the south-east corner is Tejovati. In the south is Sañyamani, city of Yama. In the south-west is Kṛṣṇājana of Nīrūti. In the west is Sraddhāvati of Varuṇa. In the north west is Gandhavati of Vāyu. In the north is Mahodaya of Kubera. In the north-east corner is Yāsovati of Iśāna. (8th Skanda, Devi Bhāgavata).

THĀ (3) This letter means taking food. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

THĀ (3) This letter means Candramañḍala (moon-disc), emptiness and Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

THINṬHĀKARĀ. A prodigal person who lived in Ujjayini. He used to defeat all in the game of dice. With the money so received from defeated persons he would buy wheat and go to the burial ground and after making bread with it would eat it dipped in ghee sitting before an oil light placed before an idol of Mahākāla (lord of the burial ground). He would then lie there itself and sleep. One night he saw the idols in the Mahākāla temple twinkle. He jumped up and challenged the idols for a game of dice. The idols stood mute and Thīṇṭhākarāla taking their silence to be consent according to the rules of gambling fixed a wager and played. He won and then he said addressing the idols "I have defeated you. Give me the money due to me." The idols stood silent and he, therefore, wrestled with them. Still the idols stood dumb. Then Thīṇṭhākarāla took his sword. Instantly the devas gave him the money due to him. Early morning he went away from there and spent the money lavishly. At night he came back again and challenged the idols for gambling as before. This became a daily routine and the devas felt themselves harassed. They, therefore, approached the goddess Cāmuṇḍi and she advised them to refrain from playing as there was no loss of honour if one refused to take a challenge to gamble.

That night also as usual Thīṇṭhākarāla came and challenged the idols for a game of dice. Then the idols said "We are not prepared to play." Then he challenged Mahākāla himself to play. Mahākāla also refused to play. Then suddenly the mind of Thīṇṭhākarāla changed and he did penance to please Mahākāla. Mahākāla was pleased with him, appeared before him and blessed him.

Once a few nymphs came to bathe in the Mahākāla pond and as per the instructions of Mahākāla, Thīṇṭhākarāla took away their robes while they were bathing. He demanded a nymph named Kalāvatī in return for their robes and finding no other way they gave him Kalāvatī.

Kalāvatī thus became the wife of a Man due to a curse of Indra. Once she praised sexual enjoyment with men on earth and decried the same with Devas. Indra heard it and he cursed her "Then let her become the wife of a man on earth and enjoy the pleasures there." All this story Thīṇṭhākarāla learned from Kalāvatī. She added she wanted to go to Devaloka the next day for a dance with Rambhā. Thīṇṭhākarāla consented and he also went to Devaloka and saw the dance, sitting along with the Devas.

When Rambhā’s dance was over, there was the dance of a goat. Seeing that Thīṇṭhākarāla said to himself: "Why, this is a goat I used to see daily in Ujjayini. How did it come here to dance?" When the dances were over and the people dispersed, Kalāvatī took Thīṇṭhākarāla to the Mahākāla temple. Next day he met the same goat in Ujjayini and then he enquired "Hi, do that dance which you did yesterday before Indra in devaloka. Let me see." The goat stood dumb thinking of how this man on earth came to know of the dances in Devaloka. Thīṇṭhākarāla once again compelled the goat to show its dance but when the goat still refused to dance, he thrashed it with a stick on its head and the goat immediately went to Devaloka and informed Indra about the incident. Indra felt sad when he saw blood oozing from the wound on its head. Indra by his divine powers then understood that Kalāvatī was at the bottom of all this trouble and cursed her to remain as a doll on a pillar in the temple belonging to King Narasimha of Nāgapurā. Alambaṣa, mother of Kalāvatī, who heard the curse begged for relief and Indra said she would get freed from the curse when the king himself demolished the temple and razed the place to the ground.

True to the curse, Kalāvatī after giving all her ornaments to Thīṇṭhākarāla bid him good bye and went and remained as a doll on the temple-pillar at Nāgapurā. Deeply distressed at this mishap of his wife, Thīṇṭhākarāla dressed himself as an ascetic and went to Nāgapurā. There he purchased five earthen pots and filled them with the ornaments of Kalāvatī. He buried four of the pots in the forests and the fifth in the bazaar near the temple. Then he built a hermitage on the shores of a near-by river and started living there. News soon spread that a great yogī had come to the city and the King went to see him. They talked for a while on religious and spiritual matters and the King was about to leave when they heard the howl of a jackal. The yogī smiled and the King asked him why he smiled. He refused to answer but the King insisted and then the yogī said "Oh King, the jackal says that in a forest to the east of the city under a silver plant is a treasure." The King immediately ordered his men to go and dig at the place and when they did they got the treasure. The King offered the treasure to the yogī but he refused to accept it. Thīṇṭhākarāla then on three different occasions pointed out to the King the three other pots in the forests and the King got great confidence in the powers of the yogī. One day he went to the temple with the King and while they were walking around a crow crow and the yogī smiled. The King again asked him the reason and the yogī said that there was a treasure pot in the bazaar near-by. When they searched at the spot directed by the yogi the treasure was found.

On another day the King and the yogi went to the temple and as they walked about they saw the doll on one of the pillars crying. The King asked the yogi the reason for the doll crying thus. The yogi replied "Oh, King this temple is not located in a proper place. Further the deity here was not installed at an auspicious time. If this continues the King will come to ruin. That was why the doll cried." On hearing this the King ordered the temple to be completely demolished and the place made a plain ground. The order was carried out and Kalavati got release from the curse. She went to heaven and told Indra all that had happened. Indra immediately sent Kalavati to fetch Thiruvakkarala to heaven and then both of them lived happily in heaven. (Taranaga 2, Viṣṇaḥśilalambaka, Kathāsārasīgara).

TILABHARA. A place situated in the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 53, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TILOTTAMĀ. A prominent celestial maiden.
1) Birth. Tilottamā was born to Pradhā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Maricī. Alambuṣa, Miśrakesī, Viduyutparnā, Aruṇā, Raṣṭī, Rambhā, Manorāmā, Subāhu, Keśīni, Suratā, Surajā and Supriyā were all sisters of Tilottamā. (Chapter 63, Adi Parva).

There is a story about the birth of Tilottamā. Two demons named Sunda and Upasunda obtained invincible powers by doing penance. To make these two brothers quarrel with each other, by directions from Brahmā, Viśvakarmā created Tilottamā. Viśvakarmā collected from all inanimate and animate objects parts of objects beautiful to look at and created the enchanting Tilottamā. Tilottamā was then made to come to the world through the womb of Kaśyapa's wife. Because she was made by the tilāṁśa (small particle) of all the best (uttama) articles of the world she got the name of Tilottamā. (Chapter 215, Adi Parva).

The good girl named Tilottamā was formerly created by Brahmā from small particles of diamonds. (Śloka 1, Chapter 141, Anuśasana Parva).

2) How Śiva got four heads and Indra a thousand eyes. When the two demon brothers Sundapausundas were creating great havoc in the world by their cruel and immoral deeds, it was Tilottamā who was deputed by Brahmā to create a split between the brothers. On the eve of her departure to the world she went to Devaloka to bid adieu. Brahmā stood facing south and Śiva stood facing north and Tilottamā stood in the centre surrounded by the Devas. Tilottamā circled round the devas worshipping them. Śiva was enamoured of her beauty and wanted to see her always and so a face on all the four sides of his head sprang up so that he could see her always as she circled round him. Indra was also enamoured of her and he found his two eyes insufficient to enjoy her beauty. So instantly a thousand eyes sprang up in the face of Indra. (Chapter 215, Adi Parva).

3) How Tilottamā cursed Sahasrāṇīka. (See under Sahasrāṇīka).

4) Tilottamā and Sundaposundas. See under Sunda.

5) Other details.

Tilottamā partook in the Jannmotsava (birthday festival) of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Mahābhārata).

TIMIDHVĀJĀ. A demon who was ruling in the state of Vaijyantapura. He was called Śambara also. This demon once attacked Devaloka. Indra was not able to kill him. So he sought the help of Daśaratha. Daśaratha went and fought against the demons. Daśaratha was made to faint in the battlefield by the magic of Timidhvāja and Kaikeyi who was there then, took him away and gave him all first aid. Pleased at this Daśaratha promised two boons for her and it was these boons that Kaikeyi demanded of Daśaratha on the advice of Mantharā at the time of the coronation of Śri Rāma. (Sarga 9, Ayodhyā Kīṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyāna).

TIMINGILA. A King. Sahadeva defeated this King during his victory campaign in the south. (Śloka 69, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

TIRAGRAHA. An ancient place situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 52, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TIRAYĀṬTAM. A form of unrefined drama current in Kerala. This ancient art originally came into being to propitiate some gods. There are others of this kind like 'Muiyēṭṭu' 'Tiyāṭṭu' and 'Ayyappan Pāṭṭu' which all belong to a class of Ritualistic plays. This folk drama is a colourful pageant devoted to gods. Its artistic value is worth noticing. This is known by different names like 'Tira', 'Teyya' and 'Kaliyāṭtam'. 'Tira' in ancient language means 'daivadarśana' (sight of gods) 'Teyya' is the corrupt form of 'daiva'. Tirayāṭtam is a visible amusement where actors appear dressed as gods. Because the actors dance in the dresses of gods, this is called devāṭṭam also. Teyyāṭtam is the distorted form of devāṭṭam. Because this is both a Kali (play) and an āṭṭam (dance) this is called Kalīyāṭtam also.

This is held in different parts of Malabar during the period of January to April. It is a programme of three days. The first programme is to exhibit an Alākalam. This is done on the night of the first day. The second programme is to exhibit the vellāṭṭukolam which will be done on the second day evening. An indication of this is given on the first night itself. The programme of the second day begins with a dance called Velakkalī. On that day there will be worshipping of gods at intervals. The Vellāṭṭukolam begins by five in the evening. The chief actor will present himself before the public in the colourful robes of a god and will begin to dance to the accompaniment of drums and music. As the dance and music continues even those without dresses would start dancing. Gradually sounds of pop-guns and instrumental music will rend the air. The chief dancer after dancing for some-time would place a stool before the temple and spread a white cloth on it. Then the dancer would sit in meditation and do the ceremony called 'calling the gods'. He would then pray to the gods to bless the function and appear at the zodiacal sign of Virgin. The dance and music start again. Then the people assembled would throw rice and flower into the cloth on the stool. The dancer-god holds a weapon in his hand and changes it often making huge uproars. Then after finishing the ceremonies like Kāvīṭṣu and Arulappātu, the Vellāṭṭakkāran retires. Then another actor in the dress of another god appears as Vellāṭṭak-kāran and repeats the programme of his predecessor. Because the dance (āṭam) is done before a white(vella) cloth the dance is called Vellāṭam.

After the vellāṭam before midnight Tirayāṭam begins. The dresses of the teyyas differ slightly from each other. Some Tiras wear jackets and skirts while some wear flower garlands made of Tulasī leaves (basil plant) and ceṭṭi (jungle geranium). All the tiras rush to the temple in great spirit and they are followed by lamp-holders and torch-bearers to the accompaniment of loud sounds of musical instruments and uproars from the spectators. When the first round of dances is over, the ‘Teyya’ stands dancing, pouring blessings to the people and deciding ways of atonement for the sins done. Then food is offered to the gods and the function ends with a ‘Vela’ circling the temple.

TIRUVUṆṆĀSAMBANDHA (R). He was one of the four Dākṣinātya Saivamāṭācarayas. He lived during the early part of the seventh century. The book on Dākṣinātya Saivamata is called Tirumura. There are twelve songs in that book. They were compiled by Nambi-yāṇḍar Nambi who lived during the period of Kājarāja Cola. The first seven of these are devotional songs called Tevaras. They were composed jointly by TiruvuṆṆāsambandhar, Tirunāvukkarasar and Sundaramūrti. The first three tevaras are of TiruvuṆṆāsambandhar. He was born in the village of Śirkāzhī (Brahmapura) near Kumbhakonam in the district of Tāṭajñāvīr. His father was Sivāpādarāya and mother Bhagavatīyār. Once when Sivāpādarāya went to bathe in the temple tank called Bhrāmacīthira he took along with him his son Sambandhar also. Keeping his son on the steps of the tank Sivāpādarāya plunged himself into the waters. Siva and Pārvatī who came that way saw the god sitting alone and Pārvatī went and fed him with her breast-milk. From that moment onwards the child started singing songs in praise of Siva and Pārvatī.

When he grew up, he did many wonderful deeds visiting many Siva temples of Pāndirājya. His father fixed up a marriage for him and the bride’s party assembled even before him at the Cidambara temple. TiruvuṆṆāsambandhar came there in time and standing before the temple deity sang a song in praise of Siva. The song was greatly appealing and at the end of the song before all those assembled there Sambandhar to the astonishment of all merged with the deity.

TIRUNĀVUKKARĀSA (R). He was a Saivaithe like TiruvuṆṆāsambandhar (Refer above) and a disciple also of the latter. He was born in the village of TiruṆāmar in South Arcot district. His father was Pugalanār and mother Madiniyār both of whom were Vellāḷas. They got a daughter named Tilakavatīyār and a son named Marulnikkiyār. It was this Marulnikikiyār who became famous as TiruṆāvukkarārar. This siddha who acquired divine knowledge has composed 4900 songs in praise of Siva of which only 312 are in use now.

TĪRTHA. A holy place. Even from very ancient times the people of Bhārata believed in the sacredness of holy places and they considered a pilgrimage to holy places as a part and parcel of their life. Almost all the Purānas have praised the greatness of holy places.

It is not true that all those who visit holy places and bathe in the sacred ponds there would get salvation. In Chapter 11 of Padma Purāṇa it is stated thus: He would get salvation whose limbs, mind, knowledge, austerity and fame are under his own control. He who lives clean in body, without egoism, consumer and never accepting gifts for services done would get salvation by visiting holy places. He who would fast if he did not get food, whose organs of sense are all under control would get salvation if he visits holy places. He who is righteous, free from anger, treats all animate objects like himself would get salvation if he visits holy place.

Once the great sage Cyavanna told Prāhlāda thus: "Only those who are pure in heart would get the benefit of visiting sacred places. It is a sin for others to do pilgrimage. The banks of Gaṅgā are crowded with villages and cities. Many types of people like Parayas, Fishermen, Vaṅgas, Khasas, Huns and Mlecchas live there. They bathe in the holy river and drink the holy water, but they do not get salvation because their mind and heart are not clean." (4th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

TĪRTHAVAKTI. A holy place. He who visits this place would attain Viśṇuloka after obtaining the benefit of doing a Puṇḍarika yajña. (Slokā 121, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TĪRTHAMETI. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Slokā 7, Chapter 46, Sālya Parva).

TĪRTHAVĀṬRAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Vana Parva. This comprises Chapters 80 to 156 of Vana Parva.

TīTtIKŚ. One of the sixteen daughters born to Dākṣa of his wife Prasūti. Of these thirteen were married to Dharmadeva. Titikś was one of them. The others were Śraddhī, Maitīr etc. (4th Skandha Bhāgavata).

TĪTIKŚU. A King born of the family of Turvasu. He was the son of Ūśīnara and father of Rūṣardratha. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

TĪTṬIBHA. An asura. This demon shines in the court of Varuṇa. (Slokā 15, Chapter 9, Sābhā Parva).

TĪTṬIBHASARAS. A sacred pond near the āśrama of Vālmiki. There is a story about this pond. Once a water-fowl lived there with his mate. One day the male fowl went out for food and as he was returning home he found a few other water-fowls going that way and the male fowl suspected the chastity of his wife. The male fowl decided to abandon his mate and the innocent she-fowl prayed to the Asṭadikpālakas for help. The Asṭadikpālakas instantly appeared there and made a pond and said that if the she-fowl could reach from one shore to the other without getting herself drowned she must be treated as chast. The she-fowl was accordingly put into the waters and asked to swim to the other shore which she did without any accident. From that day onwards the pond was called Tīṭṭībhasaras. (Tīṭṭībhā = water fowl, Saras = pond).

When Śiṣā came to the āśrama of Vālmiki after being abandoned by Śrī Rāma, Vālmiki wanted to test her chastity. So the sages asked Śiṣā to enter the pond and reach the other shore. "Oh goddess of Earth, if even in my dreams no other person than my husband has entered my thoughts, let me reach the other shore safe.” So saying Sitā entered the water and the goddess of Earth placed her in her lap and took her to the other shore. Sitā did not get even wet. All the sages called her ‘Māhāśīvadvī’ meaning supremely chaste woman. (Tārānga 1, Alānkaravattālamba, Kathāsātāgāra).

TITTIKA. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Ślokā 31, Chapter 50, Bhīśma Parva).

TITTIKI I. A kind of bird. To know about the origin of this bird see under head Triśiras.

TITTIKI II. A celebrated serpent born to the sage Kaśyapa of Kadrū, his wife. (Ślokā 15, Chapter 35, Adi Parva).

TITTIKI III. A sage who was a member of the council of Yudhīśhṭhira. (Ślokā 12, Chapter 4, Sābhā Parva).

TITTIKI IV. A special breed of horses. Arjuna got this breed from Gangāharvanagarā during his victory campaign. (Ślokā 6, Chapter 28, Sābhā Parva).

TOLĀ. A great satirical poet of the Malayālam Literature. A great humorist, Sanskrit scholar and actor, he was minister to Bīśakaṇā Ravi Varmā who was ruler of Kerala during the period from 978 to 1027 A.D. According to Kodunagullur Kaṇṭikuttan Tampurānu, a great Sanskrit scholar and poet, Tola was born in Kondoliṇāru in the village of Airānikaṇā near Aḍūr in Cochin in a Nambūdīri family. His original name was Nilakaṇṭha. When he was a young man, he was ostracised from his community for having had illicit connections with a low-caste servant maid named Cakkī. He was wearing then a deerskin belt (Tol) on his body as the usual mark of Brahmacārins (bachelors) and he threw it away of his own accord earning for him the name Tola. There is another version that Tola is the decayed form of ‘Atula’ meaning matchless. He was mainly interested in writing funny ridicules. There are many such poems not available believed to be those of Tola.

TOMARA. A place of habitation situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Ślokā 69, Chapter 9, Bhīśma Parva).

TORAŃASPATIKA. Duryodhana decided to make the Pāṇḍavas beggars by defeating them in a false game of dice. Dharārāstra stood as an accomplice to that. To play the game Dharārāstra constructed a palace and that palace was called Toraṅaspātiṅka.

That diamond-studded palace had a thousand pillars and a hundred entrances. It had crystal fortresses and golden thrones in all the chambers. This palace was called Dyūtabhavana also. (Chapter 56, Sābhā Parva).

TRAISANI. A King of the family of Turvasa. He was the father of Karandhama. (See under Vaṁśāvali).

TRAVALI (TRAIBALI). A sage. He shone as a member in the court of Yudhīśhṭhira. (Ślokā 13, Chapter 4, Sābhā Parva).

TRAIVARṆIKA (S). Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are the three castes of people called Traivarṅikas.

TRASADASYU. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He accepted sannyāsa (ascetic life) and became a Rājārṣi.

2) Other details.

(i) Because he made dasyus (evil people) ‘tras’ (to tremble with fear) he got the name of Trasadasyu. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

(ii) The Aśvinīdevas once saved him from defeat in a fight. (Sūktā 112, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

(iii) Once Agastya, Śrutavā and Brāhmaṇāśvā, three eminent sages, came to the country of Trasadasyu. On hearing that the sages were coming, Trasadasyu abandoned all his work and went to receive the sages at the state boundary. He asked them the purpose of their visit and they said they wanted some money. The King then showed them his accounts and convinced them that he was poor. (Ślokā 16, Chapter 98, Vana Parva).

(iv) Trasadasyu was one among those whose name should be remembered early in the morning. (Ślokā 55, Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRASARENU. An ancient measure of weight of metals.

Jalāntargate bhāṇau
Yat sūkṣmaṁ dṛṣṭaye rajah/Prathamāṁ tat pramāṇāṁ
Trasareṇuṁ praśakṣate. //

(Ślokā 132, Chapter 8, Manusmṛti).

Eight trasarenu make one Īru. Three īrus make one Maṇḍapu. Three maṇḍapakus make one Veṇkaṭakus. Six veṇkaṭakus make one Madhyāstriyavā. Three madhyāstriyavas make one kunnikku. Five kunnikkuras make one Māṣa. Sixteen māṣas make one Suvarna. This is the weight of two and a half varāhas. Four suvarṇas make one Pala. Ten palas make one Dhāranā.

TRAYĪ. Veda. Formerly only three Vedas, Rgveda, Yajurveda and Sāmaveda were recognised and so Trayī meaning group of three was used to denote the Vedas. (See under Veda).

TRAYYĀRUṆA. A King of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Tridhanva and father of Triśaṅku. (Chapter 57, Brahmanda Purāṇa).

TRAYYĀRUṆI. A sage of the line of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamparā).

TRETĀYUGA. Second of the four yugas. Kṛtayuga, Tretāyuga, Dvāpara-yuga, and Kaliyuga are the four yugas. There are three thousand deva-varṣas (divine years) in Tretāyuga.

Śrī Rāma was born at the end of Tretāyuga. Tretāyuga came to an end in B.C. 867100. Śrī Rāma ruled the country for eleven thousand years.

Daśa-varṣa-sahasrāṇi
Daśa-varṣa-sātāṇi ca /
Rāma rājyamupasitva
Brahmalokam prayaśayati. //

(Vālmiki Rāmaṇya).

(After serving his land for ten thousand years and another ten hundred years (ten thousand plus thousand years) Śrī Rāma will go to Brahma-loka. When Rāma took over the reins of administration he was only forty years old. See under Manvanta and yuga. (Classical Sanskrit Literature).)

TRIBHĀNU. A King born of the family of Yayāti. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRIDASYU. The son born to Agastyā of Lopāmudrā. (See under Idhmavāha).
TRIDHĀMĀ. The tenth incarnation of Śiva. At this time Bhṛgu Mahārāṣṭra was Vyāsā. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudrasaṅgīhītā).

TRIDHANVĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty who was the grandfather of Triśāṅku. (7th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

TRIDIVĀ. A river of Bhārata. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TRIGANΓA. A holy place. (Śloka 29, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TRIGARTA. A powerful kingdom of ancient Bhārata. There are several references in the Mahābhārata to the Kings of Trigarta. The following are a few of them worth noticing:—
(i) The Pāṇḍavas passed through the country of Trigarta while they were wandering in the forests after the fire accident at the waxpalace. (Śloka 2, Chapter 155, Ādi Parva).
(ii) Arjuna during his victory march to the north defeated the King of Trigarta. (Śloka 18, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).
(iii) Nakula once conquered the country of Trigarta. (Śloka 7, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva).
(iv) The Kings of Trigarta used to pay tribute to Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Śloka 14).
(v) A King of Trigarta once killed the horses tied to the chariot of Dharmaputra and then committed suicide. (Śloka 12, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).
(vi) A King of Trigarta named Suratha was slain by Nakula. (Śloka 10, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).
(vii) Suśārma, King of Trigarta with his army joined the Kaurava side and carried away the cattle of the King of Vīrāṭa and also fought with him. Arjuna during his stay incognito at the palace of the King of Vīrāṭa killed many Trigartas. (Chapter 32, Vīrāṭa Parva).
(viii) Suśārma, King of Trigarta, took the King of Vīrāṭa as a captive and enraged at this Bhismaca was about to kill Suśārma when Arjuna intervened and stopped him from that. (Chapter 23, Vīrāṭa Parva).
(ix) Satyaratha, King of Trigarta, had four brothers and the Pāṇḍavas fought against all the five. (Śloka 9, Chapter 166, Udyoga Parva).
(x) In the Garuḍa-vyūha constructed by Bhīṣma battle array in the shape of a vulture) five Trigarta princes stood at the head of the formation. (Chapter 56, Bhīṣma Parva).
(xi) Arjuna used the Vāyavāṣṭra against the Trigartas in the great battle. (Chapter 102, Bhīṣma Parva).
(xii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once defeated the Trigartas. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).
(xiii) Once Parasurāma killed many Trigartas. (Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).
(xiv) There was a fight between Sātyaki and the Trigartas once. (Chapter 181, Droṇa Parva).
(xv) Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse of the Aśvamedhayājña of Dharmaputra created great havoc to the Trigartas. (Chapter 74, Aśvamedha Parva).
(xvi) The Kings of Trigarta live in the court of Yama. (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

TRIJAṬA (GARGYA). A sage. Though he was a sage he lived by farming. He had a wife and children and his earnings from farm work were insufficient to make both ends meet. They were living in poverty and it was at that time that Rāma started for his life in exile in the forests. Before he commenced his journey to the forests he gave immense wealth to all the Brahmins who had assembled around him. At that time Trijaṭa never knew about it and when it came to the ears of Trijaṭa’s wife she ran to the fields and persuaded Trijaṭa to go and see Śrī Rāma. When Trijaṭa came to the scene, Rāma had almost finished his distribution, but Trijaṭa took courage and pushing forward through the crowd approached Rāma and said “Oh, famous King, I am a poor man with many children. Give something for this poor man who lives by farming.” Hearing this, Śrī Rāma giving him a small stick asked him to throw the stick into the midst of the cattle grazing nearby. The Brahmin tightening his clothes and getting ready, threw the stick with all his might to the south. The stick fell beyond a lakk of cattle grazing there, Śrī Rāma gave him all the cattle which stood inside the area covered by the stick. (Chapter 32, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyanā). Trijaṭa was the son of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIJAṬA. A servant demoness of the palace of Rāvana. Trijaṭa was one among the demonesses who were deputed to entice Siṭā, sitting dejected under the Aśoka tree, to the side of Rāvana. All the demonesses slept around Siṭā. Trijaṭa had a dream one night which is described in Chapter 27 of Sundara Kāṇḍa thus: “Śrī Rāma dressed in pure white robes and accompanied by Lakṣmana dropped to the place from air in a chariot built with ivory and drawn by a thousand swans. After that they came to Siṭā on the back of Airāvata. Śrī Rāma took Siṭā in his lap and rose up into the air. They went high to reach the Sun and Siṭā was seen putting on the Sun and the moon. Then Airāvata which was carrying Rāma, Siṭā and Lakṣmana came to the top of Laṅkā. Then they came to this place in chariot. Then they travelled to the north in a Puspaka vimāna. Rāvana with oil smeared on his body and looking all red was lying on the ground. His head was clean shaven. He was drinking oil from a pot and was shouting loudly. Then Rāvana went to the south on the back of a donkey. When he had travelled a short distance he fell from the donkey head downwards. Rising from there he was muttering many vulgar words. Then Rāvana sank into a foul-smelling dung-mire. A black woman wearing a red saree and mud smeared all over her body came near him and dragged him to the south. Kumbhakarṇa also was subjected to her torture. All the members of Rāvana’s family were seen smeared with oil. After that they all travelled south again. At that time Rāvana was seen on the back of a hog, Kumbhakarṇa on the back of a camel and Indrajit on the back of a crocodile. Vibhiṣaṇa alone was seen standing near the Puspaka Vimāna on the back of a four-tusked elephant wearing white robes and white garlands and sweet-smelling pastes smeared all over his body and holding a white umbrella with the four ministers by his side and the royal band playing. At that stage the beautiful city of Laṅkā with its whole army fell into the ocean. Then a monkey messenger of Śrī Rāma burnt the city of Laṅkā. All the women demonesses and Kumbhakarṇa were seen lying in a cow-dung pit wearing red dress.”
When Trijāta repeated her dream to her companions all were frightened to death. After the Rāma-Rāvana battle, it is stated in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, that Śrī Rāma gave presents to Trijāta. (Sloka 41, Chapter 291, Vana Parva).

TRIKAKUBHĀMĀ. A synonym of Mahāvīṣṇu. (Sloka 20, Chapter 140, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIKŪṬA. A mountain. There are twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru including Trikūṭa. Purāṇas say that the city of Lalikā, the abode of Rāvaṇa, was at the top of Trikūṭa. Mahāmeru is at the north of Bhārata. Lalikā is to the south of Bhārata. Then how is it possible for Lalikā to be on the top of Trikūṭa?

There is a story to substantiate this belief. Once there arose a quarrel between Vāsuki and Vāyuṇabhagavān and they decided to find out who between the two was more powerful. Vāsuki went and laid down around Mahāmeru so tightly that even Vāyu (air) could not enter it. Vāyu got enraged and broke into a cyclone shaking the whole world. Even Mahāmeru began to shake but Vāsuki lay unaffected. The Cyclone began to increase in vigour and the devas were frightened and they went to Mahāvīṣṇu accompanied by Śiva and Brahmā. After hearing their story Viṣṇu called Vāsuki and Vāyu to his side and commanded them to stop the quarrel. Vāsuki then unwound a part of his winding and that was from Trikūṭa. At once Vāyu entered there and separating Trikūṭa from other parts carried it away and dropped it in the southern sea. It fell to the south of the southern end of Bhārata. Lalikā is the city built on it by the celebrated architect, Viśvakarmā.

TRILOKITILAKA. A Yogesvari mantra. If one mutters this mantra (a sacred prayer addressed to a deity) one hundred and one times daily, one will become omniscient. Not only that, he would be able to move about to any place he wants. The mantra is this: “Hiṁ Gauri, Rudramāy te yogesvari hum phat Svāhā” (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRINETRA. A minister of Mahiśāsura. The cabinet of Mahiśāsura was extremely strong and brilliant. Cikura, virile and an expert in military science, was the Defence minister. The great economist, Tāmra, was the minister for finance. Udarka was the Commander-in-Chief and the three advisory members were Bāskala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka. Śukrācārya was the minister for education. (5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIPĀDA. A demon. In the battle between the demons and the devas Subrahmanya slew this demon. (Sloka 75, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TRIPURA. A phantom city built by Maya. 1) Origin. Kaśyapa Mahāraṇi son of Marici and grand- son of Brahmā had many wives. Of them Aditi got the first place and Diti the second place. Both of them were daughters of Daśa. Devas were born of Aditi and the asuras were born of Diti. Armies of asuras under the leadership of Śurapadma, Sīhṇavakra, Tārakāsura, Gomukha, Hiranyaśa, and Hiranyaśaśi had immense trouble to the devas. The devas joined together under the leadership of Indra and fought the asuras. The nectar received from the ocean of Milk always made the devas the conquerors. When Subrahmanya slew Tārakāsura the asuras became very weak.

At this stage Kamalākṣa, Tārakākṣa and Vidyumnāli, sons of Tārakāsura, did severe penance and made Brahmā appear before them. They demanded a boon that they would never be killed by anybody in any of the three worlds. Brahmā told them to ask any boon other than that. Then they said: “Great Lord, we must live in three cities and then roam about freely in the three worlds by your grace. Every thousand years all the three of us should join together at a place with our cities. After that meeting, we should separate and roam about freely for another thousand years. If at all there is death for us, it should occur only when we three are together and that also by one arrow.” Brahmā granted the boon and disappeared.

The asuras then approached Maya and asked him to construct three separate cities for them. Maya built three wonderful cities. One was with golden, another with silver and the third with iron. Tā rakākṣa took the golden one, Kamalākṣa took the silver one and Vidyumnāli took the iron one. The asuras started living in these cities. The three puras were respectively in Svarga, Ākāsa and the Earth. But each city had the power to travel to any other place at will. The power of controlling these cities was given to Bāna. Hiranya- kaśipu’s son was Prahlāda. Prahlāda’s son was Vi rōcana. Mahābali was Viśvakarman’s son and Bāna was Mahābali’s son (Chapter 14, Padma Purāṇa). All these three cities together were named Tripūra.

2) Mṛtasaṁjñi-vāpi. (The life giving tank). Even with the existence of Tripūra the asuras began to die in numbers and the Tripūras thought of a way to escape from this calamity. Hari, son of Tārakāsura, did penance and made Brahmā appear before him in person. According to a request from Hari Brahmā made Maya build a tank wonderful in nature. Brahmā filled the tank with nectar. If any asura died, it was enough if he was dipped in the tank and the dead asura would soon come to life with added strength and vigour. Asuras became immortal since this and the Tripūras started teasing the devas and men with increased ferocity.

3) Consultation with Śiva. The aggrieved devas approached Brahmā and finding him incapable of helping took him to Śiva. Śiva heard everything and assured them that he would kill them when they next met together at the end of a thousand years.

4) Śiva makes preparations. As a first step to the slaughter of the Tripūras, Śiva sent Nārada to Tripūra. Nārada by his unusual spiritual powers made the asura women feel more and more attached to the devas. Śiva at that time thinking about the convenience for a fight with the Tripūras came and settled down on the shores of the river Narmadā. That was how Narmadā became a holy river. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

Śiva had to make grand preparations for a fight with the Tripūras. He invoked half the strength of the devas to himself to make Śivasakti (Javelin of Śiva) greater than Asurasakti. The devas made Viśvakarmā construct a special chariot for Śiva. On the banks of the river Narmadā at a place which became renowned as Mahēsvara Śiva stayed for a thousand years thinking about the fight with the Tripūras. He made the mountain of Mandara his bow, Vāsuki, the string and Viṣṇu his arrow. He installed Agni at the tip and Vāyu at the bottom of the arrow. Four devas stood as horses to his chariot. The earth itself was the chariot and all

TRIRATHIKA (S). (Three charioteers). Aśvatthāmā, Kṛṣṇa and Śaṭyaki, the three eminent bow-men who took part in the Bāhratā battle were called Trirathikas meaning three great charioteers. (See under Aśvatthāmā.)

2) Father discards him. When Satyavrata grew up he became a lewd, lustful imprudent man. One day while he was leading such a contemptuous life, a marriage was being conducted in a brahmin house. Guests had assembled, the bridgroom had come and the ceremony was about to start when Satyavrata entered the marriage hall and carried away by force the bride to the shock of all those present there. Some of the Brahmīn guests immediately went to Trasyāruṇa and told him what a shameful crime his son had committed. The enraged father at once sent Satyavrata out from the palace. Satyavrata left the country altogether and went and stayed in a colony of harijans. Though he lived with those low-caste people he did not adopt their mode of living. He went out daily to the forests with his bow and arrow and made his food. He never felt any animosity towards his father who had thus sent him out from his country. He thought thus "Of course, my father got terribly angry when he heard the complaints of the Brahmīns and in that mood punished me thus, though the punishment was a bit too much. But our family preceptor Vasiṣṭha, who knows everything, who is a moralist and a righteous man, who has the knowledge and authority to prescribe atonement for all sins, did severe punishment. That was very hard." As he thought more about it in this vein, he felt a great hatred towards Vasiṣṭha.

3) Satyavrata and Vīśvāmitra's family. When his only son Satyavrata was turned out from the family, King Trasyāruṇa was greatly distressed. He went to the forests to do penance to get another son. At that time the country did not have rains for twelve successive years as a punishment for the King for sending out his son. The people suffered much. Among the people who were suffering were the wife and children of Vīśvāmitra. Vīśvāmitra at that time had gone to the shores of river Kauśiki for doing penance. Vīśvāmitra's family consisting of his wife and three sons during that famine lived in hunger. At last the mother decided to sell the middle son and buy food with the money received by the sale. She put a rope made of darbha grass round the neck of the boy and took him to the market. On the way Satyavrata saw them and on hearing their sad story told them not to sell the child. He assured them that he would take care of them till the return of Vīśvāmitra. He removed the darbha rope from the child's neck and the child got the name of Gālava from that time onwards. (Gala = neck). He promised them he would daily place enough meat at the foot of a tree near the aśrama. True to his promise, he hunted in the forests and brought to the foot of the tree fresh flesh of deer or hare or boar and also fresh fruits. The family lived happily because of him.

4) Curse of Vasiṣṭha and the name of Triṣāṅku. When Trasyāruṇa went to the forests to do penance, it was Vasiṣṭha who was managing the affairs of the palace. The heir-apparent Satyavrata lived in the hut of a caṇḍālī. Every minute Satyavrata's hatred towards Vasiṣṭha increased in strength. One day Satyavrata did not get any game even after a day's hunting and at dusk he happened to reach the aśrama of Vasiṣṭha where he saw Nandini, the beloved cow of the sage, grazing by the side of the aśrama. Anger, desire and hunger made him imprudent and without thinking of the consequences Satyavrata killed Nandini and after eating enough to appease his hunger took the rest to feed the family of Vīśvāmitra. The wife of Vīśvāmitra little knowing that it was cow's flesh cooked it and ate it.

That night when Vasiṣṭha came to the aśrama he found Nandini missing and he went in search of it. After some time the sage knew that Satyavrata had killed and eaten it. The enraged sage called Satyavrata to his side and cursed him thus "You will from today become a caṇḍālī. Three saṅkus (sins) namely wrath of a father, abduction of another man's wife and consumption of cow's flesh will give you life-long trouble and thus you will earn a name, Triṣāṅku (Three saṅkus). Instantly Satyavrata became a caṇḍālī and started roaming about in the streets.

5) Triṣāṅku becomes King. Triṣāṅku, distressed at heart by a father's wrath and a Guru's curse walked about aimlessly in the forests. He expressed his desire to the jīs and Brahmīns to do a yāga and get himself absolved of all his sins. But nobody was willing to help a wretched man cursed and abandoned by both his father and his Guru. Feeling desperate, he decided to commit suicide. He made a great fire-pit and prepared himself to jump into it. Before doing that he prayed to the goddess and when the goddess knew that his devotee would jump into the fire and become ashes, she appeared before him in person and said thus: "Son, why do you try to jump into the fire? Your father has become old and day after tomorrow he will crown you as King and then go to the forests to do penance. Look, there comes your father's minister to take you to the palace.”

When the goddess disappeared Satyavrata returned to his āśrama in a pensive mood. Nārada went and informed the king of everything that happened in the forest and the king immediately sent his ministers to fetch Satyavrata to the palace. When Satyavrata came the king crowned him as king and then went to the forests for penance.

6) Satyavrata becomes Candala again. Satyavrata ruled the country for a long time. He was a pious ruler, devoted to god and soon he developed a desire to go to heaven with his mortal body. He approached Vasiṣṭha first for this purpose. But the family preceptor told him there was nothing in the śāstras about any yāga which could help one to go bodily to heaven. Disappointed he approached the sons of Vasiṣṭha who ridiculed him when he told them of his queer desire. Trisāṅkū got angry and left them saying “Let me see whether there are others in this country who could send me bodily to heaven.” Those arrogant words annoyed Vasiṣṭha and his sons and they cursed him and made him a candāla again. Trisāṅkū thereafter did not return to the palace, but went to the forests to live there. He knew if he returned to the palace as a candāla he would not be recognised by his wife and children.

Hariścandra, son of Trisāṅkū, heard about the curse on his father and sent the ministers to fetch his father to the palace. But Trisāṅkū did not come back and so the ministers made Hariścandra the king of Ayodhya.

7) Vīśvāmitra meets Trisāṅkū. When Hariścandra became king, Trisāṅkū was living in Ambāvana (forest of Ambā) as a great devotee of the goddess. It was at that time that Vīśvāmitra returned home after his penance. Vīśvāmitra enquired of his wife how they managed to live during the great famine. Then Satyavatī, wife of Vīśvāmitra, told him the whole story of how Satyavrata helped them, why he killed Nandini, Vasiṣṭha’s cow, and how they ate cow’s flesh, how Satyavrata was cursed to be a candāla, how he was called back as king and how he was at that time living in Ambāvana. The eyes of Vīśvāmitra became wet when he heard the sorrowful story and he decided to end the candālatva (state of being a candāla) of Satyavrata. He went straight to Ambāvana and met Trisāṅkū there.

8) Trisāṅkū Svarga (Heaven of Trisāṅkū). Vīśvāmitra promised Trisāṅkū that he would send him to heaven bodily and made preparations for a yāga. No other sage partook in the yāga because of instructions from Vasiṣṭha. But undaunted, Vīśvāmitra conducted the yāga alone and, as the power of his performances increased, Trisāṅkū started rising bodily from earth slowly and soon rose up to heaven. When the devas found a Candāla standing with his physical body before the gates of heaven, they ran to Indra and told him. Indra got angry and pushed him out from heaven and Trisāṅkū came falling down with his head turned downwards to the earth. Vīśvāmitra cried loudly calling Vīśvāmitra by name. When Vīśvāmitra, hearing the noise, looked up he saw poor Trisāṅkū descending fast from heaven with his head turned upside down. Vīśvāmitra’s anger knew no bounds and he roared aloud “Let Trisāṅkū stay where he is now.” Trisāṅkū stopped in mid-air. Indra did not allow Trisāṅkū to come up and Vīśvāmitra did not allow him to come down. Indra then made a separate heaven for Trisāṅkū below the original heaven. Then Vīśvāmitra started to create another Indra and devas for the new heaven. The devas were frightened and Indra then approached Vīśvāmitra and requested him to desist from his attempt to make duplicate devas promising him that he would give Trisāṅkū a seat in his heaven itself. Vīśvāmitra agreed to it. At once Indra brought a golden Vīmāna and took him bodily to heaven. (Sargas 57 to 59, Bābakānda, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa 7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata; 9th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapter 13, Harivaṃśa; Sundara Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Chapter 71, Ādi Parva; Chapter 12, Śabhā Parva).

Triśāṅkū II. A philosopher. He is mentioned in several places in Taittirīyopaniṣad.

Triśaṅkaṇa. A sage. When he went to Hastināpura as a messenger of peace, he met Śri Kṛṣṇa on the way. (Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva).

Triśīras I. A demon who was a friend of Rāvaṇa. The Khaṇḍa-Dīṣaṇa-Triśīras combination led the attack on Śri Rāma in the forest of Daṇḍaka when Lakṣmaṇa cut off the nose and breasts of the demoness Śūripaṇkā. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa killed all the three. Triśīras was a powerful fighter and Śri Rāma’s forehead was wounded by an arrow from Triśīras. The latter came and fought in a chariot drawn by four horses. He was killed by an arrow from Rāma. (Sarga 26, Arāyaṇa Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Triśīras II (Viśvarūpa). Once there was a celebrated Prajāpāti of name Ṭvaṣṭa. Though he was of a pious nature interested in the welfare of Brahmans, he hated Indra. He thought of destroying Indra somehow. With that purpose in view he produced by his wife Recana, a powerful son and named him Viśvarūpa. The boy had three heads and so he was called Triśīras (Tri=Three Sīras—head) also. He could use his three heads for three different purposes at a time. He would drink wine with one head and mutter the Veda-mantras by another head and see the world by the third.

Even from boyhood he disliked worldly pleasures and, abandoning even food, started to do penance. During the hot season he would sit amidst fire and during the cold season he would sit in water to do penance. He would stand with his head down and do penance. The penance of Triśīras was so severe that Indra began to get frightened. He sent celestial maidens to stop the penance but all the attempts proved futile before that great ascetic. Then Indra himself riding on Airāvata went and killed the sage by his Vajrāvudha. Indra feared whether Triśīras would come to life again and wreak vengeance on him. So he ordered a carpenter standing nearby to bring to him the three heads separated from the body. The carpenter cut off the heads from the body and as each head fell to the ground several kinds of birds were found escaping from it. From the head which used to mutter Vedic mantras rose the Kapilājala birds; from the head used for drinking wine rose Kalapīṇga birds and from the third rose the Tititiri birds. When the birds thus rose to the air Indra was convinced that Triśīras was dead and he went away. See under Viśvarūpa. (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Triśoka. A sage who was the son of Kaṇva. The Aśvin-devas once redeemed the cows belonging to this sage. (Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 1, Nyaya).
TRIŚRĀGA. A mountain. This stands to the north of Mahāmeru. Mahāmeru spreads over an area of eighteen thousand square miles and is two thousand miles high. It is surrounded by eight other small mountains two on each side. To the east is Jaṭhara and Devakūṭa. Pavamāna and Pāryāṭa stand to the west while to the south arc Kālīśa and Karavīra. On the north arc Trīśriga and Makaragiri. (8th Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata.)

TRISROTASI. A sacred river. This river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva.)

TRISTHĀNA. A holy place. If one lives andfasts here for one month, one would be able to see God. (Śloka 15, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva.)

TRIŚṬUP. One of the seven horses tied to the chariot of Sūrya. The seven horses are; Gāyatrī, Brhati, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Triṣṭūp, Anuṣṭup and Paḥkti. (Chapter 8, Anśa 2, Visṇu Purāṇa.)

TRĪSOLĀ. A weapon of Śiva with the Vaśīva tejas (brilliance of Viśu) obtained by churning Sūrya. Viśvakarman made the following: Cakra-yudha (Discus weapon) of Viśu, Triśūla (three-forked spike) of Śiva, Puspaka Viṃśa (Aerial chariot) of Kubera and the weapon Śakti of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 2, Anśa 3, Viśu Purāṇa.) (See under Viśvakarman for more details)

TRĪŚULAKHĀṬA. A sacred place. If a man bathes at this place and worships the devas and the manes, he would attain a place equal to that of Gaṅapatī. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva.)

TRITA. 1) General information. A son of the sage Gautama. He had two brothers called Ekata and Dvita. (See under Ekata.)

2) Other details.
(i) Ekata, Dvita and Trīta were born to clean the hands of the devas when they become smeared with the sacrificial butter during the yāgas. Of these Trīta once fell into a well while drawing water and the asuras closed the well. But Trīta escaped opening the top. (Śūkta 52, Anuvāka 10, Manḍala 1, Rgveda.)
(ii) Once Ekata, Dvita and Trīta were stranded in a desert and desperately needed water to quench an increasing thirst. At last they found a well and Trīta after getting down and quenching his thirst brought water to his brothers. The cruel brothers, after drinking the water pushed Trīta into the well and covered the well with the wheel of a bullock-cart. Trīta prayed to the Aśvinidevas for help and they appeared before him and rescued him from the well. (Śūkta 105, Manḍala 1, Rgveda.)

TRIVARCAŚ (TRIVARAGĀKA). A sage who was the son of Āigiras. He joined with four other sages and did penance and produced a son named Pāṇacajanya equal to the god Agni in splendour. The other four sages were Kaśyapa, Paṇḍa, Čyavana and Agni. (Ślokas 1 to 5, Chapter 220, Vana Parva.)

TRIVAKRĀ. A hunchback of a woman who was engaged in the work of making scented cosmetics for Kaṁsa. This woman saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the palace of his uncle Kaṁsa in Mathurāpurī. Even at the first sight she felt a great respect and devotion towards Kṛṣṇa and she gave him the scented cosmetics she was carrying to Kaṁsa. Kṛṣṇa placed a foot of his on hers and holding her chin by both the hands raised it up and lo! she stood straight without her hunch. She requested Kṛṣṇa to stay with her that night but Kṛṣṇa left her saying he would stay with her on another day which he did the next day itself. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata.)

TRIVIKRAMA. Another name for Vāmana.

TRIVIKRAMASENA. A mighty king.

TRIVIŚṬAPA. A sacred place inside Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in the holy tank there and worships Śiva one would go to heaven. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva.)

TRĪNABINDU I. A lake in the forest of Kāmyaka. The Pāṇḍavas once during their exile went to Trīnabindusaras from Dvaitavana. (Śloka 13, Chapter 258, Vana Parva.)

TRĪNABINDU II. A sage. This sage sat and did penance at a place called Rṣītūrtha. (Chapter 20, Padma Purāṇa.)

1) Grandfather of Viśravas. Viśravas, father of Rāvaṇa was the son of Mānini, daughter of Trīnabindu. There is a story about him in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa.

Once the sage Pulastya was doing penance in a secluded place in the Himālayas when a few Deva Gandharva women came to that place and disturbed his penance by their dances and noise. The angered sage gave a curse to that place saying that any woman coming to that place would become pregnant. Mānini, daughter of Trīnabindu went to this place unware of the curse and got pregnant. She came weeping to her father and Trīnabindu immediately took his daughter to Pulastya and asked her to marry Mānini. Pulastya married Mānini and Viśravas was born to her.

2) How he cursed Hanūmān. Once Hanūmān caught hold of a lion and elephant in fight and tied them each to a post on the two sides of the āśrama of Trīnabindu. When the sage stepped out from the hermitage, he was for a moment frightened by the sight of two mighty animals on the sides of his āśrama and knew by his divine powers that the perpetrator of that deed was Hanūmān and so he cursed him saying that he would lose all his divine powers forthwith. Hanūmān begged for relief and the sage said that he would regain his powers at the time of his going in search of Śītā when another member of his species would remind him of his lost divine powers. Hanūmān remained oblivious of his powers till the time when the monkeys were trying to leap to Lanka from the Mahendra mountain on the shores of Bhārata. Jámbavān, a mighty monkey chief called Hanūmān to his side and made him understand the great powers latent in him. From that moment onwards Hanūmān regained his lost powers and became his old self. (See under Hanūmān.)

TRNĀKA. A saintly King. He sat in the court of Yama and worshipped him. (Śloka 17, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva.)

TRNĀPA. A Deva Gandharva. He partook in the Jannotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 56, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva.)

TRNASOMĀNGIRAS. A sage who lived in the south of Bhārata. (Śloka 34, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva.)

TRNĀVARTA. A demon who was the son of Tārakāsura. This demon was living serving Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa once sent Trīnāvarta to kill Kṛṣṇa growing up in Ambādi. Trīnāvarta, in magic disguise went to the house of Nandagopā. Even when he entered the place bad omens were visible. Yaśodā was breast-feeding baby Kṛṣṇa keeping the babe in her lap. Soon Yaśodā felt the babe gaining weight and very soon she felt the weight unbearable and rose up to place the child on a mat on the ground. But even before that Yaśodā was fixed to the ground by the weight of the babe. But somehow she placed the babe on a mat on the ground and went out to wash her hands and face. When she came back she could not find the babe on the mat. Tṛṇāvarta had come in the form of whirl-wind and had already carried away the child. But after some time the weight of the babe increased so much that Tṛṇāvarta, unable to carry the weight, wanted to drop the child to the ground. But the child stuck on to his neck and breast tightly and Tṛṇāvarta finding no escape from the tight hold which suffocated him, fell to the ground dead on a hard rock. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TṛṬIYĀ. A river. This river sat in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Sloka 21, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TRUTI I. Thirty alpakālas make one Truti. (See under Kālamāna).

TRUTI II. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TRYAKṢA. An ancient place of habitation. When the King of this place went to see Dharmaputra with gifts the gate-keepers did not allow him to enter the palace premises. (Sloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

TRYAMBAKA. One of the Ekādaśa Rudras (eleven Rudras). See under Ekādaśarudra.

TUGRA. A King exulted in the Rgyeda. This King sent his son Bhujyu with a large army by sea to conquer his enemies in dvīpāntara. When they were a long distance away from the shore the boats carrying them capsized in a storm and the prince and army were drowned in the sea. The prince then prayed to the Āśvinidevas and they saved him and his army from the sea and sent them back to the palace. Those boats could travel both in the sea and the air. (Sūkta 116, Maṇḍala I, Rgyeda, Anuvāka 17).

TUḤĀRA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

TUḤUNḌA. A demon. This demon was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Daṇu. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva). Accompanied by Tāракāṣura this demon once attacked Subrahmanya. Tuhunḍa threw an iron mace against Gaṇapati who blocked his chariot. By a single stroke of Gaṇapati, the diamond-studded mace of the demon broke into six pieces. When he found his mace gone the demon caught hold of Gaṇapati and beat him with a spiked club on his forehead. Gaṇapati cut him with his weapon (Axe) ‘Vennamāhu’. The demon fell to the ground in two pieces but still his hold on Gaṇapati was not released. Gaṇapati tried his best but could not loosen the hold. Then Kuṇḍodara, a leader of the attendants of Gaṇapati smashed the hands of Tuhunḍa with an iron mace. Tuhunḍa was killed thus. (Chapter 65, Vīyena Purāṇa).

This Tuhunḍa was born in his next life in the world as a King called Senābīndu. (Sloka 19, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

TULĀDHĀRA. A charitable and upright Vaśiyā who lived in Kāśi. He gave the sage Jājali dharmopadesa and both of them entered heaven. (See under Jājali).

TULĀPURUŚADĀNA. See under Merudāna.

TULASI. (Holy Basil plant.

1) General information. Tulasi is a plant held most sacred by the Hindus. There is a Purānic background for Tulasi attaining this spiritualistic importance. In fact it is Mahālakṣmī, wife of Viśṇu, who had herself taken the form of Tulasi. There is a story about it in Devī Bhāgavata.

2) The curse of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, Gaṅgā and Lakṣmī were all, in the beginning, wives of Mahāviṣṇu. The Lord loved all the three equally. One day all the four were sitting together when Gaṅgā sent lustful glances at Viśṇu which was immediately noticed by both Sarasvatī and Lakṣmī. Sarasvatī got angry and rising up caught hold of the hair of Gaṅgā and dragged her to the ground. Lakṣmī then caught hold of Sarasvatī to prevent further assault but Sarasvatī then poured all her rage on Lakṣmī and cursed her to be born as a plant on earth. Gaṅgādevī could not bear this and she cursed Sarasvatī to be born as a river on earth. Sarasvatī retorted with a curse that Gaṅgā also would be born as a river. When the whole tumult was over Viśṇu called Lakṣmī to his side and said—“Oh Devī, do not worry. Things have happened as predestined. You go and be born as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja and grow up there. From there by divine grace you will be transformed into a plant sacred enough to make all the three worlds pure. That plant will be named Tulasi. When you will be thus living as Tulasi, a demon named Saṅkhaṇḍa with part of your virile strength will be born and he will marry you. Then you can come back to me. The holy river Padmāvati will also be another form of your spirit.”

3) The story of Dharmadhvaja. Who was this Dharmadhvaja to whom was born Mahālakṣmī as a daughter? In times of old there was a Manu called Dakṣasāvārṇi who was extremely virtuous and a part of Viśṇu. Descending from Dakṣasāvārṇi were Brahmasāvārṇi-Dharmasāvārṇi-Rudrasāvārṇi-Devasāvārṇi-Indraśāvārṇi Vṛṣadhvaja. This last named was a great devotee of Śiva and because of his great affection for this devotee Śiva lived a whole period of a dīvāyuga in the ādrama of Vṛṣadhvaja. King Vṛṣadhvaja by an edict prohibited the worship of any other deity than Śiva in his country. Even the worship of Mahālakṣmī ordained by the Vedas during the month of Bhādra (September) became extinct. All Yāgas and worship of Viśṇu came to a stop. Sūrya (Sun-god) got angry at this belittling of other gods than Śiva and cursed the King Vṛṣadhvaja that he would cease to be prosperous. Śiva did not like it and he went to punish Śūrya holding his trident in his hand. Śūrya was frightened and he approached his father Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa and Śūrya went to Brahm and acquainted him with all details. Brahm also was helpless in the matter and so all the three of them went to Mahāviṣṇu. They prostrated before Viśṇu and told him all. At that time Śiva also came there. Addressing all of them Viṣṇu said “Oh, Devas, within this half an hour twentyone yugas have passed by on the earth. Everyone of them have come to speak to me is dead and gone. Even his son Rathadhvaja is dead. The latter has two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja. They are dull and splendidless now because of the curse of Śūrya and are now worshipping Lakṣmī.” Saying thus Viṣṇu disappeared.
4) Birth of Tulasī. Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja did penance to propitiate Mahālakṣṇī. Kuśadhvaja had a wife named Mālāvati. She bore a daughter named Vedavati. Śītā, wife of Śrī Rāma, was a rebirth of this Vedavati.

King Dharmadhvaja had a wife named Mādhavi. Mahālakṣṇī entered her womb as an embryo and after a hundred years Mādhavi gave birth to a daughter. Even at the time of birth the child looked like a matured girl and was extremely pretty. She was therefore, called Tulasī, meaning matchless. (Tula = match). This Tulasī abandoning all worldly pleasures went to Badarikāśrama and started doing penance there with the prayer that Mahāvīṣṇu should become her husband. She did penance for twenty-four thousand years sitting amidst fire in the hot season and sitting in water in the cold season and taking only fruits and water as food. Then she did penance for another thirty thousand years eating leaves only, another forty thousand years taking air only as food and another ten thousand years without any food. At this stage Brahmā appeared and asked her the object of her Penance. She replied she wanted Mahāvīṣṇu to be her husband. Hearing this Brahmā said thus—“Devi, you know the cowboy Sudāmā born of a part of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. That brilliant cowboy has now been born on earth, due to a curse of Rādhā, as a demon named Śaṅkhačūḍa. He is matchlessly eminent and has once fallen in love with you seeing you at Goloka. You will become his wife and later you can become the wife of Nārāyaṇa. At that time a part of your divine body will remain on earth as a plant named Tulasī. Tulasī will become the most sacred of all plants, dear to Viṣṇu, and all worship without using Tulasī leaves would be ineffective.”

5) Marriage of Tulasī. Due to a curse of Rādhā, Sudāmā, the cowboy, was born on earth as a demon named Śaṅkhačūḍa. He did penance sitting at Badarikāśrama and obtained Viśukavaca. Another object of his was to marry Tulasī. He obtained a boon from Brahmā that his death would occur only when the Viṣṇu Kavaca was removed from his body and the chastity of his wife was lost. At that time Śaṅkhačūḍa and Tulasī met each other in the forests and were married. Śaṅkhačūḍa, brilliant and majestic, went about with Tulasī in amorous sports creating jealousy even among the devas. His arrogance gave innumerable troubles to the devas and they along with Brahmā and Śiva approached Mahāvīṣṇu for a remedy. Viṣṇu then sent Śiva with his spike to kill Śaṅkhačūḍa and he himself started to molest the chastity of his wife Tulasī. Śaṅkhačūḍa took leave of Tulasī to go and fight with Śiva. When Tulasī was thus left alone, Mahāvīṣṇu in the form of Śaṅkhačūḍa approached Tulasī and after some preliminary talks entered into sexual acts. Tulasī found some difference in the usual sexual methods and suspecting foul play jumped up to curse the impostor. At once Mahāvīṣṇu appeared in his true form and said “You have been doing penance for a long time to get me as your husband. Your husband Śaṅkhačūḍa was the chief of my Pārśadas, Sudāmā. It is time for him to go back to Goloka getting himself released from the curse. By this time Śiva would have killed him and he would have gone to Goloka as Sudāmā. You can now abandon your body and come with me to Vaikuṇṭha to enjoy life as my wife. Your body will decay and become a holy river named Gaṇḍakī; your hair will become Tulasī plant the leaves of which will be held sacred in all the three worlds.”

Tulasī then changed herself into the form of Lakṣmī and went to Vaikuṇṭha with Mahāvīṣṇu. (9th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

6) The greatness of Tulasī. Everything of the Tulasī plant, leaves, flowers, fruits, twigs, skin and even the soil around is holy. The soul of a dead one whose dead body is cremated using Tulasī twigs for firewood would attain a permanent place in Viṣṇuloka. Even great sinners would be absolved of their sins if their dead bodies are cremated with Tulasī twigs. If at the time of death one thinks of God and mutters His name and if his dead body is later cremated with Tulasī twigs, he would have no rebirths. Even he who has done a crore of sins would attain mokṣa if at the time of cremating his dead body a piece of Tulasī twig is placed at the bottom of the funeral pyre. Just as all waters become pure by the union with Gaṅgā water, all firewood is made pure by the addition of a small piece of Tulasī twig. If the dead body of one is cremated using Tulasī twigs alone, one’s sins for a crore of Kalpa years would be washed away. Yamadūtas would keep away from one whose dead body is cremated with Tulasī twigs and servants of Viṣṇu would come near. If a light is burnt for Viṣṇu with a Tulasī stick it would be equal to burning several lakhs of lights for Viṣṇu. If one makes the Tulasī leaves into a paste and smears it on one’s body and then worships Viṣṇu for one day, one would be getting the benefit of a hundred ordinary workings and also the benefit of doing a hundred godānas, (gifts of cows). (Chapter 24, Padma Purāṇa).

TUMBURU I. A Deva Gandharva. He was the best musician among the Gandharvas.

1) Birth. Tumburu was the son of Kaśyapa, son of Marici and grandson of Brahmā, born of his wife Pradhā. Of the sons of Kaśyapa the four Gandharva sons, Tumburu, Bāhu, Hāhā and Hūhū were noted for their sweet and pleasant conversation.

2) Tumburu and the Pāṇḍava. Mahābhārata states about several occasions when Tumburu has shown a special and deep interest in the Pāṇḍava. The following few are of special mention—

(i) Tumburu attended the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 54, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).
(ii) Once this Gandharva gave Yudhiṣṭhira a hundred horses. (Śloka 24, Chapter 52, Sahābh Parva).
(iii) Tumburu welcomed Arjuna when the latter went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 14).
(iv) Once when the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the country of Viṣṇu the Kauravas carried away the cattle of the King. Arjuna in disguise then fought against the Kauravas and Tumburu watched the fight with interest. (Śloka 12, Chapter 56, Viṣṇu Parva).
(v) Tumburu was present at the Aśvamedhāyāga of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 39, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva).

3) How Tumburu was born as Viṭṭā. When Rāma and Lakṣmānā were in the forests in exile a demon named Virādha attacked them. That demon was none other than Tumburu. Once when Tumburu was living in the city of Kubera he committed a sin and Kubera cursed him and made him into a demon. Kubera had then told him that he would get relief from the curse when he was slain by Rāma, son of Daśaratha. Śri Rāma killed Virādha and the latter regaining the form of Tumburu left for Gándharvaloka, (See under Virādha).

4) How he cursed Purūravas. It is found in Kathāsaritsāgara that the temporary separation which Purūravas had from Urvāśi was due to a curse by the Gándharva Tumburu.

After marrying Urvāśi Purūravas once went to Deva-loka at the invitation of Indra. He was invited to help Indra in his fight against the asuras. Indra celebrated the day on which one of the best of the demons, Māyādhara was killed. Rambahā was dancing before ācārya Tumburu on the occasion and Purūravas finding fault with her dance mocked at her. Rambahā felt insulted and asked the King thus: “Fool of a King, what do you know of the divine dances of Devaloka?” Purūravas retorted that he had learnt more of dancing from Urvāśi than what her preceptor Tumburu knew. Tumburu got angry and cursed Purūravas that he would live separated from Urvāśi till he did penance to please Mahāviṣṇu. The Gándharvas then carried away Urvāśi from Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

5) Other details.

(i) Tumburu was a member of the court of Indra. (Sloka 14, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).
(ii) Tumburu was a member of the court of Kubera. (Sloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).
(iii) The songs of Tumburu who was a worshipper of Kubera used to be heard from the mountain of Gândhamādana on the full-moon day. (Sloka 29, Chapter 159, Vana Parva).
(b) Kaḍyapa got as his sons the Ekaḍaṣarudras of his wife Surabhi. Surabhi who became pure by penudras of his grace of Mahādeva five other sons named Aja, Ekapā, Aharbuddha, Tvāṣṭa and Rudra. The noble and famous Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvāṣṭa. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

c) Kaḍyapa Mahāraja got a son named Tvāṣṭa of his wife Aditi. (Śloka 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

Because of such varied statements it is not possible to say whose son Tvāṣṭa was.

2) Indra's enemy. Even from the beginning, Tvāṣṭa hated Indra. Tvāṣṭa begot of his wife Reccanā a son named Viśvarūpa to kill Indra. Viśvarūpa was the younger brother of Sanniveṣa. Viśvarūpa was called Trīśiras also. (See under Trīśiras). While Viśvarūpa was doing penance Indra killed him by his Vajrāyudha. Enraged at this Tvāṣṭa produced another asura named Vṛtra to kill Indra. (See under Vṛtra). Indra killed Vṛtrasura also. At last greatly disappointed Tvāṣṭa cursed Indra that he would suffer from Putraduṣkhā (loss of son) and then went to the mount Meru to do penance.

3) Other details.

(i) Tvāṣṭa also treated as a Rudra. (Chapter 15, Atri I, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

(ii) When the forest of Khāṇḍava was burnt, he stood on the side of Indra and fought against Kaṭava and Arjuna. He separated huge portions from the mountain and threw them against Arjuna and Kaṭa. (Śloka 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Tvāṣṭa shines in the court of Indra. (Śloka 14, Chapter 7, Śabhā Parva).

(iv) Kuśera, daughter of Tvāṣṭa was once abducted by Narakāśura. (Chapter 38, Dékaśiṇāyata Pātha, Śabhā Parva).

(v) Viśvakarmā also used to be called Tvāṣṭa. (Śloka 24, Chapter 100, Vana Parva).

(vi) The monkey called Nala was the son of Tvāṣṭa. (Śloka 41, Chapter 263, Vana Parva).

(vii) Tvāṣṭa presented Subrahmanya with two Pārṣadas named Cakra and Anucakra. (Śloka 40, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

Tvāṣṭa II. A King of the family of Bharata. This Tvāṣṭa was the son of Bhauvana and father of Viraja. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

Tvāṣṭa-Dhara. One of the two sons of Śukrācārya who were deputed to do heinous acts of worship by Śukra. The other was Atri. (Śloka 37, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

U

U (ॐ). The letter ‘u’ means Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

Ū (ॐ) This letter means ‘protection’. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 34).

Ucaka. A King of the Solar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

Ucathiya. A muni in the line of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

Ucāisyārasa. I. 1) Birth. A horse which emerged from water during the churning of the sea of Milk. (See under Kṣurābdhīmathana). Devendra grabbed it the moment he saw it, and thenceforth it became his vehicle. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 33-37).

2) Colour of the horse. Once, during a controversy, Vināṭa, wife of Kaḍyapa, contended that the colour of Ucāisyārasas was white, while another wife of Kaḍyapa, Kadru said that its tail was black in colour. It was decided to bet that she who got defeated in this controversy should become the slave of the winner. Because the serpents, the sons of Kadru, cheated Vināṭa, she had to become Kadru’s slave. (See under Vināṭa). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 20).

3) Lakṣmīdevi became mare. Devī Bhāgavata relates a story of Mahālakṣmī becoming a mare on account of Ucāisyārasas. King Revanta, son of Sūrya and friend of Indra, once went to Vaikunṭha to pay his respects to Bhagavān Viṣṇu, riding on Ucāisyārasas. Mahālakṣmī, who was then with Viṣṇu was surprised at the arrival of Revanta. Seeing the scintillating form of Ucāisyārasas, her brother, Mahālakṣmī sat looking at the horse unmindful of all other things. (Mahālakṣmī and the horse were both born from the Sea of Milk and hence were sister and brother). Thus occupied Mahālakṣmī did not hear Mahāviṣṇu asking, “Who is this one who comes like a second Cupid?” Angry at this Viṣṇu said—

“So much attracted by the horse, you have not answered me. Because you enjoy (Ramās) so much your name in future will be Ramā. You will also become frivolous like an uncultured woman. You have never been constant. Because you felt so much attracted to this horse in my very presence, you will be born as a mare in the world of men.”

According to this curse Mahālakṣmī had to be born as a mare in the world; the Hehaya dynasty had its origin from her. (See under Ekāvira). (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

Ucāisyārasa. II. A Mahāraja of the Pūru dynasty. He was one of the six sons of King Avikṣit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 53).

Ucchikha. A serpents born in the family of Takṣaka. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 37, Vers 9).

Ucchṛṅga. One of the two attendants given to Skanda by Vindhyā. The other was named Atriṅga. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 49).

Udānavāyu. One of the five life-breaths. The five life-breaths are Prāna, Apāna, Samāna, Udāna and Vyāna.

Udāpanatīrtha. A holy bath on the bank of the river Sarasvati. It is said that Balabhadra Rāma, while going on a pilgrimage, had visited this holy bath. There is a story showing how this place became a holy bath. Long ago there was a hermit named Gautama, who had three sons called Ekata, Dvita and Trita. The father was much pleased at the dutiful and devotional character of his sons. One day he performed a sacrifice and went to heaven. Then the kings and the priests who were present for the sacrifice began to honour and respect Trita. Ekata and Dvita did not like this. The three brothers performed sacrifices and acquired a large number of cows. With these cows they started for the east. Trita walked before. Ekata and Dvita who were behind, made a consultation and drove the cows another way. Trita walked on in front. Alone. On the bank of the Sarasvati he saw a wolf and getting terrified, he fell into a well in which there was no water. Standing in the well, he imagined a creeper that was hanging to the well as ‘Soma’ (a herb used as oblation in sacrifice) and performed sacrifice, chanting the Vedas. His chanting was heard in heaven and Bhaspati and other gods came to him and asked him what boon he desired. Treta told them that he only wanted to be saved from the well. Immediately the river Sarasvatī flowed into the well and the waves began to swell. Standing on the waves he praised and glorified the gods. Then he returned home and cursed Ekata and Dvita and transmuted them into wolves. Tria said that their children would become monkeys and cattle. It happened so. The place where the Gods appeared before Treta, became famous and got the name Udapānatiirtha. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 36).

UDĀPEKṢI. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Vedāntin. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanz 59).

UDARAKSA. A warrior of Skanda Deva. (M.B. Šalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanz 63).

UDARASUNDIYĂ. A hermit of the Durbar of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanz 31).

UDARKA. A minister of Mahiśāsura. The ministry of Mahiśāsura was very powerful and efficient. The brave and doughty Cikṣura was the war minister. Udarka was the general of the army. (See under Mahiśāsura).

UDAYAGIRI I. The mountain of the rising. It is supposed by poets that the Sun and the Moon rise from this mountain.

UDAYAGIRI II. An ancient place of pilgrimage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanz 93, that by conducting evening prayer and devotion at this place once, one could obtain the fruits of conducting evening prayer and meditation for twelve years continuously.

UDAYANA. A renowned king of the Candravānīśa (Lunar dynasty).

2) Birth. There was a city called Kauśāmibi situated in the middle of the famous kingdom known as Vata in North India. The palace of king Śatānīka, born of the family of Arjuna, was in Kauśāmibi. Viṣṇumati was the queen of Śatānīka. She had been childless. One day while Śatānīka was hunting in the forest, he met with the hermit Śaṇḍiyya, by whose blessings Viṣṇumati conceived and gave birth to a son. That son was Sahasrānīka. When he came of age, Śatānīka left the country with his son and went to the heaven to help the gods in their battle with the Asuras, and he died there. Sahasrānīka became a mighty emperor. Once he got an invitation from Indra to go to heaven and help the gods to fight the Asuras. After having defeated the Asuras, one day, he was walking with Indra in the Nandana Park, when he saw the gods playing with their wives in the park. Immediately the unmarried king became thoughtful and Indra read correctly, the reason for the sudden change in the king and said to the king. “Oh King! Don’t be worried. A girl becoming you in every aspect, is born in the world. Her name is Mrgāvati.” Sahasrānīka was greatly pleased at this and he returned to the earth. In the chariot there were Tilottamā and the charioteer, with the king. The king who was deeply immersed in thinking about Mrgāvati, did not attend to the conversation of Tilottamā, who getting angry cursed him thus:—“May you be separated for fourteen years from the person whose thought has prevented you from attending to what I have been telling you.” The king married Mrgāvati. She became pregnant. One day she told the king about her desire to dip in a pond of blood. The king got a pond ready, filled with the juice of Lākṣā (a kind of wax, the boiled water of which will look like blood) and such other things. Mrgāvati began to dip and splash in the pond of blood. When she was dipping under the juice, taking her to be a large piece of flesh, an eagle took her from the pond and flew away. The king was overwhelmed with grief and fell down. Then the charioteer came down from heaven and informed the king of the curse of Tilottamā, and then he returned.

The eagle left Mrgāvati in the mount of the Rising Sun and flew away. She cried aloud. A huge snake nearly her to swallow her. Then a divine person appeared there and saved her from the snake and vanished. Then a hermit-boy came there and asked the lonely woman, clad in only one garment, about her story and took her to the hermitage of the hermit Jamadagni who blessed her. After some days she gave birth to a son. At that time an unknown voice was heard saying “This boy would become the most renowned king Udayana and his son would become the supreme Lord of the Vidyadhāras.” Because he was born in the Udayādhi (the mount of the Rising Sun) he got the name Udayana. The boy Udayana grew up in the hermitage.

3) Udayana to his father. The hermit Jamadagni who knew the past, present and the future performed all the rituals, necessary for a boy of Krishna caste (kingly race) such as Cauila, Upayana etc. and gave him education in every branch of knowledge. Because of her love and regard for her son, Mrgāvati put on his arm a bangle with the name Sahasrānīka inscribed in it, which she had been wearing so long. One day, while Udayana was walking through the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. He felt sorry for the snake. So he gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and set the snake free. When the snake-charmer was gone, the snake told Udayana its story. That serpent was Vasunemi, the elder brother of Vāsuki. Out of gratitude the serpent gave Udayana the famous Lute Ghoṣavatī and betels and taught him the art of making garlands and marks on the forehead which would never fade. The snake-charmer took the bangle to the capital for sale. Seeing the name of the king inscribed on it, the king’s men took him before the king. He told the king everything. The king who had been suffering for the last fourteen years form the pangs of separation, started for the mount of the Rising Sun, without any loss of time. The hermit Jamadagni gave him his wife Mrgāvati and son Udayana. They all returned to Kauśāmibi.

4) The anointment of Udayana. Sahasrānīka anointed his son Udayana as the heir to his throne, and appointed Yaugandharāyaṇa, Ramanvān and Vasantaka, the son... of three ministers, as ministers of Udayana. At the time of the anointment there was a shower of flowers from the sky and an unknown voice said "With the help of these ministers Udayana would bring the whole of the earth under his control." After a time Sahasränkika went to the Himalayas with his wife for penance.

5) Vasavadatta became Udayana's wife. A daughter was born to the king of Ujjayini. Her name was Vasavadatta. Her father Candamahasena decided to give her in marriage to Udayana the king of Vatsa. How to bring this to pass? Candamahasena and Udayana had been enemies. Finally he found out a way. It was to entrust Vasavadatta to Udayana (who was a great teacher of music) for teaching her music. Ultimately he would fall in love with her and thus Udayana would become his son-in-law. This was the plan.

King Candamahasena sent a messenger to Kaushambi. The messenger was sent back with a reply that, if his daughter was sent to Kaushambi, he would teach her music. Candamahasena did not like this, so he decided to take Udayana a prisoner somehow or other. The king had an elephant called Nađāgarī. He ordered for an artificial elephant to be made equal in size to Nađāgarī, and placed some soldiers inside the elephant. The artificial elephant with soldiers inside it was taken to the great forest in the Vindhya mountain and placed there. The men of Udayana saw this elephant and reported it to the king. Udayana decided to see the huge elephant which had appeared in the Vindhya. Udayana went to the forest and saw the huge elephant standing at a distance. The king found out a plan to catch it. Playing mild notes on his lute, the king alone near the elephant. As the night was drawing and as he was immersed in music, he did not understand that it was an artificial elephant. As the king was nearing the elephant it went on retreating, and thus got the king away from his men. Then the soldiers got out of the elephant, surrounded the king and took him a prisoner. Thus Udayana began to live in the palace of Candamahasena. His work was to teach Vasavadatta music.

The news reached Kaushambi. Yaugandharāyaṇa entrusted the affairs of the government to Rumanvān and started for Ujjayini with Vasantaka. At Ujjayini they got Yogēśvara, a Brahmarāksasa as friend. According to his advice Yaugandharāyaṇa took the guise of a mad old man. Vasantaka adopted the guise of a sick man, suffering from pain in the stomach an uncouth figure to look at. They entered the city. The madness of Yaugandharāyaṇa was an entertainment to the people. The ladies of the court liked him much. Vasavadatta invited the madman to the harem. Udayana instantly recognized the mad man. Vasantaka also got admittance to the palace. He told Vasavadatta the story of Lohajaṅgha in an interesting way. (See under Lohajaṅgha) Vasavadatta began to be drawn more and more towards Udayana. She seemed to have forgotten even about the fact that her father was an enemy of Udayana, who had been thinking seriously of means of escape from the palace. Vasavadatta agreed to accompany him. Aśādhaka got Bhadravati, the elephant of Vasavadatta, ready for the flight. In the night Udayana and his retinue got on the elephant Bhadravati and fled from the palace. Kāñcanamālā the maid of Vasavadatta also accompanied her mistress. When they had passed the Vindhya mountain the elephant Bhadravati fell dead. When they all were standing around the dead elephant sadly, they heard an ethereal voice saying, "Oh King! I am a Vidyādhara woman called Māyāvati. I had been an elephant for so long. The son you are going to get, will also be helped by me. Your wife Vasavadatta also, is a goddess born as a woman purposely." Next day, all reached the palace of Udayana and the marriage of Udayana and Vasavadatta took place shortly. Candamahasena recognized that marriage.

6) Udayana's marriage with Padmavati. Udayana spent his days with Vasavadatta in the harem. The ministers Yaugandharāyaṇa, Rumanvān, Vasantaka and others thought that the behaviour of the King was detrimental to the well-being of the country. They wanted to remove the King from the palace for a little while and to form an alliance with the powerful King of Magadha. By a marriage alliance all these could be achieved. The King of Magadha had a beautiful daughter called Padmavati. The ministers began to work with this end in view.

Once Yaugandharāyaṇa took Udayana to the forest of Lāvāṇaka and stayed there. It was reported to the King of Magadha that the King of Vatsa was drawing near to his kingdom. Fearing an attack from Udayana, the King of Magadha began to think of concluding a treaty with Vatsa. The King of Vatsa used to go for hunting everyday. One day he went to a distant place for hunting, and the minister went to the house of Vasavadatta and informed her of their plans. Though it was not at all palatable to her, she gave her consent and agreed to help them as it was meant for the well-being of the King and the country. Accordingly, Yaugandharāyaṇa took the guise of an old Brahmin, Vasavadatta that of a young Brahmin lady and Vasanțaka that of a Brahmin celibate with only one eye. They went to the kingdom of Magadha. Rumanvān set fire to the house of Vasavadatta and spread the rumour that Vasavadatta and Vasantaka had been burnt to death. Yaugandharāyaṇa, Vasavadatta and Vasantaka reached Magadha. They got into the capital and saw Padmavati sitting in the garden. The old Brahmin conversed with the princess for a while. She enquired about the young woman who was with him. The old Brahmin replied thus:—"She is my daughter Avantikā. Her husband has left the country. I request you to keep her with you till I find him out and bring him here. She may not like to be separated from her people. So let her brother, the celibate, also be here with her."

Padmavati took them with gladness and Yaugandharāyaṇa, bidding farewell, returned to the forest Lāvāṇaka. Avantikā and the Celibate lived in the palace with Padmavati. Vasavadatta who had learned from Udayana the art of making garlands ans marks on the forehead which would not fade, had prepared them for Padmavati.

The King of Vatsa returned to the forest Lāvāṇaka and found the house of his wife burnt down to ashes. He fell unconscious when he heard that Vasavadatta and Vasantaka had been burnt to death.

The spies of the King of Magadha who were in the forest of Lāvāṇaka, reported the rumour about the death of Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka to their King in Magadhā, who wished to give his daughter Padmāvatī in marriage to Udayana. The marriage proposal was accepted by Udayana and wearing garlands and marks that would not fade Padmāvatī entered the wedding dais. Udayana married Padmāvatī. Yaugandharayāna made the King of Magadhā take an oath that he would go for no more aggression. Udayana and his people reached Kauśāmbi. On the way the King happened to see the mark on the forehead and the garland on the neck of Padmāvatī and asked her who had made them. Padmāvatī told the King the story of Avantikā. Udayana was definite that Avantikā was Vāsavadattā herself. Avantikā was brought before the King. Padmāvatī congratulated Vāsavadattā. Both of them loved each other and lived together as the loving wives of Udayana. (Kathaśaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka).

7) Udayana gets a new throne. Once Udayana was sitting in the court-hall, when a Brahmin came there and made a complaint to the King that some cowards had broken the legs of his son. The Brahmin said that a boy named Devasena sat on a stone in the forest and instantly he got kingly power. The leg of the Brahmin boy was broken by the friends of Devasena because he did not bow before Devasena. When he heard the story, the minister Yaugandharaya said that that place must have some peculiarities. Accordingly the men of the King dug the place. He got a throne of gems. (Kathaśaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka).

8) The son of Udayana. Vāsavadattā became pregnant and gave birth to a child. He was named Naravāhanadatta. Nārada granted him a boon that Naravāhanadatta would become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. (See under Naravāhanadatta).

The princess of Taksāsilā named Kalisinganā fell in love with Udayana and she came to Kauśāmbi. But no marriage took place. (See under Kalisinganā). Naravāhanadatta, the son of Udayana, married Madana-maṇicukā who was the incarnation of Ratī Devī (the wife of Madana). Udayana entrusted the country to his son and led a life of retirement with his wives. (Kathaśaritsāgara).

UDDĀLAKA I. A disciple called Aruni of the teacher Ayodhadaumya. To know how Aruni got the name Uddālaka, see under Ayodhadaumya.

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12 that this hermit Uddālaka was a prominent figure in the Durbar of Indra. Uddālaka had a son called Svētaketu and a daughter called Sūjātā. He gave his daughter Sūjātā in marriage to his favourite disciple Kahojaṇ. The hermit Aṣṭāvakra was their son. See under Aṣṭāvakra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 132).

Once Uddālaka caused the river Sarasvatī to appear at the place of sacrifice. From that day onwards Sarasvatī got the name ‘Manorāma’ because when the thought came to his mind (manas) the river made its appearance. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 33). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śantī Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 10, that Uddālaka expelled his son Svētaketu from the house because the son was a hater of Brahmins.

UDDĀLAKA II. The story of another hermit of the name Uddālaka is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva. Chapter 71. This hermit is known as Uddālaki also. Once this hermit happened to forget that he had left flowers, food and his waterpot on the bank of the river and reaching his hermitage, he asked his son Nāciketa to fetch them from the bank of the river. When Nāciketa reached the bank of the river, those things had been washed down by the current. The son returned and reported the matter to his father. The father got angry and cursed his son to death. Seeing the son lying dead on darbha (mattress made of darbha grass) the hermit cried aloud. In that flow of tears life returned to the body and the son woke up as if from sleep. The father asked the son about the news of the realm of Yama (the god of death) and the son told the hermit the world of the dead.

UDDANĀDASĀSTRI. One of the eighteen and a half famous poets of Kerala. He was a Sanskrit poet. His native place was Lāṭapura on the bank of river Pāḷār in Toṇḍaṅgamaṇḍala in the Tamilnad. The name of his father was Śrī Kṛṣṇa and that of his mother was Raṅgadevi. Poet Ulloor says that Śaṅkari had another name Irugupanāthā. He had a very good education. After having completed his education, he travelled through Andhra, Kauṭāka, Kalinga, Gola, Kerala and many other countries and finally came to Kozhikode and visited the King Mānakivaramahārāja. At the instance of the king he composed the drama called Maḷḷikāmārutam. Besides this we have obtained only the ‘Kokilasandesā’ and some other single poems of Śaṅkari. It is said that there is a thesis on dramas also. Śaṅkari was not in the habit of respecting those who did not pay respect to him, however superior they might be. Some say that he was arrogant. A Malayāla Brahmin called Bhaṭṭāṭri of Kakkaseri, rose against Śaṅkari in Kerala.

UDDHAVA

(1) General information. A Yādava. He was a friend and minister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 18, mention is made that Uddhava was present on the occasion of the Svayaḥvara (marriage) of Draupadi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 11, that at a famous celebration held in the mountain of Raivata, Uddhava was present. (See under Subhadrā).

Uddhava was a disciple of Brhaspati, and a man of great intelligence. It was this Uddhava who brought the dowry of Subhadrā to Indraprastha, when Arjuna married her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 30).

Once a king named Śālva besieged the city of Dvārakā. At that time Uddhava saved Dvārakā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Stanza 9).

2) The message carried by Uddhava. Karṣṇa sent Akṛūra to Amṛādi, and brought Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Karṣṇa and made Ugrasena king, and stayed in the city of Mathurā for a time. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Uddhava to Amṛādi to know about the well-being of the people there. The moment Uddhava entered Amṛādi, the Gopas and good women, (cow-herds) Yaśodā and Nandagopa, all surrounded him to hear about Śrī Kṛṣṇa. They felt much pleased at knowing that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was getting on well. They sent through him many presents to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He got all those presents into his chariot and took them to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Mathurā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) The end. Śrī Kṛṣṇa informed Uddhava beforehand the fact that the Yādava dynasty was going to end. Uddhava felt grief and requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa to take him also to Vaikunṭha (the abode of Mahāvīśu). Śrī Kṛṣṇa taught Uddhava the doctrine that the body of man and such other things seen in the whole universe were nothing but mere delusion. At that time Uddhava asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa twentyone questions about Bandha and Mokṣa (Bondage and deliverance). To all these questions Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave him satisfactory answers. (Bhāgavata Skandha 11).

Before the destruction of Dvārakā, the Yadus left the city. They went to Prabhāsārthīra, a place on the sea coast and lived there. Uddhava who knew that the destruction was imminent, bade farewell to them and walked away alone. He was filled with a brightness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa did not stop him. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3).

It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, Chapter 29, that Uddhava went to the hermitage of Badarikā and engaged himself in penance.

UDDĪPAKA. See under Paṇcatantra.

UDĪCAYA. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

UDRAPĀRAKA. A serpent born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 17).

UDVĀHA I. A Kṣatriya king born from the family of Krodhavāsa, an asura. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 64).

UDVĀHA II. A part of air. It is believed that air or wind is the breath of Mahāvīśu. In the Purāṇa mention is made about 49 types of Maruts or winds. Seven breaths are important among them. They arc:(1) Pravaha (2) Āvaha (3) Udvaha (4) Samvaha (5) Vivaha (6) Parivaha and (7) Parāvaha. About Udvaha mention is made in Bhāṣa Bhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 329 thus:

"Which is the wind that takes water from the four oceans and gives it to the clouds? That ever-blowing great wind is Udvaha."

UDYOGRAPARĀVA. A subsection of Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

UGRA I. A military captain of Śūrapadmāśura, Chief of asuras. In the Viramahendra Kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa, two warriors, Ugra and Maṇḍūra are reported to have attacked Indrapuri.

UGRA II. One of the sons of Dhrtrāṣṭra. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103). Bhīmasena killed him (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verses 34, 35).

UGRA III. A Yādava prince. The Pāṇḍavas sent to him also an invitation letter to help them in the war. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

UGRA IV. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 100).

UGRA V. Son of Kavi, the Prajāpati. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 133).

UGRA VI. See under Vṛṣṇi.

UGRADAMŚTRĪ. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Merudevi had nine daughters, Meru, Pratīrūpā, Ugradamśtrī Lata, Ramyā, Śyāmā, Nāri, Bhadrā and Devāvīthi. They were wedded by the sons of a king named Agni-dhra. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

UGRAKA. A serpent. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

UGRAKARMĀ I. King of Sālva. Bhīmasena killed him. (M. B. Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 41).

UGRAKARMĀ II. Military Chief of the Kekaya prince, Viśoka. Karna killed him. (M. B. Karna Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 4, 5).

UGRARAVAS. A muni. He killed one Duspya (Setumāhāmya). Duspya was the last son of a merchant in Pāṭaliputra. He killed many children for sport and his father sent him away. He went to the forest and there drowned to death a muni called Ugaravas, who was engaged in tapas. Ugaravas cursed him to death by drowning and his soul to wander about as a devil. The curse came true. (Setumāhāmya).

UGRASENA I. King Ugrasena, father of Kaṁśa.

2) Ugrasena became king. Ugrasena became king of Mathurā. His Kingship was not a hereditary acquisition. There is a story behind it. In olden days, in the plateau of Kālindī there was a famous place called Madhuvana. The place was called so because it was the abode of an asura named Madhu. Madhu had a son, Lavaṇa. Śatrughna killed him as he was a very troublesome fellow and a thorn on the side of the Devas. Śatrughna then established a beautiful kingdom there and ruled it. He named it Mathurā. After the death of Śatrughna his two sons ruled Mathurā. Then, when the Solar dynasty came to its end, Mathurā came under the Yādavas. A Yādava king called Śūrasena ruled over the kingdom. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Śūrasena. After the death of his father Vasudeva took up the profession of herding cows, and therefore Ugrasena, another king of the Yādava dynasty had to become king of Mathurā. (Devi Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

3) Ugrasena and Kaṁśa. There is a common belief that Kaṁśa was the son of Ugrasena. But, the Bhāgavata relates the following to the effect that Kaṁśa was born to a Gandharva called Dramila of Ugrasena’s wife. When once Ugrasena’s wife was in her monthly periods, she walked in the forest with her companions. A Gandharva called Dramila saw her then, felt attracted by her and made her pregnant. Angered at this, she cursed Dramila thus: “Since you have procreated a son in me, while I am in my periods this son will be killed by a boy born in my husband’s family.” Kaṁśa was the son born to her in the above manner. Kaṁśa ascended the throne after putting Ugrasena in prison. According to the curse of Ugrasena’s wife, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born in Ugrasena’s family and he killed Kaṁśa. Nārada had informed Kaṁśa of the Dramila interlude. Kaṁśa told this story secretly to Akṛṣa when the latter was deputed by him to invite Kṛṣṇa to the dhanur yajña. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

The name Ahuka. Genealogy states that Ugrasena was the son of Ahuka. But, in certain contexts Ugrasena is called Ahuka also. “Afterwards we made Ahuka-Ugrasena King......” (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 39).
5) Ugrasena imprisoned. Vasudeva, father of Sṛi Kṛṣṇa was Ugrasena's minister. Kaṁsa, when he attained majority imprisoned Ugrasena and became himself king. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 22).

6) Ugrasena regained kingdom. Sṛi Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa with the permission of Ugrasena and made him king again. During the reign of Ugrasena, Jarāsandha and Śalva attacked Mathurāpurī. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

7) Ugrasena and the iron rod. While Ugrasena was ruling the Kingdom, the sages Viśvāmitra, Nārada and Kaṭṭha once came to Dvārakā. To insult the sages, the Yādavas brought before them, Sāmba dressed as a pregnant woman. The Yādavas told the sages that she was Bahubhī's wife, and wanted to be told whether the child she delivered would be male or female. The sages understood their evil mentality, and prophesied that Sāmba would deliver an iron rod fierce enough to annihilate the whole Yādava race. According to the prophecy the next day Sāmba delivered an iron rod. The Yādavas impared the news to Ugrasena, who got the iron rod reduced to powder and deposited the powder in the sea. He also enforced prohibition of liquor in the country. (To know how the powder of the rod ruined the Yādava dynasty see under Kṛṣṇa). (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 1).

8) After death. After his death, Ugrasena joined the Viśvedevas. Bhūrīśrasas, Sala, Bhūri, Kaṁsa-Ugrasena, Vasudeva, Uttaraka with his brother Saṅkha—these kings (after death) joined the company of Viśvedevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 16, 17).

Ugrasena II. A brother of King Janamejaya. He, along with his two brothers thrashed the son of Saramā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 1 and 2).

Ugrasena III. Son of Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 52). He was also present to witness the fight between Arjuna and Krāpācārya at the Virāṭa city. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verses 11 and 12).

Ugrasena IV. A king who was Svarbhānu, the asura, reborn. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 12 and 13).

Ugrasena V. A son of Dhiṭarāṣṭra. He is also called Citrasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100). This Ugrasena was killed by Bhūma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137).

Ugrasena VI. Son of Parīkṣit, king of the Lunar dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 52-54).

Ugraśravas I. Son of Muni Lomaharṣa. He is the Sūta who told Purānic stories to the munis at Naimiśa- ranya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 1).

Ugraśravas II. A son of Dhiṭarāṣṭra. Bhūmasena killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100, and Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19).

Ugraśravas III. Husband of Śilavatī. (See under Atri, Para 7).

Ugratapas. Son of Sutapas, a muni of the Bhṛgu dynasty. Once he concentrated his mind and thoughts on Śrī Kṛṣṇa immersed in love of the Gopīs with the result that he was born as daughter of Sunandī, the Gopī in Anuśādi, and served Kṛṣṇa. (Padma Purāṇa).

Ugratejas I. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M.B. Anuśā- sana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).

Ugratejas II. A serpent. It welcomed Balabhadrā- rāma once. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

Ugratirtha. A Kṣatriya king, who was Krodhavāsa, the asura, reborn. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 65).

Ugrāyudha I. A son of Dhiṭarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99). He was present at the wedding of Pāṇcāli. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185).

Ugrāyudha II. A Pāṇcāli king and partisan of the Pāṇḍavas. Karna wounded him in war. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).

Ugrāyudha III. A powerful person, who fought on the Kaurava side. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 37).

Ugrāyudha IV. An emperor killed by Bhīṣma. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

Ugrodha. A king of the lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

Ujjaya. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were Brahmadeums. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

Ujjānaka. The Āśrama of Ārṣṭiṣeṣamaharsī was situated near Mount Gandhamadana in front of Mānasā lake. Ujjānaka was a lake near the āśrama. A dip in the waters of the lake, it was believed, would wash off all sins. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 35).

Ujjaḍālaka. A desert near the āśrama of Uttānaka Munich. Dhundhu, offspring of the asuras, Madhu and Kaṭṭabha, lived in this desert. (See under Dhundhu).

Ujjayantaparvata. A mountain near the Pindāraka temple in Saurāstra. It is believed to possess wonderful siddhis. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 21).

Ujjayini. One of the seven very sacred places in ancient India. Its ancient name was Avantī. The seven sacred cities are: Ayodhya, Mathurā, Māya, Kāśī, Kāncī, Avantīkā, and Dvāravatī. The famous Mahākāla temple described by Kālidāsa was on the banks of the river Siṃhā flowing through Ujjayinī. Jyotirlinga of Śiva is the presiding deity in the temple. There is also a holy bathing ghat called Koṭiṭirtha here. A bath in it is as beneficial as an Āśvamedha yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

Uktha. Agni, the father of Parāvṛti. This agni is saluted with three kinds of Uktha hymns. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 25).

Uktha (M). A particular portion of Sāmadeva.

Ulūka I. The son of Śakuni. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57, Stanzas 25). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 182, Stanzas 22, that Ulūka was present at the Svayamīvara (the Bride choosing a husband) of Draupadī. In the Bhārata Battle Ulūka was sent as a messenger to the camp of the Pāṇḍavas by Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161). After that he returned to Duryodhana with the message of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 163). He combated with the King of Cedi on the first day of the battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45). After that Sahadeva attacked Ulūka. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 72, Stanzas 5). Arjuna defeated Ulūka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 171, Stanzas 40). After the death of the teacher Droṇa, Ulūka fled from the battle-field. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Stanzas 14). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 9 to 11, that Ulūka defeated Yuyutsu. Next fight was between Sahadeva and Ulūka in which Sahadeva killed Ulūka. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 28, Stanzas 32 and 33). The following are the synonyms of Ulūka, given in the Mahābhārata:—Sākuni, Kaitaka, Saubalyasuta and Kaitavya.

ULŪKA II. A Yakṣa (a demi-god). It was stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, that Garuḍa and this Yakṣa fought with each other.

ULŪKA III. A son of Viśvāmitra. He became a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 51). It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11, that this Ulūka visited Bhiṣma on his Bed of arrows.

ULŪKADŪTĀGAMAṆAPARVA. A sub-section of a Parva in the Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

ULŪKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 26).

ULŪPī. Wife of Arjuna.
1) How she became the wife of Arjuna. Once Arjuna happened to enter the palace in which Dharmaputra was living with Pāṇīcāli. As a result, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for a year. (See under Irāvān). Arjuna reached Gaṅgāvdāra. When he got down into the river Gaṅgā, he saw Ulūpī the daughter of Nāgarāja (King of the serpents). He asked her a few questions. She told him thus:—“I am the daughter of the serpent Kauravya of the family of Airāvata. I came to bathe in the river and when I saw you I grew amorous.” Arjuna told her that Dharmaputra had imposed on him celibacy for twelve months and that it was not right to marry in the meantime. Ulūpī argued with Arjuna and convinced him that it was not wrong to marry her. Arjuna married her. A son named Irāvān was born to her.

2) How Ulūpī caused Arjuna to be killed and how he was brought to life again. (See paras 28 and 29 under Arjuna).

3) The end of Ulūpī. After having brought Arjuna back to life, Ulūpī reached Hastināpura with Bahūrvāhana and Cirtāṅgadā. (M.B. Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 87). As soon as she reached there she greeted Kuntī, Draupadi and Subhadra. She gave them various kinds of presents. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter I, Stanza 23 that Ulūpī served Gandhārī at one time. In Mahābhārata, Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 46 it is mentioned that Ulūpī was greatly loved by the subjects. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the ‘great departure’ (Mahāprāsthaṇā) Ulūpī entered the River Ganges. Cirtāṅgadā went to Maṇḍūrapura.

“Ulūpī, the daughter of the serpent Kauravya, jumped into the Ganges and to Maṇḍūrapura, went Cirtāṅgadā.” (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Mahāprāsthaṇika Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 27).

4) The other names of Ulūpī. Bhujagātmajā, Bhujagendra-kanyākā, Bhujagottamā, Kauravī, Kauravyadūhitā, Kauravyakulanandini, Pannagāndini, Pannagasūtā, Pannagātmajā, Pannagēśvarakanyā, Pannagi, Uragātmajā. These are the synonyms used in the Mahābhārata for Ulūpī.

ULŪTA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

UMĀ. Pārvaṭī. (For details see under Pārvaṭī).

UMLOCĀ. A celestial woman. Umlocā with other celestial women participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65).

UNČHAVRĪTTI. A brahmin. His story is told as follows in Jāmīni Āsvamedha Parva.
This poor brahmin who lived by begging got one day some food grain powder. After offering a portion of it to Agni and Brahmīns, he divided the balance equally between the children. Then he sat down to take his own food when Dharmadeva, disguised as a brahmin, appeared and demanded food. Uṇčhavṛtti gave all his food to the guest. Since that did not satisfy the guest, the sons also gave their shares of the food to him. Greatly pleased at the noble act of Uṇčhavṛtti, Dharmadeva took the brahmin family with him to Svargaloka. One day a few particles of the food grain powder which remained with the brahmin fell on the earth. A mongoose came and played on that ground. That part of his body which got smeared with the food grain powder became golden in colour. Though the mongoose went to the yajña ground of Dharmadeva and repeated the above process there, the remaining portion of its body did not become golden.

UNDRA (M) (UTRAM). A place in South India. Sahadeva subjugated this place. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 71). People of Undram were present at the Rājaśūya of Yudhiṣṭhira with presents. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 22).

UNMĀDĀ. A celestial woman.
1) Became a woman by the curse of Urvaśī. Harīsa, the King of Gandharvas (semi-gods) had a general of the army called Durmada. He was a danger. He had an eye on Urvaśī. She was the wife of Purūravas a famous King. On several occasions Durmada followed Urvaśī, with lustful desire. He had expressed his amour for her on several occasions. But Urvaśī did not pay any heed to his words.

One day Purūravas and Urvaśī were present in the durbar of Indra. Purūravas and Urvaśī had signalled a rendezvous for that night at the corner of the Nandana Park. Durmada understood this. He called a celestial woman named Unmādā to his side. They made a plan and accordingly Unmādā disguised herself as Urvaśī and Durmada took the guise of Purūravas and both of them entered Nandana park. Purūravas went to Unmādā and conjugated with her. In the same way Urvaśī received Durmada, mistaking him for Purūravas. After the conjugation Durmada laughed loud as if he had played a trick on Urvaśī. Urvaśī understood everything. Purūravas also arrived there. Urvaśī cursed Durmada to take birth in the earth as a Rākṣasa and cursed Unmādā to be born in the earth as the daughter of a King and she said that at that time she would love one man and become the wife of another man. The aggrieved Durmada and Unmādā prayed for liberation from the curse. Urvaśī gave them liberation thus:—“This Durmada will be born as the son of Unmādā. Seeing the death of her husband and son, she would jump into fire. After that she will enter heaven. Durmada will be killed by the sword of an enemy and will obtain heaven.” According to this curse Durmada was born as the son of Dirghāñjīga, the emperor of Hiraṇyapura, under the name Pingākṣa and Unmādā. was born as the daughter of the King of Videha. Her name was Hariṇī (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) The marriage and death of Hariṇī. Hariṇī grew up to be a young woman. Once Piṅgākṣa, growing lustful, took Hariṇī and went through the sky. She cried aloud for a long time. Piṅgākṣa, the asura, left her in a wild forest. At that time a King named Vasumanas came by that way hunting. He killed Piṅgākṣa and then having heard the story of Hariṇī got her on the horse called Jīmūta and sent her to Vidisha (Mithilā). Her father was much pleased at getting her back. He wanted to give her in marriage to Vasumanas. The date of the marriage was fixed. Invitations were sent to many Kings. Among them there was a King named Bhadrāśreṇya, who took her by force and went away. There was a fierce battle between the two Kings, Bhadrāśreṇya and Vasumanas and Vasumanas was defeated. Seeing this Divodāsa, the King of Kāśi, attacked Bhadrāśreṇya. Though Divodāsa defeated Bhadrāśreṇya, he did not like to harm the beaten King. So he returned to his kingdom. Bhadrāśreṇya took Hariṇī to his palace and married her. A son was born to her and he was named Durmada. This was the same Durmada who had taken birth and died as Piṅgākṣa and who had been born again as the son of Hariṇī. This Durmada took by force the daughter of his uncle called Citrāngī and a child was born to them. Bhadrāśreṇya again engaged in a battle with Divodāsa, the King of Kāśi, and was defeated. Then his son Durmada got into the battlefield and he also was defeated.

When all this news reached Vasumanas, the King of Ayodhyā, he became jealous of Bhadrāśreṇya. A battle was fought between them in which Vasumanas was defeated. But a fierce battle was fought again in which Bhadrāśreṇya and his son Durmada were killed. Durmada obtained heaven. Stricken with grief at the death of her husband and son, Hariṇī got into fire and went to heaven. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

UNMĀDINĪ. A beautiful woman. She was the daughter of a Vaiśya in the city of Śravasti. He went to the King Devaśena and requested him to marry his daughter. Because of the interference of his favourites, the King did not marry her. The King’s general married her. Once the King happened to see her by chance. When he saw how beautiful she was, he felt sorry that he did not marry her. From that day onwards the King grew morbidly torpid and finally died.

This story was told by Yaugandharāyaṇa, minister of Udavyāna, the King of Vatsa. (Kathāsārītīgara, Līvānākālamabaka; Tārāṅga 1).

UNMĀTHA I. Yama (Kāla) presented Skandadeva with two attendants. One was Unmātha and the other the Pramātha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 30).

UNMĀTHA II. An attendant presented to Skandadeva by Pārvatī. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 51).

UNMATTĀ. A warrior of a class of Rākṣasas (giants). In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10, it is mentioned that this warrior died in the battle between Rāma and Rāvāpa. Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā—Heti—Viḍyutkeṣa—Sukeṣa—Mālyavān—Unmattā. Viḍyutkeṣa was born to Heti, the son of Brahmā by his wife Bhayā; Sukeṣa was born to Viḍyutkeṣa by his wife Sālakaṭaṅkā and Māli, Sumāli and Mālyavān were born to Sukeṣa of his wife Devavati, and to Mālyavān by his wife Sundari, seven sons named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpaṅka, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñiakoṣa, Matta and Unmattā and a daughter named Nālā were born. Prahaṣa, Akampaṇa, Viṇāṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrāṅka, and some more Rākṣasas were the sons of Sumāli, brother of Mālyavān. Kaṅkṣi, the mother of Rāvāna, was the sister of Prahaṣa.

UNMUCA. A hermit of south Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 28.

UPABARHAṆA. See the 2nd para under Nārada.

UPACĀRA (Hospitality). They are sixteen in number. (Things to be offered to the guest). They are called Śoḍaśopacāras. They are given below:—(1) Āsana (seat) (2) Pāḍya (water to wash feet) (3) Ārghya (water to drink) (4) Snāṇīya (bath) (5) Anulepana (ashes or other fragrant things for besmearing) (6) Dhūpa (smoke) (7) Dīpa (light) (8) Naivedya (food) (9) Tāmbūta (Betel) (10) Śtālajala (cool drinks) (11) Vasana (clothing) (12) Bhūṣaṇa (ornaments) (13) Mālya (garland) (14) Gandha (sweet-smelling things) (15) Ācamaniyaka (water to rinse mouth) (16) Sutalpa (Good bed).

These are the sixteen offers that we have to give to our guests.

UPACITRA. A son of Dhrūrāṣṭra. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 95). In the Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136 Stanza 22 it is mentioned that he was killed by Bhimasena.

UPADEVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty.

UPAGĀHĀ. A son of Viṣṇumitrā. He was a Brahmacāda. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 56).

UPAGIRI. A hilly place in North Bhārata. (M.B. Saṭhī Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 3).

UPAGUPTA. A King of the Candravānīs (Lunar dynasty). (See under Genealogy).

UPAJĀLA. A river. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 31, it is mentioned that by bathing in this river the King Uṣīmara got power and position higher than that of Īndra.

UPAKIČAKAS. Kiṭaka, the brother-in-law of King Vīraṭa, had one hundred and five brothers. They are called Upakīcakas. Kiṭaka and the Upakīcakas were born of a portion of Kālakeya an asura. At the palace of Vīraṭa, Kiṭaka harassed Pāṇcālī and was killed in the night by Bhīma. (See under Kiṭaka). Hearing about the death of Kiṭaka, the hundred and five Upakīcakas came there and decided to burn Pāṇcālī also, because they thought she was the cause of the death of their elder brother. They bound and carried her to the cremation ground. Hearing her loud cry, Bhīma jumped over the wall and ran to the cremation ground. He uprooted a tree, killed all the hundred and five Upakīcakas and brought Pāṇcālī to the palace. (M.B. Vīraṭa Parva, Chapter 23).

UPAKOṢĀ. The daughter of the teacher Upavarsa. (See under Vararuci).

UPAKOSALA. See under Satyakāma.

UPAKRŚNAKA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

UPAMANYU I. A dutiful disciple of the teacher Ayodhadhaunya. This teacher had three disciples of prominence. They were Āruṇī, Upamanyu and Veda,
To know how Upamanyu was put to test by the teacher see under Ayodhadhaumya.

UPAMANYU II. In the Kṛtyaṇḍa, there lived a hermit named Vyaṭghrapāda who had two sons. They were called Upamanyu and Dhauny. Some learned men are of opinion that Upamanyu the son of Vyaṭghrapāda and Upamanyu the disciple of Ayodhadhaumya, were one and the same. Once Upamanyu visited another hermitage along with his father. He happened to drink the milk of the cow there. After that they returned to their own hermitage, Upamanyu went to his mother and asked her to make milk pudding for him. But the mother felt very sorry because there was no milk. At last she mixed flour in water and made pudding and gave it to him. Upamanyu did not accept it. His mother told him that there was no way to get milk and that men could get wealth, crops etc. only by the grace of Śiva. Upamanyu who was of a wilful nature did penance with meditation and contemplation on Śiva. Finally Śiva appeared before him in the shape of Indra and told him to ask for his boon. Upamanyu boldly replied that he wanted no boon from anybody else except Śiva. Śiva made his appearance in his own form and made Upamanyu a deva (God).

Upamanyu said all these things when he talked with Śri Krṣṇa. (M.B. Anuṣṭhāna Parva, Chapter 14).

In the Book "Our hermits", written by Rāmasvāmi Śāstri in Tamil, it is mentioned that Upamanyu had written a book "Śiva bhaktavilāsa" in which biographies of devotees of Śiva of great attainments are given.

UPAMANYU III. In the Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa we come across another Upamanyu as the son of a hermit named Sutapas. Upamanyu reached the hermitage of Kaśyapa, with the idea of marrying Sumati, the daughter of Kaśyapa and the elder sister of Garuḍa. Nobody liked the idea of giving Sumati in marriage to that old man. The hermit got angry at this and cursed Kaśyapa that if he gave his daughter in marriage to any hermit his head would break into a hundred pieces. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

UPANANDA II. A serpent. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

UPANANDA III. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

UPANIṢAD. The four Vedas are Ṛk, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Each of these four has a Brāhmaṇa (a treatise relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Next come the Āraṇyakas (forest texts—writings meant for the forest-dwelling hermit) as appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Then come the Upaniṣads as appendices to the Āraṇyakas. These four classes of literary works (the Vedas, the Brāhmaṇas, the Āraṇyakas and the Upaniṣads) constitute the Vedic literature proper. The Āraṇyakas and the Upaniṣads are inseparably connected with each other. The Upaniṣads are called Vedāntas (the end of the Vedas). The bulk of these Vedāntas belong to different periods anterior to the Later Vedic Period. The students begin the study of Upaniṣads only after having completed the study of the Mantras (Vedic hymns) and the Brāhmaṇas (the ritual).

The meaning of the word 'Upaniṣad' is that which is most near. Ṛpa = near, ni = most, sad = exist, (or sit). The Upaniṣads can be called the Jñānākāṇḍa of the Vedas. They describe the nature of Brahm. The figure of the supreme Spirit (Brahman) exists in the Upaniṣads. Apparently the Upaniṣads are explanations of the mantras, but they are concerned more with the allegorical significations and the mystic meanings of the tattvas or essence, of the origin of life, the world, the soul, God etc. The Upaniṣads are the basis of the Śaḍ-darśanas, the six systems of philosophy.

There are a large number of Upaniṣads. The most important among them are 108 in number.

UPAFĀTAKA (UPAPĀPA) (Minor sins). In accordance with the Rāṣṭramāṁsā (political philosophy) of Ancient India, crimes were divided into two types. They were called Upapātakas (minor crimes) and Pātakas (major crimes). To know about major crimes (Pātakas) see under Pāpa (sin). Upapātakas are given below:—Cow-slaughter; sacrificing by one who is unworthy to perform it; seducing another man's wife; forsaking one's father, mother and teacher; forsaking self-study, agni (fire) and son; becoming Parivettā (one who gets married before one's elder brother is married.) Younger brother finishing education before the elder; giving an unmarried girl to Parivitti or Parivettā; performing sacrifice by a parivitti or a parivettā; slandering an unmarried girl; Living on the interest of money that is lent; violating one's vow; selling pond, garden, wife or son; becoming an outcaste; forsaking relatives; Teaching the Vedas after receiving remuneration; selling things which should not be sold; working in mines; working with big machinery; destroying medicinal herbs; living by women; to impede rites; cut down fresh trees (not dried) for fire-wood; kidnapping women; mingling with slanderers of women; selfish activities; eating forbidden rice; not keeping Sacrificial fire; theft; not repaying loan; learning forbidden sciences; doing things which are bad and will cause grief to others; stealing of base metals, grains and cows; contact with drunken women; killing women, Śātra, Viśaya and Kṣatriya and becoming an infidel are all Upapātakas.

Causimg grief to a Brahmin; inhaling the smell of liquor and other prohibited things; resorting to tricks or deceit and engaging in pederasty are sins which would make one an outcaste.

Slaughter of dog, donkey, camel, lion, sheep, jungle-goat, fish, serpent and mongoose are sins of a mixed character.

Receiving money from the despicable; buying and selling; serving a śādra; telling a lie; acting so as to render oneself unworthy; killing worms and birds; eating food along with liquor; stealing fruits, flowers and bute; and becoming a coward are also sins.

UPAPLAVYA. A minor city in the country of Virāṭa. This minor city stood near the capital city of Virāṭa Kingdom. After their incognito-life, the Pāṇḍavas are said to have lived in the city of Upaplavya. (M.B Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 14).

UPAPUṆẢṆAS. See under Puṇ̄aṇa.

UPARICARAVASU.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Atri—Candra—Buddha—Puṇ̄arvas—are—Āyus—Nahaṣa
—Yayāti—Puru—Janamejaya—Praśīvāna—Praśītra
Namasyu—Vitābhaya—Śūdu—Bahuvidha—Saṁyāti
—Rahuvādi—Raudrāśva—Matiñāra—Santurodha
—Dusyantā—Bharata—Suhrotā—Suhotā—Gala

Saṁvaraṇa—Kuru—Sudhanvā—Sugotra—Cyavana-Kṛtī-Uparicaravasu.

2) How he got the name Uparicaravasu. Once Vasu built a hermitage and began to perform penance in accordance with the advice of Indra. When the penance became so severe Indra appeared and gave him an aerial chariot. Since then Vasu used to travel through air in the chariot. So he got the name ‘Uparicaravasu’ (Vasu, who travels above). (Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 63).

3) Vasu and Indra festival. Indra gave Vasu a garland (Vaijayantimāla) which would never fade, and gave a boon that, so long as he wore that garland, he would not receive any wound. He was given a bamboo stick (Veṇudanḍa) and was instructed to fix that rod on the earth and celebrate the festival of Indra, Vasu celebrated the festival of Indra and from that day onwards the festival of Indra came to be celebrated in the world. (See under Indrotsava).

4) The sons of Vasu. Five sons named Bhradratha, Kusāmba (Maṇivāhana), Mavella, Yadū and Rājanya were born to him.

5) Kicking and splitting Kolāhala. The river Śukti-mati flowed through the capital city of Vasu. Once the great hill Kolāhala grew amorous of Śuktimati and called hold of her. Uparicaravasu got angry at this and kicked the mountain which was split into two and Śuktimati flowed out of the gap. Still two children were born to the great hill by Śuktimati. The river was pleased at the freedom accorded by the king and placed the two children at the feet of the king. They grew up. The son became general of the army and the daughter Girikā became the wife of the king. (M.B.
Adī Parva Chapter 63).

6) Vasu goes hunting. One day the king decided to go to hunt. On the same day his wife had her monthly course. Still without changing his programme he started for the forest. Even after entering the forest the thought of his wife lingered in his mind. The forest was in full bloom as it was Spring. Seeing this the king grew amorous and sat under a tree. A mild breeze was blowing.
Instantly the king had seminal flow. He collected the semen in the leaf of a tree and sent it to the queen through an eagle. Thinking that to be some food, another eagle got near and a quarrel arose. The semen fell in the river Yamunā. A fish named Adrikā swallowed it. (See under Adrikā). A fisherman caught that fish. He got a male child and a female child from the stomach of the fish. That girl is the famous Satyavatī-Matsyagandhā who became the queen of Santanu. (See under Satyavatī). The fisherman gave the boy he got from the fish to king Uparicaravasu. (M.B. Adī Parva Chapter 62).

7) Other information.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 20, that Uparicaravasu was famous as a member of the council of Yama.

He was a friend of Indra, a devotee of Viṣṇu and a righteous and diligent man who loved and esteemed his father. Because of the grace of Śrī Nārāyaṇa, he secured an empire. He consecrated everything before god. Once Indra gave him half of his seat. (M.B.
Śānti Parva, Chapter 355). Because of the grace of Bhagavān (Lord), Garuḍa made him a traveller of the sky. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 37).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 38, it is mentioned that finally Uparicaravasu entered the world of Brahmā.

(iv) Once a controversy arose between Indra and the hermits, whether cow-slaughter during sacrifices, was desirable. At this time Uparicaravasu happened to come there. As he was a man of truth, he was asked to make a decision. Uparicaravasu stood on the side of Indra and gave his opinion in favour of slaughter.
The hermits who were against cow-slaughter got angry and cursed Uparicaravasu to go down to the world of Pātāla (netherworld). (Matyā Purāṇa, Chapter 152).

This story is seen with slight difference in Mahābhārata Śānti Parva, Chapters 322-324.

UPĀŚLOKA. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Saipandhri. He learned all sciences and Philosophies and finally became a follower of the Śāṅkhyā-Yoga cult. (Bhāga-vata, Skandha 10).

UPAŚRUTI. The patron-goddess of Uttarāyana (The sun’s progress towards North in the former half of the year). In Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 166 mention is made of how this goddess made it possible for Indrāni to see Indra through the holes of a stalk of lotus. It was by the help of Upaśruti that Śaçīdevi and Indra met together. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 14, Stanzas 12 and 13).

UPATYĀKĀ. A country in Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 55).

UPAVARSHA. The younger brother of the Teacher Varṣa.
He also was a teacher. For further information see under Vararuci.

UPAVĀSA. Upavāsa means going back from sin and leading a good life. (Upā = go back and Vāsa= A life). All actions which are not good, must be rein-quished. Those who observe Upavāsa should abstain from using flesh, Maṣṭāṇa (pulse), caṇaka (a kind of gram), Varaka (a kind of grain), green leaves prepared, honey, rice etc. and from contact with women. He should not wear flowers, ornaments, or fashionable dress; should not inhale fragrant smoke, and fragrance of any sort. Cleaning the teeth and using collyrium also are prohibited. Instead of cleaning the teeth in the morning Paścagavya (Milk, curd, ghee, urine and dung of cow) should be taken in. Drinking water several times, using betel leaves, sleeping in the daytime and sexual act also should be avoided. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 175).

UPAVENNA. A river. This river is considered to be the mother of Agni (fire). Some are of opinion that this river is Kṛṣṇa which is a tributary of the great river Kṛṣṇa (R.Kistna) of South India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Stanza 14).

UPAVITA. The sacred string or Utparaṇa. The twice-born (the three upper castes) wear this. When it is worn over the left shoulder and under the right arm it is called Upavita, when it is worn over the right shoulder and under the left arm it is called Pracīṇavita and if it is worn around the neck as a garland it is called Nivita. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Stanza 63).
UPĀVRṬTA (M) A country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 84).

UPAYĀ. Brother of the hermit Yāja. Both of them lived on the banks of the Gāṅgā. Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Pāncāli were born to the King Drupada of Pāncāla as the fruit of the sacrifices performed by these hermits. The story is given below:

The famous teacher Drōṇa was the son of the hermit Bharadvāj, who was a friend of the King Pṛṣata of Pāncāla. So King Pṛṣata sent his son Drupada to the hermitage of Bharadvāja for education. Thus Drōṇa and Drupada were fellow students.

After completing his education Drupada became King of Pāncāla. At that time the teacher Drōṇa once visited the palace of the King. But Drupada did not duly receive his former classmate. Drōṇa got angry at this and went to Hastināpura and became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. As a remuneration for teaching them Drōṇa demanded that Arjuna should bind Drupada and bring him before him. Arjuna did so. Drupada gave Drōṇa a portion of his kingdom and got his liberty. From that day onwards Drupada wished for a son who would take revenge on Drōṇa, and requested the hermit Upayāja to perform a sacrifice for getting a son. At first the hermit refused, ‘The King served the hermit for a year. The hermit was pleased and asked the King to invite Yāja for the sacrifice. The King did as he was told and Yāja and Upayāja came to Pāncāla and performed the sacrifice for getting a son. From the sacrificial dais Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Pāncāli were born. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166 and Sābhā Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 45).

UPENDRA. A synonym of Viṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu once took birth by Adi the wife of Kaśyapaprājapāti. In that birth Mahāviṣṇu had the name Upendra. He was known as Vāmana too. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

UPENDRA. A river. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 27).

UPENDRABAŁA. Son of a minister of the King named Śrī Datta. (See under Śrī Datta).

URAGA. A class of serpents. Ten daughters were born to Krodhavasā wife of Kaśyapa. The Uragas were born from the daughter Kadru and the nāgas were born from the daughter Surasā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kānda, Sarga 14).

URDHVABĀHU. A son of Vasiṣṭha. His mother was Urjā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, that this Urdhvabāhu did penance in South India.

URDHVABHAK. A fire. This Agni (fire) was the fifth son of Bhaspati. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 20).

URDHVAPUNDIRA. A mark worn on the forehead with yellow ochre. This mark should be made by earth or ochre, which should be taken from the top of a mountain peak, banks of rivers, seashore, Saivite temple serpent-hill or from under a holy basil. The fruits of wearing the mark will vary according to the colour of the ochre. Black ochre will afford peace, red soil will procure docility, yellow soil will get prosperity, and white ochre will give duty or righteousness. As the fruits vary according to the colour, so also it will vary according to the finger used to put the sign. If the mark is made with the thumb the man will become stout. If it is done with the middle finger he will have long life. If it is done with the fourth finger (anāmikā), he will get food and if it is made with the index finger (tarjāni) he will get salvation. The form of the mark also could be changed. The mark may be made in the form of a flame, the leaf of bamboo reed, a lotus-bud, a fish, a turtle or a conch. If the mark is as largē as ten finger-breadths it is superfine. If of nine finger-breadths, it is medium super-fine; and if it is eight and a half finger-breadths, it is lower superfine. In the same way if the finger-breadth of the mark is seven, six or five they will be super medium, medium medium and lower medium. If it is four, three and two they will be of the low, medium low and lowest.

It is also ordered that when one wears the Urdhva-puṇḍra in a particular spot of the body one will have to think of a particular name of Viṣṇu.

URDHVAVENIDHARĀ. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 18).

URJJĀ I. A wife of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Urdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra, were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Urjā. These seven holy men were the seven hermits (Saptarṣis) in the third Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 10).

URJJĀ II. One of the seven hermits of the Svārociṣa Manvantara. The seven hermits of the Svārociṣa Manvantara were Urjā, Stambha, Prāṇa, Vātā, Pṛṣabha Niraya and Parivāṇ. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 3, Chapter 1).

URJJĀ. III. A King of the Hehaya dynasty. He was the grand-father of the famous Jarāsandha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

URJJAKETU. A King of the dynasty of King Janaka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

URJJANI. A daughter of the Sun. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 119).

URJJASVATI. A daughter born to Priyavrata, the son of Manu Śvāyambhuva, by Surūpā the daughter of Viṣvakārna. Urjjasvati had ten brothers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8). Priyavrata gave Urjjasvati to the teacher-priest Sukra. Devayānī, the wife of Yāyāti, was the daughter born to Sukra by Urjjasvati. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

URJJAYONI. One of Viśvāmitra’s sons who were expounders of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59).

URMILĀ. Laksmana married Urmiḷā, the daughter of King Janaka and the sister of Śītā. When Laksmana went to the forest with Śrī Rāma and Śītā, Urmiḷā remained in Ayodhya. After the forest life, Śrī Rāma and Laksmana returned with Śītā. When Śrī Rāma was ruling over the country, two sons were born to Laksmaṇa by Urmiḷā. The elder son was named Taksaka and the second was given the name Chatraketu. At the instruction of Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa went to the Eastern sea and killed the foresters there and built there a city called Agati. Takṣaka was made the King of Agati. Lakṣmaṇa then went to the western sea and killed the Barbarians there and built a city called Candramati and made Chatraketu the King of that city. Being punished by Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa drowned himself in the river Sarayū. (See under Lakṣmaṇa). After that Urmilā jumped into a pile of fire and reached the world of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

Ūrṇā. A wife of Marici. In the Śvayambhuva Manvantara Marici had a wife named Ūrṇā and six mighty sons by her. When they saw Brahmā once, they ceased him by calling him 'a father who had married his daughter.' Brahmā got angry with them, and cursed them to take birth as Daityas (demons) on the earth. Accordingly they took birth as the sons of Kālanemi on earth. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

Ūrṇaṇābha (Sūdarsana). A son of Dhṛtarāșṭra. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 96). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 67, that Bhimasena killed him.

Ūrṇāyu. A Devagandharva. He had participated in the Birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 32). Once this Devagandharva fell in love with Menakā. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 16).

Ūru. A son born to Manu Cākṣuṣa by his wife Naḍvāla. Īru had nine brothers named Pūru, Śātadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Āgniḍhū, Atāśūtra, Sudyumna and Aitamanyu. Six great sons were born to Īru by his wife Atri. They were Aṅga, Sumanas, Svāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. Vena was born to King Aṅga by his wife Sunīṭhā and the famous emperor Prithu was born as the son of Vena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

Ūrūkrama. Another name of Vāmana.

Ūrva (Aurva). A luminous hermit of the family of Bhṛgu. He was the son of Čyavana and the father of Rākṣa. He created a tremendous fire for the destruction of the three worlds and extinguished it by putting it in the ocean. (For details see under Āruva).

Urvarā. A celestial woman in the palace of Kubera. In the company of some other celestial women, she danced before the hermit called Aṣṭāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 44).

Urvariyaṇ. Son of the Prajāpāti Pulaha. Three sons named Kardama, Urvafyāṇ and Sahiṣṇu, were born to Pulaha by his wife Kṣamā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Athaśa 1, Chapter 1).

Urvasī I. A famous celestial damsel.

1) Birth of Urvasī. In days of old two hermits named Nara and Nārāyaṇa did penance to Brahmā in the holy hermitage of Badarikā for a thousand years. (Nara and Nārāyaṇa were the children born to Dharma, the son of Brahmā). Because of the severity of their penance Indra was struck with fear. Thinking that they were doing this severe penance with a view to become Indra, he approached the hermits and told them that they might ask for any boon. Even though Indra told them several times, they did not speak a word nor did they make any stir. Indra's fear increased. So Indra decided to create some delusions which would arouse in them fear, desire etc., so that their penance might be broken. He began to bring around them wild animals such as lion, elephant wild snake etc. and natural phenomena such as storm, heavy rain, forest-fire etc. to terrify them. The efforts of Indra were futile. The disappointed Indra sent for Kāmadeva (Cupid) and consulted him, as a result of which Kāmadeva and his wife Ratiḍēvi with many celestial maids came to the hermitage in the mountain of Gandhamadana with the intention of hindering the penance of Naranārāyaṇas. The season of spring was created in the forest. The celestial women such as Rambha and others came before the hermits and began to sing and dance. The hearts of the hermits began to swell with passion. When they opened their eyes what they saw was a beautiful sight. The famous celestial women, Menakā, Rambha, Tilottama, Sukesinī, Manoramā, Mahecvari, Puṣpagandhā, Pramadvarā, Ghṛtācī, Candraprabhā, Somā, Vidyumālā, Ambujākṣi, Kāncanamālā, and others with their ten thousand and eighty hand-maids stood before them. Hermit Nārāyaṇa who got terribly angry struck on his thigh with his hand and instantly there arose a woman of extreme beauty. Because she had originated from the Īru (thigh) of Nārāyaṇa, that woman, who was the most beautiful in the three worlds, got the name Urvaśī. All the others were struck with wonder at the sight of this new creation. After that so many other beautiful women also were created. The hermit Nārāyaṇa gave all of them to Indra. With shame Indra accepted them and returned to heaven along with them. Thus Urvaśī arrived at the realm of the gods. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

2) Position of Urvaśī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that Urvaśī had the eleventh place among the singers. The expert dancers were Antīcānī, Adikā, Somakāṣī, Miśrā, Alambhū, Marīcī, Śucīkā, Vidyuptāṇā, Tilottamā, Ambikā, Kṣemā, Rambha, Subhā, Astā, Supriyā, Punḍarikā, Sugandhā, Suraśā, Pramāthinī, Kāmyā and Śrādvaśī. Urvaśī got the first place among the celestial maids in beauty. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 123).

3) Urvaśī and Puruvāvas. Puruvāvas was the son of Budha born of Ilā. He grew up and became a king of great renown. His fame reached even the realm of the gods. One day during that period Brahmā cursed Urvaśī. "Go and be born on the earth." (It is stated in the Devī Bhāgavata that it was Brahmā who cursed Urvaśī and in the Bhāgavata that it was the Mitārvuṇapāṇa who cursed Urvaśī). Urvaśī had heard about the fame of Puruvāvas and had felt tender love for him. The celestial maid reached the earth. She went to the palace of Puruvāvas and saw him. Because of the perfection of their figures, both loved mutually. The king asked her to become his wife. She agreed. But she laid down three conditions.

(i) I have with me two lambs which I bring up as my sons. You must take care of them. No harm should befall them.

(ii) I take in only ghee. On no account should you compel me to eat any other food.

(iii) Don't come near me in nudity except at the time of coition.

The king agreed to all these conditions. From that day onwards Urvaśī lived in the palace of the king as his wife. They lived happily for a long while without separating from each other.

Urvaśī became conspicuous by her absence in the realm of the gods. She was the most expert actress in heaven.
Indra missed her. So a search was made and they found out that she was in the palace of Purūravas. Indra asked the Gandharvas to bring that celestial woman to heaven somehow. Viśvāvasu and some others of the Gandharvas reached the palace of king Purūravas and waited for an opportunity. One midnight they stole the lambs and took them away through the sky. At that time the king was with Urvasī in the harem. Urvasī heard the cry of the lambs and she was flurried. She reviled the king who was not capable of taking care of two lambs. Hearing her harsh words the king took his bow and arrow and following the cry of the lambs he was about to chase the thieves. Taking this opportunity the Gandharvas caused a lightning to flash in the king's harem. In the light of the lightning Urvasī saw the king standing nude. The Gandharvas having achieved their task had left the lambs and departed before the king had got out of the room. The king caught hold of the lambs and returned to the harem, within a short while. But Urvasī had gone out of the palace and was on her way.

The king was full of grief. He wandered all over the country in search of Urvasī. At last he reached Kurukṣetra and saw Urvasī there. He bowed low before her and implored her to return to the palace. But Urvasī replied thus:—

“Women are like wolves. Don’t have alliance with them. Oh King! Kings should not put faith in women and thieves.”

Saying thus, Urvasī vanished. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) The reason why Purūravas had to remain separate from Urvasī. Purūravas had once gone to heaven, in accordance with the invitation of Indra to help the Gods in the battle with the asuras. Indra had killed Māyādāra, a noble Asura, in that battle and had celebrated a festival. In that festival Rambhā was dancing before Tumburu, the sage-priest, and detecting some flaw in her dance Purūravas teased her. Rambhā retorted by asking the King what he knew about dance, and the king replied that he had learned from Urvasī more dance than Tumburu the teacher of Rambhā. Tumburu got angry at this, and cursed the king Purūravas to suffer from the pangs of separation from Urvasī. Stricken with grief, Purūravas returned to his palace. It was after this that the Gandharvas took away Urvasī. Purūravas went to Badarikāśrama and performed penance, meditating on God Viṣṇu for the nullification of the curse. Urvasī, aggrieved by separation from her husband, sat motionless as a picture, in the custody of the Gandharvas. Lord Viṣṇu was pleased with the penance of Purūravas. The Gandharvas brought her back to the King. Thus it became possible for the king to meet Urvasī at least once a year. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvānakalamba, Tārāṅga 1).

5) The sons born to Purūravas by Urvasī. The king became very sad when Urvasī was about to depart from him at Kurukṣetra. Seeing his grief Urvasī told him, “Oh King, if you want so much to live with me, you have to worship the Gandharvas. They will be pleased and will give me to you. Don’t be sorry. Now I am pregnant. Come to this place at the end of a year. We can spend that night together. Then we will get another son also that night.” Pleased at what Urvasī had said, the king returned to his palace. On completion of a year Purūravas went to Kurukṣetra and spent a night with Urvasī. Urvasī gave Purūravas a very beautiful child and then she vanished. The king sat there and praised the Gandharvas, who gave the king an Agnisthāli (a fire pot). Because of his derangement, thinking it to be Urvasī the king took the sthāli (pot) and wandered about in the forest. At last placing the pot in the forest, the king returned to his palace. On that day Tretāyuga (one of the four ages of the world) commenced, and the Vedas dawned in his mind as three in number. He returned to the place where he had left the Sthāli in the forest and took it. After that he made two ‘arāṇis’ (wood from which fire is kindled by attrition) out of a banyan tree and placed his body between them and made fire. That fire is called ‘Jātavedas’. Thus Jātavedas became the son of Purūravas.

Purūravas generated three fires from Jātavedas. The first of them is Pranava. The second is called Nārāyaṇa and the third Agnivāraṇa. (Śrīmad Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

To Purūravas six sons were born from the womb of Urvasī. They were Āyus, Srutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (A little difference is observed in these names in the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanzas 24 and 25).

6) To know how a Gandharva named Durmada and a Vidyādhari named Unmadā played a trick on Purūravas and Urvasī, see under Unmadā.

7) How Agastyā and Vasīstha were born to Mitrāvaruṇas because of Urvasī. In days of old there was a renowned king named Nimi in the family of Ikṣvākū. He decided to perform a sacrifice of a long duration. He began preparation and invited famous hermits such as Bhṛgu, Āṅgiras, Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha, Rṛcika and others. Finally he invited Vasiṣṭha. At that time Indra had begun another sacrifice in heaven. So Vasiṣṭha went to heaven for that sacrifice, telling Nimi that he would conduct the sacrifice on his return. The emperor Nimi did not like it. Recognizing the hermit Gautama as the main priest, he began performing the sacrifice. The sacrifice of Indra lasted for 500 years. When Vasiṣṭha returned after that, the sacrifice of Nimi was over. Vasiṣṭha cursed Nimi. “You will become devoid of body.” Nimi cursed back. “Let Vasiṣṭha also become thus.”

The aggrieved Vasiṣṭha went to his father Brahmā and complained about the curse. Brahmā told Vasiṣṭha, “You penetrate the brightness of Mitrāvaruṇas and stay there. In due course you will get a birth which is not of a womb.” Hearing these words, Vasiṣṭha reached the hermitage of Mitrāvaruṇas. He left his body there and fused himself into their effulgence. During this period Urvasī came to that hermitage. Seeing her, Mitrāvaruṇas had seminal flow. The semen fell in a pot. From the pot two bright and handsome sons were born. The first of them was Agastya and the second Vasiṣṭha. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

8) Indra cursing Urvasī. Once Agastya went to the durbar of Indra. On the occasion Indra asked Urvasī to dance. In the midst of the dance she saw Jayanta, the son of Indra, and became amorous and her steps went wrong. Nārada who was playing his famous lute called Mahātī could not play well. Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta to become a bud. He cursed Nārada also. So his lute became the lute of the world. Urvasī was born on the earth under the name Mādhavi due to the curse.
9) Urvaśī changing Arjuna into eunuch. (See under Arjuna).
10) Other information.
   (i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that Urvaśī had been in love with Kubera once.
   (ii) Urvaśī was dismayed when Sukadeva attained Supreme Bliss. (See under Šuka).

URVASĪ II. Another name of Gaṅgā. As she sat on the Uru (thigh) of Bhagiratha, Gaṅgā got the name Urvaśī. (M.B. Droṇā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 6).

URVASĪTīRTTHA. A holy place and Bath. Those who bathe in this holy bath will be honoured by the world. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 157).

UṢĀ I. The daughter of Bāṇāsura and the wife of Aniruddha.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:- Brahmā - Kaṭṣaya - Hiraṇyakaśipu - Prahlāda - Virocana-Mahābalī-Bāṇā-Uṣā.

2) Marriage of Uṣā. See under Aniruddha.

UṢĀ II. The daughter of a hermit. The king of Śalva once attacked Satyaratha, the king of Vidarbha, and killed him. The queens of the king of Vidarbha went to the forest. One of them who was pregnant gave birth to a child on the bank of a river. When she got down into the river to drink water, a crocodile swallowed her. Then a hermit's daughter named Uṣā brought up the child. (Śiva Purāṇa).

UṢĀ III. The night is called Uṣā and the day, Ghusū. The time between Uṣā and Ghusū is called Sandhyā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṣīṭa 2, Chapter 8).

UṢANGU I. A hermit who lived in the western country. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 30).

UṢANGU II. A synonym of Śīva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 105).

UṢANGU III. A king of the Yadu family. His father was Vṛjiniyān and his son was called Cittaratha. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 29).

UṢANGAVA. A member of the durbar of the king Yama (god of death). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 26).

UṢĀNKU (RUṢĀNKU). A hermit. Seeing that old age was coming on him this hermit forsook his body in the Pṛthūdaka tīrtha and went to the realm of Viṣṇu. Arśīṭeṣa, Viṣvāmitra, Sindhudvīpa, Devāpi and such others got Brahmaṇya (the state of being Brahmīn) by doing penance in the hermitage of this hermit. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 38, Stanzas 33-39).

UṢANAS. The teacher Śukra, the son of the hermit Bhrūg. (See under Śukra).

UṢIK I. A hermit about whom mention is made in the Rgveda.

UṢIK II. One Uṣik as the wife of the hermit Dīrghatamas is mentioned in the Rgveda Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112. This Uṣik was the maid of the queen of the old King of Kaliṅga. The king requested Dīrghatamas to beget children by his queen. The queen did not like this. She sent her maid Usīktō Dīrghatamas. The hermit Kāṣīvīn was the son born to Dīrghatamas by Uṣik. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 18, Sūkta 125).

UṢINARA I. A famous king of the Candravānśa (Lunar dynasty).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:- Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Buddha- Purūravas - Āyus-Naḥuṣa-Yayāti-Anudruhya-Sabhānara-Kālanara - Śṛṇjayā-Uṣinara. Uṣinara was the father of Śibi and Vena.

2) The reason for the curse of the eight Vasus. Once the Aśtāvasus (Vasus eight in number) came to the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, with their wives. The wife of Dyaus, one of the Aśtāvasus, saw the cow ‘Nandini’ in the hermitage. She and the daughter of Uṣinara were intimate friends. She wanted to get Nandini, so that she might give it as a present to the daughter of Uṣinara. According to her wish the Aśtāvasus caught hold of the cow and took her home. At that time Vasiṣṭha had been away. When he returned, he knew about the theft of the cow and cursed the Aśtāvasus to take birth in the wombs of women on earth. It was according to this curse that the Aśtāvasus took birth in Gaṅgādevī the wife of Santanu. See under Bhīṣma. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

3) Indra testing Uṣinara. Uṣinara was a just and liberal-minded King. Indra decided to test the King regarding his liberality. He got Agnideva (fire-god) for his help. Indra took the form of a Kīte and Agnī that of a dove. Both flew down to Uṣinara as if the Kīte was chasing the dove. Uṣinara agreed to protect the dove. The Kīte argued with the King that it was not meet and right on his part to rob him of his lawful food. The King agreed to give any other kind of flesh to the Kīte. But the Kīte would have none of them. Finally the Kīte agreed to accept the flesh of the King instead, equal to the weight of the dove. The King cut more and more flesh from his body, but it could not weigh equal to the dove. At last the King himself got into the balance. Then the gods had pity on the King and the Kīte and the dove appeared in their real form and blessed the King and then they returned to heaven. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 131). In Mahābhārata a story like this occurs about King Śibi also.

4) Other information.
   (i) Uṣinara gave Gālava two hundred horses as dowry and married Yāyāti's damsel Mādhavi. (See under Gālava).
   (ii) The King Śunaka gave Uṣinara a sword. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 79).
   (iii) Uṣinara performed a sacrifice on the bank of the river Vītastā and became equal to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 20-21).
   (iv) Uṣinara attained heaven by giving cows as gifts. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25).

UṢINARA II. A King of the Yādavas. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 20, it is mentioned that this King was present on the occasion of the Svayānvar (the bride choosing a husband) of Draupadi.

UṢINARA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 32, that Vṛṣādarbhi was another name of Uṣinara and that he had once ruled over the kingdom of Kāṣī.

UṢINARA IV. A country. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Kārṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 47, that Arjuna had killed the warriors of this country. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanzas 22 and 23, mention is made that due to the curse of Brahmīns the Kṣatriyas (the ruling class) had become Śūdras (servile class).
UŚIRABĪJA I. A mountain in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 1).

UŚIRABĪJA II. A place on the northern side of the Himālayas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23, that the King Marutta once fought a battle here.

ŪŚMĀ. The son of the Agni (Fire) named Pāṇcajanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 4).

ŪŚMAPA. A group of Piśās (the Manes). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 30, that these Piśās (the manes) live in the palace of Yama.

UŚṆADESA. An ancient place in Kṛuṇacādīvīpa (the island of Kṛuṇa). Kṛuṇacāravatā (the mountain Kṛuṇa) stands near this place. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 21).

UŚṆĪGAṆGA. An ancient holy place in Bhārata. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 7).

UŚṈIK. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of the Sun are, Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uśṇik, Jagatī, Trīṣṭup, Anuṣṭup, and Paṅktī. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Aṇśa 2, Chapter 8).

UŚṈINĀBHA. A Viśvadeva (a class of gods). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 44).

UŚṬRAKARṆIKA. An ancient place in South India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71, that this place was brought under control by Sahadeva.

UTATHYA I. 1) General. Son of sage Aṅgiras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 5). He gave advice on subjects of statecraft to King Māṇḍhātā. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 90). He married Soma’s daughter Bhradā. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154, Verse 12). 2) Utathya drank up the sea dry. Varuṇa's deva had an eye on Soma's daughter Bhradā when Utathya married her. Incensed at the marriage, Varuṇa carried Bhradā off to the sea. One day when Utathya was not present, Nārada informed Utathya that it was Varuṇa who stole his wife. Thus Nārada, at the request of Utathya, asked Varuṇa to return Bhradā to the former who did not oblige. Enraged at this Utathya drank up the sea dry. Yet, Varuṇa did not come round. Then Utathya rendered all the lakes of Varuṇa dry. Trembling at this Varuṇa returned Bhradā to Utathya and prostrated at his feet. He pardoned Varuṇa and gave back the sea to him. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154).

UTATHYA II. The muni Satyatatapas. (See under Satyatatapas.)

UTKALĀ I. A place in India where people lived in safety. Karna conquered this place. (Drona Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8). Utkalā is believed to be modern Orissa.

UTKALĀ II. Son of Vaivasvata Manu. (Bṛhaṁṛṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 31).

UTKOΓA (M). A holy place. Dhaumya, the younger brother of Deva lived in Utkotatihitā. The Pāṇḍavas went there and made Dhaumya a priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).

UTKOΓAKA (M). An ancient holy place. Dhaumya did tapas here, and it was here that the Pāṇḍavas took Dhaumya as their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 152, Verses 2-6).

UTKRĀTHINI. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 16).

UTKROŚA. One of the two attendants Indra gave to Skanda; the other was called Pañcaka. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).

UTPALĀVANA. A holy bath in the Panjab. At this place Viśvāmitra performed a sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 15).

UTPĀLINA. A river flowing near the forest known as Naimiśāranya. Arjuna had seen this river. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 6).

UTPĀTAKA. A holy bath. Those who bathe in this tirtha (bath) will get the merits of a fast. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 41).

UTSĀVA. Celebrations conducted in temples from olden days. There are Śāstraic (scriptural) injunctions as regards conducting utsavas. Utsava is an indispensable celebration when once the deity (idol) is installed in the temple. Utsava should be celebrated for one day, three days or seven days in the very same month in which the deity was installed, because non-celebration of Utsava will render the installation ineffective. Utsava should be conducted either during Uttarāyana (movement of the sun from south to North) or Viśu (when the Sun is in the centre) or at a time suitable to the temple authorities who conduct the utsava in Sāyana, Upavana or Gṛha. It should commence with auspicious ceremonies like the sowing of seeds of nine varieties of foodgrains, and with dance, song, instrumental music etc.

UTSĀVASĀNKETA. A place in the South Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 61).

UTTAMA. A King born in the dynasty of Śvāyambhuva Manu who had two famous sons, of whom Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmati, two daughters of Viśvakarman. Priyavrata begot three children, Utamata Tāmasa and Raivata by his wife Barhiṣmati. These three sons attained exceptional prowess and became lords of the ages of Manu (Manvantarādhipati). Priyavrata, with his children ruled the country in all happiness and prosperity for ten crores of years. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha). Uttānapāda, the second son of Śvāyambhuvamana begot one son, Utama by his wife Suruci and another son Dhruva by his wife Suniti. (See under Dhruva). (Viśnū Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 11).

UTTAMĀŚVA. A particular place in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 41).

UTTAMAUJAS. A warrior who fought in the great war on the Pāṇḍava side. He belonged to the Pāṇḍava country. It was Uttamausas who guarded the right wheel of Arjuna’s chariot. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19). He fought fiercely with Aṅgada. (Drona Parva, Chapter 28, Verses 38-39). He fought Kṛtvārjuna also. (Drona Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 27-32). He was defeated in a fight with Duryodhana. (Drona Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 30-43). Kṛtvārjuna also defeated him. He killed Suśeṇa, son of Karṇa. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 13). This valiant warrior was killed by Aṣvathāmā. (Sauupitka Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 35-36). His cremation is described in Verse 34, Chapter 26 of Śtri Parva.

UTTANABARHIŚ. The son of Śaryaṭi, a King of the family of Vaivasvata Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).
UTTĀNAPĀDA. A King. He was the son of Svāyambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8.) A son named Uttama was born to Uttānapāda by his wife Suruci. Uttānapāda had another wife called Suniti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aśka 1, Chapter 11). See under Dhrurva.

UTTĀNKA (UTTĀNA), An ideal disciple of Veda who was the disciple of Apodadhaumya.

1) Uttānka and the Guru's wife. After entrusting management of the āśrama to Uttānka, Veda once went out on a tour of the country, and Uttānka stayed in the Āśrama carrying out the instructions of the Guru. Then came the menstrual period of Veda's wife, and his other wives requested Uttānka to do the needful, so that the fertile period of their co-wife was not wasted. Uttānka's reply to them was as follows:—"As asked by women, I shall not do this improper act; and the preceptor has not asked me to do such a thing though it might be improper."

His Guru, Apodadhaumya returned to the Āśrama some time after this, and was very pleased to hear about the above incident. He blessed Uttānka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

2) His tuition fee. His education being over, it was now time for Uttānka to give due offerings—tuition fee to his guru, and Uttānka enquired of the guru as to what he would have by way of dakṣinā. The guru asked Uttānka to get his wife's instruction in the matter and act accordingly. Because of the aforesaid incident (Uttānka not acting on the guru's wife during her menstrual period) she had a grouse against him, and therefore, asked him to bring as his tuition fee the ear-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pauṣa.

Uttānka set out to procure the ear-rings. On the way he saw an ox, and on its back a big man, who called out to Uttānka to eat the excretion of the ox. When Uttānka hesitated to do so, the man on the ox asked him again to eat it, pointing out that his guru, Veda, had done it. Then did Uttānka consume both the excretion and urine of the ox, and did his oblations, in his perplexed mood, standing. Uttānka arrived at the palace of King Pauṣa and told him about the object of his visit. The King agreed to it. But, when Uttānka entered the Zenana Pauṣa's Kṣatriya wife could not be seen. When Uttānka told the King about this, he remained thoughtful for some time and told the former that he might surely have become impure due to performance of oblations in the wrong manner, and that his wife would not be visible, due to her chastity, to the eyes of such impure folk. Uttānka admitted to having, on his way, performed oblations not in the proper manner, and then he sat down facing the east after washing his hands, feet etc. and performed oblation in the correct manner. Then did the wife of King Pauṣa become visible to him, and she, pleased at his humility, handed over her ear-rings to him. She also advised him to be very careful about the ear-rings as they had once been coveted by Taksaka, King of the serpents. Bidding adieu to the queen, Uttānka saw the King and they sat together to take food. Not only was the rice cold but a hair was also found in it. Uttānka cursed the King and rendered him blind, and the King, in turn, cursed Uttānka not to have children. But, both of them became calm quite soon and withdrew their curses.

On his way back to the Āśrama with the ear-rings, he had only just stepped into a pool for a wash, when a naked Buddha sannyāsin, who was following him, snatched and ran off with the ear-rings. It was really Taksaka disguised as the sannyāsin who thus snatched the ear-rings. Uttānka chased him and caught him when he assumed his original form of the serpent King and disappeared into a cave. Uttānka waited at the mouth of the cave stupefied, when Indra deputed his Vajrāyudha to help Uttānka. The Vajrāyudha cut a tunnel-like route to Pātāla from the earth and through the cave Uttānka reached Pātāla by this route and found out the palace of Taksaka.

Though Uttānka praised and cajoled the Nāgas (serpents) their King Taksaka did not make his appearance. Uttānka saw there two women, who had been weaving clothes, and on one machine there were black and white threads. The machine had one wheel with twelve spokes and was turned by six boys. Also there was a horse, and a man. When Uttānka praised them, the horse and the man approached him. The man advised Uttānka to blow through the anus of the horse so that the snakes could be brought round. Uttānka did so, when lo! from all the pores on the body of the horse, flames of fire began sprouting out. When the Nāgaloka (country of serpents) got thus filled with fire and flames, Taksaka lost his nerves and came out with the stolen ear-rings, which Uttānka received back. But, that was the last day on which the rings had been promised to be given to his guru's wife by Uttānka, who remained there gloomy and sorrow-stricken at the thought that he would not be able to travel all the distance before sunset and give the ear-rings to the guru's wife. Then the horseman gave the horse to Uttānka, who reached the Āśrama just in time when the guru's wife was about to curse Uttānka for not returning with the rings though it was nearly dusk time. Now the guru and his wife blessed Uttānka, who detailed to them his experiences since leaving the Āśrama in quest of the ear-rings. Then the guru spoke thus to Uttānka—"The two women whom you found engaged in weaving were Dhātā and Vindhātā, the white and black strings, day and night, and the six boys who turned the wheel with twelve spokes were the six seasons. The ox seen by you on the way was Airāvata (Indra's elephant), the horse seen in Pātāla was Agni-deva, and the horseman, Indra. The excretion you ate on your way was nectar and that was the reason why you did not die in the Nāgaloka. Indra, who is my friend blessed you because of mercy towards you, my disciple. You could bring back the ear-rings also because of Indra's blessings." Then the guru blessed Uttānka and the latter took leave of them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

3) Uttānka and Janamejaya's serpent yajña. Uttānka, determined on taking vengeance on Taksaka, went away directly from the āśrama to Hastināpura, where he met Janamejaya and told him the fact that it was Taksaka, who had bitten to death Parīkṣit, his (Janamejaya) father. It was thus prompted by Uttānka to take revenge upon Taksaka that Janamejaya performed the serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).
4) Uttānka and Dhundhumāra. See under Dhundhumāra.
5) Uttānka attained salvation. Uttānka was put up at a place called Ujjālaka. When he became old, he went about visiting many temples. During this tour one day Uttānka saw a hunter in the forest called Gulika attempting to steal the golden plates on the dome of the Viṣṇu temple in Sauvīra. Gulika raised his sword to kill Uttānka, when he told the former that he would have to suffer the results of sin during many births if he committed a sin. This admonition of Uttānka so touched the heart of the hunter that he fell dead on the spot with a repentant heart. Uttānka sprinkled Ganga water on the corpse of the hunter, who attained Vaikunṭha (abode of Viṣṇu). On the advice of Viṣṇu, Uttānka went to Badari where he did tapas and also attained Vaikunṭha. (Nārādīya Purāṇa).

In Chapters 53-58 of Aśvamedha Parva of Mahābhārata is related the story of one Uttānka muni, under the caption ‘Uttānkapākhyāṇa’. In Mahābhārata (original) he is referred to as Uttānka; but in its Malayālam rendering he is called Uttānka. There are no substantial differences between the story of Uttānka and that of Uttānka, Veda’s disciple. But, since, there are differences, in certain aspects some information about the Uttānka of the ‘Uttānkapākhyāṇa’ is given below—

1) General. Uttānka was a disciple of Gautama, the husband of Ahalyā. The guru had more love for Uttānka than for his other disciples, and therefore did not permit the latter to leave the Āśrama even after the other disciples were sent away. Uttānka became old; wrinkles attacked his body and greyness his head.

2) Tuition fee (Gurudaksina). Uttānka once returned from the woods with firewood, in a very tired condition. The daughter of the guru shed tears at the sight. Gautama called Uttānka to him and asked him about the cause of his grief and sorrow. Uttānka replied that the hairs on his head turned grey on account of sorrow that he was not permitted to leave the Āśrama although it was hundred years since he had gone there first as disciple. Then Gautama permitted Uttānka to quit the Āśrama. Uttānka asked Gautama what he should offer as tuition fee. Gautama consulted his wife on the topic and she suggested as tuition fee the two ear-rings of gems worn by the wife of King Saudāśa, who used to eat the flesh of man. Immediately Uttānka set out to fetch the ear-rings and on his way met Saudāśa in the forest, and told the latter about his mission. Saudāśa tried to eat Uttānka, who told him that he was in duty bound to obtain the ear-rings for his guru’s wife and that, after fulfilling the mission, he would return to Saudāśa to be eaten up by him. Saudāśa agreed to the proposition. He directed Uttānka to his wife Madayanī, who spoke to him thus—“Devas and Mahārṣis covet these ear-rings. If I place them on the ground, serpents will steal them; if handed over to Ucchistha, Yakṣas will steal them, and if the watchman sleeps, Devas will snatch them off. Therefore, you should bring some token for me to believe that you are deputed by my husband.” Accordingly Uttānka went back to Saudāśa and returned to his wife with a token from him, and Madayanī handed over her ear-rings to Uttānka. Being told by Saudāśa that Uttānka need not return again to him, Uttānka started for Gautama’s Āśrama with the ear-rings. Feeling hungry on the way, Uttānka tied to the branch of a vilva tree the ear-rings bundled in deer skin and ate vilva fruits. Just then the bundle of deer skin got untied and the ear-rings kept in it fell on the ground. A serpent carried off the rings between its teeth and concealed itself in a mole-hill. Highly grieved and upset by the sight, Uttānka fell down from the tree. For 35 days Uttānka dug the mole-hill. Then Indra felt great sympathy for him, appeared on the spot, and passed his Vajrāyudha through the mole-hill. Then the earth burst open and Uttānka entered Pātāla through the opening, and a horse, its tail white and the rest of the body black in colour presented itself to him. It asked Uttānka to blow through its anus. Uttānka did so and the Nāgalaoka was filled with flames of fire. (The horse was Agmideva). Then did the serpents return the ear-rings to Uttānka, who returned with it to Gautama and presented it to him (Gautama) as tuition fee.

3) Uttānka about to curse Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttānka once went to Dvārakā, and during their talk was about to curse Kṛṣṇa for not attempting to bring about a compromise between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. At once Kṛṣṇa exhibited his Viṣvarūpa (himself as containing the whole universe). Thereupon Uttānka saluted Kṛṣṇa, who asked him to request for any boon. He prayed for the boon that water might be made available in any desert he visited. Kṛṣṇa told him that whenever he required water he might successfully think of him.

4) Indra tested Uttānka. Some time afterwards, while roaming about quite thirsty and tired in a desert, Uttānka thought about Kṛṣṇa, and at once there appeared before him a naked Candḍā, his body covered with mud. Dogs encircled him. Uttānka hesitated to drink the water given to him by this Candḍā, who had some water with him. The Candḍā again insisted on Uttānka drinking the water, but he again refused the offer. The Candḍā then disappeared with the dogs. Within a few minutes a person with disc, conch, club etc., about him appeared, and Uttānka recognised him as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttānka told Kṛṣṇa that it was not proper to give water to a brahmin through a Candḍā. Kṛṣṇa’s reply to this was as follows—“I asked Indra for you nectar instead of water, and he argued that it was not proper that men should be given nectar. I pleaded for you again. Indra replied to this that he himself would, in the guise of a Candḍā give nectar to you, and he should not be found fault with, if you refused the nectar. I accepted that proposition of his. But, you did not accept nectar thus offered to you. So, you cannot be given nectar now. But, there will appear water-laden clouds in deserts which you traverse, which would be known as ‘Uttānka clouds’ and they would give you sweet water.

Uttānka was pleased, and it is the Uttānka clouds, which form as per the above orders of Kṛṣṇa that cause rain to fall, though rarely, in deserts even today.

UTTARA I. The son of King Virātā of Matsya. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Virātā Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9 that Bhūmīnīyasa was another name of Uttara. Uttara also accompanied his father Virātā, when he went to take part in the Svaṃhara (choice of a husband) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 3).

2) Uttara and Arjuna. See the paragraph Ajñātavāṣa under Arjuna.
3) The end of Uttara. Uttara had taken part in the battle between the Pándavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahábhárata, Bhíṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 77 that a combat took place on the first day of the battle between Uttara and Vírabhú. Uttara attacked Sályá who killed Uttara. (M.B. Bhíṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 36 to 39). Uttara who met with a glorious death in the battle, got a place in heaven with the gods. (M.B. Svargáraňa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 17 and 18).

UTTARA II. A King who had gone down because of his contemptuous behaviour towards his superiors.

UTTARA III. A fire. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 29 and Sábhá Parva, Chapter 22).

UTTARA.

1) General information. Daughter of Vírāta, the King of Matsya. Her brother was called Uttara.

2) Up to marriage. The Pándavas led their incognito life in the capital of the Matsya Kingdom. Arjuna adopted the name Brhannala and was employed as the tutor of princess Uttara in music and dancing. At the end of the life, King Vírāta gave his daughter Uttarā in marriage to Abhimanyu the son of Arjuna. (See the paragraph Aññátváśa (incognito-life) under Arjuna.)

3) Son. The son born to Abhimanyu and Uttara was Paríküñ, who became a famous King later. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 83 and 84). See the seventh paragraph under Áśvattháma).

4) The death of her husband. Abhimanyu was killed in the battle between the Pándavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Maháabhárata, Drona Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 37 that Uttara fell unconscious, when she heard of the death of her husband. Sri Kṛśna consoled Uttarā. In the Mahábhárata, Súri Parva, Chapter 20, Stanzas 4 to 28 the lamentation of Uttara over the death of Abhimanyu is mentioned.

5) To the forest. Uttara also was seen among the women who accompanied Dhrtaráṣṭra, to a little distance when he went to the forest after the battle. (M.B Áśramaváśika Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 10).

UTTARADÍŚA. See under Gálya.

UTTARAJJOTÍSA. An ancient city which stood in the western part of Bharata. It is said in the Mahábhárata that Nakula conquered this city. (Sábhá Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11).

UTTARAKOSALA. An ancient country in Bharata. It is mentioned in the Mahábhárata, Sábhá Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 3 that Bhismesna conquered Uttara Kosala.

UTTARAKURU. A part of the Jambūdvípa (Island of Jambú). Mention is made in the Mahábhárata that during his conquest Arjuna had gone up to this place and carried away from there plenty of wealth. It is believed by common people that this place is inaccessible to human beings. (M.B. Sábhá Parva, Chapter 28, Stanzas 7 to 20). The southern end of this place is the Nilagiri and the Northern end Mount Meru. The inhabitants are gifted people, with trees bearing flowers and fruits, the flowers fragrant and the fruits sweet. A particular type of tree known as Kśíri (milky) grows here from which milk will flow. There are also trees which will give you whatever you ask. It was the belief of ancient people that with the fruits of Kśíri, you could make garments and ornaments. The soil of this place contains gems and in the sand there is gold, Those who fall down from heaven live in this region. The average age of the inhabitants of this place is said to have been eleven thousand years. There is a kind of bird in this place called Bhárúña. These birds drag dead bodies away to caves. (M.B. Bhíṣma Parva, Chapter 8, Stanzas 1 to 13).

UTTARMANÁSA. A holy place of pilgrimage. It is stated in the Mahábhárata, Anuśásana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 60, that those who visit this holy place will get atonement from the sin of Bhrúñahatyá (causing embroyctony).

UTTARAPÁÑCÁLA. An ancient country in Bharata. Drupada became the King of this country on the death of King Pṛṣata. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 43). In course of time Uttara-apáñcálá came under the control of the Ácārya Droña. (See under Droña). In the Mahábhárata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 137, Stanzas 70 to 76 it is mentioned that this country was on the north bank of the Gaṅgá.

UTTARAPÁRYÁṬRA. A mountain. (Bhāṣá Bhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 313, Stanza 8).

UTTARÁPATHA. North Bharata. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 207, Stanza 43).

UTTARA RAMÁYANA. The second part of the Rámáyana. Uttara Rámáyaṇa comprises the story from Śri Rámä’s return from the exile in the forest and assuming the ruling of the country onwards.

UTTARA ULUKA. The country of Ulùka in North India. It is mentioned in the Mahábhárata, Sábhá Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11 that Arjuna conquered this country.

UTTEJINI. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Sályá Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 6).

V

VA (वा). This letter means Varuṇa and letter ‘Vi’ means separation (of lovers). (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 348).

VÁBHRAVAYANÍ (VÁBHRAVAYÁNÍ). One of Viśvámitra’s sons, who were all Brahmavádins. (M.B. Anuśásana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 57).

VADÁNYA. An ancient hermit. (For further details see under Aśtvāvakra).

VADHA. Son of Yádudhána, a giant. It is mentioned in Brahmánda Puráṇa that this giant had two sons Vighna and Sáma.

VADHRA. A country in ancient India. (Mahábhárata, Bhíṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 55).

VADHRIMATI. A princess, praised in Rgveda. This beautiful princess got a hermaphrodite as her husband. She shed a good deal of tears and prayed to the Áśvins (Chariteers of Indra, celebrated as Gods of light and helpers) in consequence of which she got a son named Hiranyahasta. (Rgveda, Manúḍa 1, Śúkta 116).

VADHIUSÁRA. A river which flowed through the vicinity of the hermitage of Cyavana. This river took its origin from the tears of Pulomá, the wife of hermit Bharu. (For further details see under Cyavana). Because of a bath taken in this river, the body of Parasuráma shone with radiance. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 60).

VADHYAŚVA. A king in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahábhárata, Sábhá Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 12, that the spirit of this king stays in the palace of Yama, praising him.

VADI. A son of emperor Pṛthu. Pṛthu had two righteous sons called Antardhāna and Vádi. A son named Hāvirdhāna was born to Anurathdána by Śikhangidáni. Dhíṣaná born in the dynasty of Agni became the wife of Havir-dhāna. Six sons named Pradcinaharis, Sukra, Gayā, Kesṣa, Vraja and Ajīna were born to the couple. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśā 1, Chapter 14).

VĀGBHAṬA. A Sanskrit scholar who lived in the 12th century A.D. He is the author of the two medical books ‘Aṣṭāṅga-saṅgraha’ and ‘Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya’. Another work called ‘Neminīrāṇa’ is also written by Vāgbhaṭa. This work deals with the story of Neminathā, a Jain hermit.

Not much is known about Vāgbhaṭa. He was a scholar in rhetorical science. There are certain stories about his writing the medical books. It was a period when the Muslims had beaten down the Brahmins. They had taken away the medical science also from them. The Brahmins considered this to be a disgrace to them. They decided to select an intelligent boy and send him to a Muslim physician. They selected Vāgbhaṭa. The Brahmins disguised Vāgbhaṭa as a Muslim boy and sent him to the Muslim Physician on the other side of the river. The boy went to the physician and told him that he was coming from far away with the intention of learning medical science. The teacher put certain questions and understood that the boy possessed extraordinary intelligence. He began to teach the boy the science of medicine. Seeing the interest of the boy the teacher asked the boy to eat food from his house and to learn day and night. The Brahmin boy did not like to eat the food of Muslims. The boy said that he had a relative on the other side of the river and that he would go there and have his supper and return for the night study. The teacher agreed and thenceforward Vāgbhaṭa began to learn day and night. Within a short time he completed learning.

One day the teacher was sleeping on the seventh storey of the building and his disciple Vāgbhaṭa was massaging his legs. The boy soliloquised that fate had destined him to massage the legs of a Musalman. Instantly he cried bitterly, and the teacher awoke and understood that the boy was not a Muslim, and tried to cut his head. The boy thought: “The four Vedas and the six Sāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me.” Then he jumped out of the window. In consequence of this jump, he became a little lame and no other harm befell him. He swam across the river and reached the other side and told the Brahmins everything. The Brahmins asked him what he imagined when he jumped from the seventh storey. He replied “I jumped with this imagination. The four Vedas and the six Sāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me.” As soon as the boy had finished the Brahmins became angry and they all got up. They said “You went wrong in using the doubtful ‘if’, instead of the affirmative ‘As’. The Brahmins joined together and expelled him from the society. The boy thought of going away somewhere. “But there won’t be another chance for somebody else to go and learn medical science from the Muslim physicians. So before going away from here I must make the fruits of my efforts available to these people.” Thinking so he lived there for a little longer. He lived there without mingling with the Brahmins, cooking his food. It is believed that Vāgbhaṭa wrote ‘Aṣṭāṅga-saṅgraha’ and ‘Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya’, during this period.

VĀGDUSTA. One of the seven sons of hermit Kauṭika. (Matsya Purāṇa, 20: 3). The famous Pitṛvartti was the youngest brother of Vāgdusta.

VĀGINDRA. Son of the king Prakāṣaka born in the family of Gṛtsamada. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 63 that he was the father of King Pramiti.

VĀGMI. A son born to Manasūry, the grandson of emperor Puru, by his wife Sauvīrī. This son had two brothers Saktā and Samihaṇana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 45).

VĀHANA (CONVEYANCE). To know about the conveyances of Rudra, Yama and so on, see under Jaladhī.

VAHI. A devil living in the river Vipāśa. The devil had a friend called Hīka. Their sons are called the Vāhikas. The Vāhikas are not considered to be the creation of the Prajāpatis. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 1).

VĀHIKA. A Brahmin who was well-versed in the Vedas. This Brahmin earned his bread by selling salt. In his life, he had committed sins. At last he was killed by a lion. The flesh of his dead body fell in the Gangā in consequence of which he got remission of his sins. (Skanda Purāṇa 2: 4: 1-28).

VAHINARA. A king who lives in the palace of Yama. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 15).

VĀHINI I. A division of army. (See under Akṣauhinī).

VĀHINI II. Wife of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. Five sons such as Aśvāvan and others were born to Kuru by his wife Vāhini. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 50).

VAHNI. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52 that this asura had been a lokapāla (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa were called lokapālas) in olden days.

VAHNI II. The son of the King Turvasu. Vahni had a son named Bharga who became very famous. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Brahmāṅga Purāṇa, 3: 74. 1).

VAHNI III. One of the sons born to Krṣṇa by Mitra-vindā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VAHNIJVĀLAM. A hell. (See the portion Naraka under Kāla).

VĀHYAKĀ. The two daughters of King Śrījaya. They were married by Bhajamāna, a Yādava king. Three sons named Nimi, Kṛṣṇila and Vṛṣṇi were born to them. (Matsya Purāṇa, 44: 49-50).

VAIBHRĀJAKA. A garden. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that this garden is situated on the top of the mountain Suparśva which stands as a prop to Mahāmeru.

VAIDARBHI I. A wife of King Sagara. This king born of the Solar dynasty, had two wives named Vaidarbhi and Śaibhya. Vaidarbhi was also called Sumati and Śaibhya had another name Keśini. Of these two, Vaidarbhi gave birth to sixty thousand sons and Śaibhya to one son named Asamajīasa. (See under Sagara).

VAIDARBHI II. Wife of the King Kuśa. Four sons named Kuśamba, Ku-anābha, Asūratarajas and Vasu were born to Kuśa by Vaidarbhi. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bala Kanda, Sarga 32).

VAIDARBHI III. A king. This King gave his daughter Lopāmudrā in marriage to Agastya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137: Verse 11).
VAIDEHA I. The King of Videha.

VAIDEHA II. See under Varṇa.

VAIDEHA III. Another name of the country of Videha. It has the meaning, that which is in Videha. (M.B. Bhṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 57).

VAIḌŪṆYAPARVATA. A mountain which stands near Gokarna (holi place) in the country of Śārīrakā (Kerala). Agastya once built a hermitage on this mountain. If one bathes in the river Narmadā, after having visited this Vaiḍūrya mountain one could attain the holy worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 13).

VAIDYA. One of the sons born to Varuṇa by his wife Sunādevī. His sons Gṛṣṇi and Muni fought with each other and died. (Vāyu: 84: 6-8).

VAIḤĀṬAŚA. A cavity or a sacred pit (kuṇḍa) situated near the hermitage of Naraṇāraṇyaṇa. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3).

VAIṌJAYANTA I. The capital city of an asura named Timidhvaja, otherwise called Sambara, (See under Timidhvaja).

VAIṌJAYANTA II. Name of the flag of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 8).

VAIṌJAYANTA III. A mountain standing in the middle of the sea of Milk. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 9, that Brahmā comes to this mountain daily for devotion and meditation.

VAIṌJAYANTI. Two bells of Airāvata. Indra presented these two bells to Subrahmaṇya, who, in his turn, gave one of them to Viśākha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 13).

VAIKARTANA. Another name of Karṇa.

VAIṌKHĀṆASA. A philosopher. He had written a book known as ‘Vaiṅkhāṇasadharmapraśaṇa’. Matters concerning the duties of a forest-house-holder, occupation suitable for children born of wedlocks which are in accordance with natural law as well as contrary to the natural order, etc. are dealt with in detail, in this book. A large number of quotations from Vaiṅkhāṇasadharmapraśaṇa occur in Manusmiṃṭu.

VAIṌKHĀṆASAŚA. A group of hermits of the Vedic age. There were hundred hermits in this group. (Ṛgveda, 9: 68). They were born from the finger nail of Brahmā. (Taittirīya, 1, 23).

VAIṌKUNTHA I. The dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu.

VAIṌKUNTHA II. Another name of Mahāviṣṇu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 342, Stanza 80, that when Viṣṇu made creation with the five elements, his powers did not have any hindrance (Kuṇṭhita) and so he got the name Vaiṅkaṇṭha.

VAIṌKUNTHA III. A Brahmin saint who lived in the Tretāyuga. The living things got deliverance from sin, the moment they came into contact with him. This power of Vaiṅkaṇṭha to give living things deliverance, is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Brahma khaṇḍa, Chapter 3, as follows: Vaiṅkaṇṭha once lighted a ghee-lamp in the presence of Viṣṇu in Kārttikeya and returned home. At that time a rat came there and began to drink the ghee. Then the lamp blazed into a flame. The rat was terrified at this, and ran away. But by the grace of Viṣṇu the rat got deliverance from all its sins.

That rat was killed by snake-bite. The men of Yama came with ropes. Instantly the messengers of Viṣṇu also came on Garuḍa. Yama’s men got afraid of Viṣṇu’s messengers and humbly asked them: “For what goodness of him are you taking this great sinner to Vaikunṭha?” They replied: “He had blazed a lamp before the presence of Viṣṇu. That act has earned for him a place in Vaikunṭha. The goodness earned by lighting a lamp with devotion and love in Kārttikeya, could be described only by Mukunda.” After that the rat was taken to Vaikunṭha.

VAIMĀṆIKA. A holy place. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 23, that those who bathe in this holy place could freely walk about in the world of the celestial maids.

VAIMITRA. One of the Saptamātris (seven mothers). They are Vaimitrā, Kāki, Halimā, Brhadā, Aryā and Palālā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Stanza 10).

VAIṌNATEYA I. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).

VAIṌNATEYA II. Son of Vinatā. (Garuḍa).

VAIṌNYA. Another name of emperor Pṛthu. (See under Pṛthu).

VAIṌRĀJA One of the Saptapīṭras (Seven Manes). The Saptapīṭra are, Vairāja, Agniśātta, Somapā; Gāhapatya, Ekaśriga, Caturveda and Kāla. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 46).

VAIṌRĀMAS. A caste of people in Ancient India. The people of this caste gave Dharmaṇaputra, various kinds of jewels and other costly things as presents and then attended the Rājasūya of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 12).

VAIṌRĀTA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26, that this Vaiṛāta was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Bhīmaśena.

VAIṌŚAKHA. A month. This month comes after the month of Cāitra and before the month of Jyeṣṭha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, that by observing the fast of taking food only once, daily in this month, one could acquire prominence among kinsmen and people of one’s own caste.

VAIṌŚAKHAVRATA. See under Dhrūtabuddhi.

VAIṌŚALÁ. A city. This city was founded by King Viśāla, who belonged to the dynasty of Diṣṭa. Because Nābāha, the son of Diṣṭa had married a woman from Viṣṇyczaste, he also became Viśāya. The writings of Vatsa, the son of Bhalandana of this family, are included in the Rgveda. The differentiation of castes was not so strict in those days as today. It is not known in what country Diṣṭa and his people Anaghas lived. The Kings Karandhamha, his son Avikṣit and his son Marutta of this dynasty were great and valiant. Marutta had performed both horse sacrifice (aśvamedha) and imperial consecration (Rājasūya). To Trṣṇabindu, who was in the tenth generation from Marutta, a son was born named Viśāla. This Viśāla founded a city and lived there. That city is called Vaiśāla. Many of the scholars are of opinion that this city Vaiśāla is the same as Ujjayinī. It is stated in Mahābhārata that Somadatta of the seventh generation from Viśāla had performed ten aśvamedhas (horse-sacrifices).

VAIṌŚALÁKṢA. The Law of conduct of Brahmā. Since Śiva, who is Viśālakṣa (far-sighted) had collected and abridged them, it came to be called Vaiśalākṣa. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 82).
VAISALINI. The daughter of King Visāla. She was married by Avikṣit, the son of Karandhama. The famous Marutta was the son born to this couple. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapters 119-126).

VAISAMPAYANA.
1) General information. A prominent disciple of Vyāsa. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, that the main disciples of Vyāsa were Asita, Devala, Vaśampayana, Samantu, Jaimini, Paila and some others. (See under Bhārata).
2) Other details.
(i) It was Vaśampayana who told the story of Bhārata composed by Vyāsa, to King Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 20).
(ii) Vaśampayana told Janamejaya the story of Bhārata at the instruction of Vyāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 22).
(iii) Vaśampayana praised Mahābhārata and spoke of its greatness. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 12).
(iv) Once Vaśampayana was overpowered by ignorance, and he killed a Brahmin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 36, that in spite of it he attained heaven.

VAISNAVACĀPA. The bow of Viṣṇu. (For further details see under Viṣṇu, para 7, sub-section 7).

VAISNAVADHARMAPARVA. A sub-section of Vaiśvedhika Parva in Mahābhārata.

VAŚRAVANA. Kubera. (See under Kubera).

VAŚVADÉVA (M). A sacrifice. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, that a brahmin should perform this sacrifice to protect himself from hurts caused by oven, threshing stone, axe, cutting knife, and other weapons. This sacrifice could be performed in a cavity for kindling fire on the floor bestmeared with cowdung and mud. It should not be done in an ordinary oven meant for cooking, in iron oven, in earthenware or on ordinary floor. As all the deities are having faces of fire, the sacrificial fire should not be kindled by fanning the flame with hand, winnow, hide of black antelope or cloth. By fanning the flame with cloth, the sacrificer will contract disease; by winnowing he would sustain loss of wealth; and death, by fanning with hand. Plums, fruits, roots, curd, ghee etc. could be used as burnt offerings. When these are not available, firewood, roots of herbs, grass etc. could be used instead. Things to be offered as burnt-offerings should be purified, first by sprinkling ghee on them. In the absence of ghee, milk, curd and water may be used. Using things which are unfit as burnt-offerings will invite bad results.

In Vaśvavdeva-sacrifice, half-burnt firewood used in cooking, should never be used. So also salts of any kind. After finishing Vaśvavdeva, Gogrāsa (giving rice to cow) also should be done.

VAŚVANARA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 18, that this hermit stays in the palace of Indra. (Rgveda, Manuñ, 1, Anuvāka 1, Sūkta 59).

VAŚVANARA II. The first son of Agni called Bhanu. In Cāturmāya-sacrifice, this fire Vaśvānara also is worshipped along with the fire Parjanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 16).

VAŚVĀNARA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VAVĀHIKA PARVA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This comprises chapters 192 to 198 of Ādi Parva.

VAVĀHIKA PARVA II. A sub-section of Viśāra Parva. This comprises Chapters 70 to 72 of Viśāra Parva.

VAVAVSATA MANU. The seventh Manu. There is a description of Manu Vaiavasata under Manvantara.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśu in the following order:—Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaiavasata Manu.
2) The incarnation of Matsya and Vaiavasata Manu. See under Avatarā, Section "Matsya."
3) Wife and children. The wife of Vaivasvata Manu was Śraddhā. Many sons were born to the couple. Prominent among them were, Yama, Yami, Atiśvā, kumāras, Revaṇa, Suyumma, Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śaryāti, Diśa, Dṛṣṭa, Kariśa, Nraśyanta, Nābhāga, Pradhra and Kavī.

VAVAVSATA TĪRTHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 39, that he who bathes in this holy bath would become himself a holy tirtha.

VAŚYA. One of the four castes. (For further details see under Vāraṇa and Cāturvāraṇa).

VAṬALTĀ. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 67).

VAṬANTĀ. Son of Āpa, one of the eight Vasus. Āpa had four sons named, Vaiḍanta, Śrma, Śanta and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arīśa 1, Chapter 15).

VAṬARĀMI I. A hell. (See under Kāla, the Section Naraka).

VAṬARĀMI II. The name of the river Ganges when it flows through the world of the Manes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 22).

VAṬARĀMI III. A river. The prominence of this river is given below:
(i) This river stays in the court of Varuṇa and glorifies him. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 20).
(ii) This river gives remission of sins. There is a spot called Viḍ市中心thra, in this river. He who bathes in this holy place would shine like the moon. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 6).

VĀJA. A son of Sudhanvā, whose father was Aṅgiras. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Manuñ 1, Aṣṭaka 1, Sūkta 111, that Sudhanvā had three sons named Rbhu, Viṃbvan and Vāja.

VĀJAPeya. A sacrifice.

VĀJASANEYA. A religion or religious book (scripture). At the end of Kalijuga, people will become thieves and lose all good qualities, and moreover fifteen branches of the Veda Vājasaneya alone will be accepted as Regulations of life. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VĀJASANEYA (VĀJASANEYAS). A group of Priests. Priest Yājñavalkya was one of the disciples of Yajur Veda-group of Viṣṇa. Of the line of disciples, Yājña-valkya had fifteen disciples. They were called Vājasaneyas or Vājasaneyas.

The Yajus—collection received from the god Sun were divided into fifteen groups by Yājña-valkya and given to each of his disciples. From that day onwards, his disciples became famous by the name Vājasaneyas. (Br. U 7-3-7).
VĀJRAVISIONHA. A child of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).

VĀJRAVYUDHA ('Thunderbolt'). The famous weapon of Indra.

1) The making of this weapon. In olden days a fierce asura named Vṛtrā was born. The Kālākeyas and many other asuras became his followers. They began to create havoc in the world, and cause harm to the Devas. At last under the leadership of Indra, the Devas went to Brahā and informed him of their grievances and requested for advice as to the way of killing Vṛtrā. Brahā told them that only with a weapon made of the bone of the hermit Dādhicā, could Vṛtrā be killed. The Devas went to the bank of the river Sona and saw the hermit Dādhicā, who was the foremost of munificent men, doing penance there. Indra took him the purpose of their visit. He told the Devas to take his bone, if it was useful to them. Saying this he forsook his body. The Devas took the bones of the hermit and gave them to Vīśvakarmā who made a powerful weapon with them and gave that to Indra. They named the weapon the ‘thunderbolt’. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 100).

2) The face of Subrahmanya was cut. Once Indra was defeated by Narakaśura. He went to the Himālayas and hid himself there. Unable to see their King Indra, the devas went to Subrahmanya. When Indra knew this, he thought that Subrahmanya had taken possession of the world of the gods. So he came and fought with Subrahmanya. The thunderbolt of Indra touched the face of Subrahmanya and wounded him. From the blood which flowed from the face of Subrahmanya two noble men appeared who eventually became warriors of Subrahmanya. (Kathāsārītasa, Lāvāṇakalamba, Taranāga 6).
3) Daily thunderbolt. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 5 and Anśa 2, Chapter 8, a process by which thunderbolt is made daily in the evening from the water particles thrown by Brahmans when they recite the spell Gāyatrī, is described.

In the evening, the fierce giants called the Mandehas wish to eat the Sun. Prajāpati had given them a curse that though their bodies would not perish they would daily meet with death. So there is a fight between these giants and the sun daily in the evening. At that time the Brahmans recite the spell Gāyatrī with the Brahmapervading syllable ‘OM’, and throw up water. This water becomes the Vajra weapon, and burns the giant.

4) The thunderbolt became a tiger. The hermits Nārada and Parvata once went to the palace of the King Śrījaya. The King worshipped them and served them for a long time, as a result of which a son was born to him. Indra decided to lessen the superior power of these hermits. Once the son of the King, who was a mere boy, was playing in the forest. At the instruction of Indra, the thunderbolt took the form of a tiger and went to the forest and killed the boy. Śrījaya became very sad. Nārada and Parvata brought the boy to life again and gave him to the King. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 30).

VAJRI I. Indra who wields the weapon Vajra (q.v)

VAJRI II. An eternal god concerned in offering to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anu āsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

VAKA (BAKA). See under Baka.

VĀKĀ. The daughter of the giant Mālīyavān. Viśravas married her. Three sons Trīśāras, Dūṣaṇa and Vidyujñīva and a daughter Anupālīka were born to the couple (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3: 8: 39-56; Vāyu Purāṇa, 70 34-50). But in mahā Bhārata, mention is made only about three wives of Viśravas, named Puspotkaṇā, Rākā and Mālimi.

VAKA DĀLBHYA (BAKA DĀLBHYA). A hermit of Ancient India. The information obtained from Mahābhārata about this hermit is given below.

(He was a member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhīra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11). (ii) Once Vaka Dālbhya lectured to Yudhiṣṭhīra about the greatness of Brāhmaṇās. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 6). (iii) On another occasion he described the welfare of eternal beings to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 19). (iv) Once he stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who was going to Hastināpura, and conversed with him on the way. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 65). (v) The hermit Baka Dālbhya once talked about how the kingdom of Dhītāraṣṭra would be made burnt offering to fire. (M.B. Sālā Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 5).

VAKANAKHA (BAKANAKHA). One of Viśvāmitra’s sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahā Bhārata Anu āsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 58).

VĀKPĀRUSYA (Using harsh words). One of the wrongs brought under the rule of chastisement in ancient India. Without caring for the truth or falsity, a man praising another with a view to tease or offend him, is Vākpārūṣya. The teasing may be aimed at somebody with disabled members of the body or disabled organs of sense. Besides, using heart-rending words also comes under this crime. In olden days kings issued orders to fine anybody found guilty of this crime. Ordinarily the fine was 25 Panas. If the crime was committed against one who was below the level of the culprit the fine to be paid was only half. If harsh words were used against other women or people of a higher level the fine was double. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 258).

VAKRA. A King in Ancient India. He is known by the name Dantavakra. (For further details see under Dantavakra).

VAKṢOGRIVA. Viśvāmitra’s son, who was an expounder of Vedas. (M.B. Anu āsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 53).

VALA (BALA). An asura. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, how Indra killed this asura.

One day Vala went to the sea for his evening worship. Devendra saw the asura, shining with the radiance of celibacy and the divine rod and deer-like, praying on the sea-shore. Instantly Indra cut him into two with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Vala fell down motionless. Mention is made about this asura in Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 4. (For further details see under Bala).

VALAKA (BALAKA). A forester. (For further details see under Balaka).

VALAKASVA. See under Balakāśva.

VĀLAKHILYAS. See under Bālakihlyas.

VALALA. See under Ballava.

VALGUJARAGHA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Brahmanādīn. (See under Viśvāmitra).

VALIMUKHA. A famous monkey in the army of Śrī Rāma. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kaṇḍa, Sarga 4, Verse 52).

VALIŚIKHA. See under Bālīskha.

VAKAL. See under Balava.

VALLABHA I. The husband of Hemaprabhā, an unchaste woman. (See under Hemaprabhā).

VALLABHA II. Son of Balakāśva. He was a righteous King. Vallabha had a son named Kuśika. (M.B. Anu āsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 5).

VĀLMIKI I. A hermit who was the first among poets and the author of Rāmāyaṇa.

1) General information. Knowledge about this hermit who was the first among the poets of Bhārata, is scanty. So we have to depend mainly on some hearsay for the life history of this sage. It is said that Vālmiki was the tenth son of Varuṇa. But in his younger age he fell into the hands of wicked people and became a wicked man, like his friends. Then his name was not Vālmiki. Being a father, he had to support his family. For this purpose he used to plunder travellers. Once he happened to catch the Saptarṣiṣ (the seven hermits) who passed by that way. The hermits asked him whether his wife and children would share the sins he had incurred by plundering. The plunderer could not answer that unexpected question. He ran home and asked his wife and children if they would share the sins incurred by him. They were not prepared to do so. In a moment his life underwent a thorough change. He ran to the Saptarṣis and knelt before them. They imparted to the forester, knowledge of the Vedas. The forester sat under a tree and began to sing ‘Rāma Rāma’. Days and months and years passed, unknown to him. He did not know that white ants had built a shelter above him. After several years the Saptarṣis returned by that way. They broke the ant-hill and took the hermit out. Because he came out of Vālmīkī or white-ant-hill he came to be known as Vālmīkī. He built his hermitage on the bank of the river Tamasā and lived there with his disciples. It was at this place that he composed the famous poem Rāmāyaṇa. (For further details see under Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details.
(i) Vālmīkī shines in the palace of Indra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).
(ii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 27, that Vālmīkī met Śrī Krṣṇa who was going to Hastināpura as a messenger of the Pāṇḍavas.
(iii) Sātyaki recited a poem composed by Vālmīkī, after having killed Bhūrīravas in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Stanza 57).
(iv) Vālmīkī told Yudhiṣṭhira of the benefits of his devotion to Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 6).

VĀLMĪKĪ II. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 11).

VĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

VĀMADEVĀ. An ancient hermit.
1) Vāmadeva and Śala. Three sons named Śala, Dala and Bala were born to King Parīkṣit by his wife Suṣo-bhanā, a princess of Maṇḍūka. In due course, King Parīkṣit anointed his eldest son Śala as King and went to the forest for penance. Once Śala went to the forest to hunt. While chasing a deer, the King asked his charioteer to bring horses capable of overtaking the deer. The charioteer told the King that such horses were available at the hermitage of Vāmadevā. They went to the hermitage of Vāmadevā and got the horses on condition that they would be returned. After the hunting, Śala reached his capital. Seeing the beauty and the vigorous nature of the horses, the King did not like to part with them. Vāmadevā sent his disciple to the court of the King to take the horses back. But the King sent him back empty-handed. Vāmadevā got angry. He came in person and demanded his horses. The King replied that Brahmins did not require such horses. While these two were quarrelling with each other, some fierce giants came there and pierced Śala with a trident and killed him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192).

2) Other information.
(i) He was a friend of Vasiṣṭha and a priest of Daśaratha. (Vālmīkī Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāpāla. Sarga 7, Stanza 3).
(ii) Maṇḍala 4 of Rygeda was composed by Vāmadevā.
(iii) Vāmadevā was a hermit who had praised the A’vinīdevas when he was in his mother’s womb. (Rygeda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 119).
(iv) Once Vāmadevā tried to eat the flesh of a dog because of hunger, with a view to save Brahmins. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 10, Stanza 106).
(v) He was a prominent member in the assembly of Indra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17).
(vi) Once Vāmadevā gave advice about righteousness to King Vasumānas. (M.B. Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 92).

VĀMĀDEVA II. A King. Arjuna defeated this King during his regional conquest of the North. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11).

VĀMADEVĀ III. One of the seven sons born to Manu by his wife Śatārūpā. It is stated in Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 4, that the Brahmin was born from the face, Kṣatriya from the hand, Vaśiṣṭha from the calf of the leg and Śūdra from the foot, of Vāmadevā, who was an incarnation of Śiva. This Vāmadevā who had five faces and a trident in his hand, fought with Candra, when Tārā the wife of Bhṛgaspati was carried away by Candra. (Matsya Purāṇa, 4-13).
and ceremonies of the sacrifice saw Vāmana coming slowly to the sacrificial hall. They wondered whether it was the Sun, Sanatkumāra or Agni (Fire) coming to see the sacrifice. While they were standing thus, Vāmana with his umbrella, rod and water pot filled with water entered the sacrificial hall. Mahābali welcomed Vāmana and asked him the purpose of his visit. Vāmana said "Oh King! Your words are sweet. Noble Asura! give me three feet of ground which I measure with my feet. That is all what I want." Mahābali agreed. The teacher-priest Śukra felt some doubts regarding the identity of Vāmana. So he secretly told Mahābali that the boy Vāmana was none other than Mahāviṣṇu and as such, he should not give any promise. But Mahābali had already given the promise. He refused to go back upon his words. The priest Śukra got angry at this and cursed Mahābali thus: "You boast that you are wise and learned. But you are disobedient, slow-witted and unwise. So all your prosperities will be destroyed."

Though he was cursed, he did not deviate from the path of truth. He gave the promised ground to Vāmana by pouring water with the water brought in golden pot by his queen Vindhyāvali. The names, Āsanā and Kōtarā also are used in the Purāṇas for Vindhyāvali the wife of Mahābali. She came out for the purpose wearing golden ornaments. Mahābali himself washed the feet of Vāmana, who instantly began to grow and became large beyond imagination. Everybody on the spot was amazed at the unimaginable bigness of Vāmana. On that huge figure, Mahābali saw the priest, the performers of sacrificial rites, the sacrificial hall, the universe, the elements, the qualities the senses, the mind, the individual spirits, and at the feet of the figure the world Rāsātāla. He saw the earth on its feet, mountains below the knees, birds on its knees, the Maruts on its thighs, evening on its clothes, the Prajāpatis on its privities, the noble and mighty asuras on its loins, the sky on its navel, the oceans on its stomach, Dharma (duty) in its heart, rightness and truth on its breasts, Mahālakṣmy holding lotus on its chest, songs of Sāman and all other voices in its neck, all the gods beginning with Indra on its hands, the points (directions) on its ears, the ether on its head, the clouds on its hair, breaths in its nose, the sun in its eyes, fire on its face, the Vedas in its words, Varuna in its tongue, day and night agreement and disagreement in its winkling and anger on its forehead. In its touch there was desire, in its radiance there was water, in its buttocks lawlessness, sacrifice in its steps, death in its shadow, illusion in its laugh, medicines in its hairs, rivers in its veins, stones in its nails, Brahmā in its intelligence, hermits, devas etc. in its life-breaths. Thus the figure was seen by Mahābali. Vāmana had trodden on the whole of the earth, which was completely under the cont ol of Mahābali, with one foot, filled the whole of the sky with his large body and the four points were filled with his hands. The second step was put on Maharloka, Janaloka and Tapoloka (three worlds). No spot was left in the universe for a third step.

Vāmana said: "You have given me three feet of ground. I have measured two feet of ground. Show me the place to measure the third step. I have measured the earth with one step and the heaven with the second step. You have seen it. If you cannot keep your promise you had better go down to Pātāla." Bali requested him to place the third step on his head. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Mahābali and thrust him down to Pātāla.

Vāmana brought Indra to the spot and anointed him as the ruler of heaven, in the presence of all the gods and hermits. Indra sent Vāmana with the Lokapālas (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa) in a divine Vimāna to the world of Viṣṇu. (Bhāgavata Skandha 8).

b) The second story of the incarnation of Vāmana. Dhundhu, an asura boy, was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. That asura did penance and pleased Brahmā. He made a request that he should not be killed by Indra and the other gods or anybody else. Brahmā, who was pleased at his penance, gave him the boon he asked. The boy Dhundhu, at the beginning of the fourth Kaliyuga, during the period of Hiranyakaśipu, went to heaven and defeating Indra and the other Devas, established his rule there as Indra. The mighty Hiranyakaśipu was travelling on the mountain Mandara as an official under Dhundhu.

The defeated and grief-stricken Devas went to the world of Brahmā and lived there. Dhundhu, who knew this, wanted to drive them out of that place also. He requested Śukra, the priest and teacher of asuras, to tell him the means of doing it. Śukra said, "Devendra was enabled to enter the presence of Brahmā, because he had performed one hundred horse-sacrifices. "Hearing this, Dhundhu, with the permission of the teacher Śukra, began to perform sacrifice in the holy place called Prācīna tirtha. Hearing that Dhundhu had begun the horse-sacrifice, Indra and the Devas trembled with fear and, leaving the world of Brahmā, went to the world of Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Bhagavān came to know of everything and consoled them and sent them back.

After this Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a Vāmana and jumped into the Devikājala and lay aloft like a piece of dry wood. Dhundhu and the hermits saw by chance, Vāmana sinking and coming up in the water. They took the Vāmana-Brahmin out of water and asked him how he had fallen in water. Vāmana replied with shiver:—"In the family of Varuna there was a Brahmin named Prabhāsa, who was a scholar. I am Gātībhāsa, the younger of his two sons. After the death of father, I requested my brother to divide the property of our father. My brother quoted several rules and said that I was not entitled to get any portion of my father's wealth. I spoke against him and getting angry he caught me by my hair and threw me into the river. It is a year since I, being not able to swim, began to sink and come up in this river. Thus you have seen me here."

The Bhārgavas who were present there, requested Dhundhu thus. "Oh! King of the asuras! Be pleased to give this boy a well-furnished house, servant-maids and plenty of wealth." Hearing this Dhundhu said to Vāmana. "I will provide you with wealth, servant-maids, house, gold, cows, land, clothes etc." Vāmana humbly said to Dhundhu "Oh Lord! I do not want any wealth. It is my desire for wealth that has brought me to this plight. I request you to give me only three feet of ground."

As soon as the asura-King complied with his request, Vāmana began to grow like the moon. He assumed the shape of Trivikrama to measure each of the three worlds with a foot. In two steps he measured all the worlds. Vāmana whose body was bigger than Mahāmeru became angry when he did not see place to measure the third step, and fell on Dhūndhu. By this heavy fall there appeared a great cavity thirty thousand yojanas deep. Bhagavān Viṣṇu took the asura Dhūndhu and threw him into that deep pit with a mighty force, and by a shower of dust he filled the cavity.

Indra with the Devas occupied the world of Gods. Leaving the asura King in the sea of dust, Bhagavān jumped into the river Kālindī and disappeared. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

VĀMANA II. One of the eight elephants supporting the universe. This elephant was one of the four sons of Irāva. Airāvata, Supratika and Aṭjana were the other three. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 3 : 7 : 292). This Vāmana was the conveyance of a famous giant in the army of Ghaṭotkaca during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 56).

VĀMANA III. A holy place situated on the borders of Kurukṣetra. By bathing in the particular spot called Viṣṇupāda, in this holy place and worshipping Vāmana, one could enter the world of Viṣṇu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 103).

VĀMANA IV. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 13, that those who worship Hari (Viṣṇu) in this place will never become miserable.

VĀMANA V. A mountain in the Krauṇca Island. (Mahābhārata, Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 12).

VĀMANABHĀṬṬĀBAṆA. A great Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 15th century. He has written several poems and plays. His poetic works are ‘Nalāḥhyudaya’ and ‘Raghuṇāthacarita’. The former consists of eight Kāṇḍas and the latter, thirty Kāṇḍas.

It is stated that Vāmanabhāṭṭābaṇa was the teacher of Vidyāśaraṇya. Besides these two major works, he had written several poems and dramas. Imitating the poem ‘Meghasandesha’ of Kālidāsa, he had written a poetic work of the same type called ‘Harhassandesha’. A minor Drama called Śrīgirābhāṣāṇa was written by this Vāmana. It is said that this drama was acted at Vijayanagara. The two plays, named—Pārvatiparīṇaya and ‘Kanakarekhā’ were also written by the same poet.

VĀMANAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

VĀMANIKA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23).

VAMKṢU. A river which is famous in the Purāṇas. The low-caste people who lived on the basin of this river, came to the Rājaśīya (imperial consecration) of Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17).

VAMŚĀ. A daughter born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 45).

VAMŚAGULMA. A holy bath. The rivers Śoṇa and Narmadā start from this bath. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 9, it is stated that by visiting this holy bath one could obtain the fruits of performing a horse-sacrifice.

VAMŚAMULAKA. A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 41, that if a bath is taken in this holy place one could bring about the uplift of one’s race.

VAMŚAVALI. (GENEALOGY). The genealogy of the characters in the Purāṇas is given separately at the end of this book.

VĀMYA. Name of the horse of the hermit Vāmadeva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41).

VANAPARVA. An important Parva in Mahābhārata.

VANAPRASṬHA. (House-holder in the forest). One of the four stages of life. (See under Āśrama).

VANARA (MONKEY). Monkeys are given a prominent place in the Purāṇas. Considering them as born in the family of Hanūmān, an ardent devotee of Śrī Rāma, some worship monkeys. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa that the monkeys got a prominent place first among the gods and spirits. It is stated in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kānḍa, Sarga 33, that the leaders of the monkeys were Bāli, Sugrīva, Aṅgada, Mahīnda, Gavayya, Dividvā, Gavākṣa, Gaja, Sarabha, Sūryākṣa, Hanūmān, Vidyumālī, Virabhā, Subāhu, Nala, Kumuda, Jāmbavān, Tāra, Supāṭṭala, Sunetra, Nila and Dadhivakra.

The social life of the monkeys, is described as follows in the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kānḍa, Sarga 33. ‘Mahendra mountain, the Himālayas, the Vindhya mountain, the peaks of Kailāsa and Śveta mountain, Mandara mountain etc. are the places mostly inhabited by monkeys. On the mountains shining like the rising sun, on the east of the western ocean also monkeys live. The Monkeys which inhabit black soil are blue in colour. Monkeys which live in red arsenic caves are yellow in colour. Those which live in Mahā Meru and Dhūmra (smoky) mountain have the colour of the rising sun and are drunkards.’

VANASPATI I. Those trees which produce fruits without flowering are called Vanaspatī according to Manusmr̥ti Chapter 1, Stanza 47. Atti (fig tree) is an example. (Apuṣpā phalavanto ye te vanaspatayāsrmr̥thā).

VANASPATI II. One of the seven sons of the King Ghrtr̥ṣpaṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VĀNAVA. A country famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

VANAVĀSIKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 58).

VANĀYU I. A son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25, that he was the most prominent of the ten sons of Danu.

VANĀYU II. A son born to Urvāśi from Purūravas. The sons of Urvāśi were Ayus, Dhīmān, Amāvas, Dr̥ṛḥāyu Śatāyu and Vanāyu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VANĀYU III. A country in ancient India: Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56.

VAṆCLUDA. A bird. The cry of this bird, is believed to forebode victory. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka Kāṇḍa Sarga 69, Stanza 22).

VANDANA. A hermit mentioned in Rgveda. Once this hermit was pushed into a well by Asuras. But he was saved by the Āśvinidevas. (Rgveda, Maniḍala 1, Anuvāka 1, Sūktam 116).

VANDANĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).
VANDĪ (BANDĪ, VĀNDĪNA). A scholar and scientist in the palace of King Janaka. He defeated the hermit Kahọḍaka in an argument and dipped him in water. (For further details see under Asṭāvakra).

VĀNDĪNA. See under Vandi.

VANEYU. A King who was the grandson of emperor Pūru and the son of Rudrāśva. Vaneyu was born to Rudrāśva by a celestial woman named Mītrakeśi. Ten sons named Vaneyu, Ṛceyu, Kaśṣeyu, Krpaṇeyu, Ṣhaṇḍileyu, Jaleyu, Śaṭeya, Dharmeyu and Saṇṭacetyu, were born to this celestial woman. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 8).

VAṆGA. An important state in ancient India. The present name of this country is Bengal. Several statements occur in the Purāṇas about Vaṅga. The following are the statements about Vaṅga given in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Arjuna visited this country during his pilgrimage. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 9).
(ii) Bhimasena attacked Vaṅga. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 23).
(iii) The Kings of Vaṅga visited Yudhiṣṭhira with presents. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18).
(iv) Karna conquered this country during his regional conquest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 8).
(v) In the Bhārata battle the King of Vaṅga confronted Ghaṭotkaca and was defeated. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6).

(vi) Once Śri Kaṭṭha conquered the country of Vaṅga. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15).
(vii) Paraṭurāma exterminated the Kaṭṭriyas of Vaṅga. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12).
(viii) The low castes of Vaṅga attacked the sacrificial horse led by Arjuna who killed every one of them. (M.B. Aśyamedha Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 29).

VAṆGRDA. An asura. It is mentioned in Rgyveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka I, Sūkta 10, that the Kings of Āiti-thīyā and Riṣīvā, with their armies surrounded the cities of the asuras Karanā, Paryāya and Vaneyda and that Indra helped the two Kings.

VAṆJULA. See under Vidura II.

VAPUŚ, A daughter of Daśa. Dharmadeva married her. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arśa I, Chapter 7).

VAPUŚ II. A celestial maid. She made a futile effort to hinder the penance of the hermit Durvāsas, and by the curse of the hermit she had to take birth as the daughter of Kundāra by Menakā in the next birth. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, I, 1, 49, 56; 2, 41).

VAPUŚMAN. Son of Saṅkrandana, the King of Vidarbha. Dama, a famous King of Diśa dynasty carried away by stealth Šumaṇa, the daughter of Ćaruvarma, the King of Daśārja, in consequence of which Vapuśman and Dama became enemies.

Vapuśman waited for an opportunity to take revenge and when a convenient moment came, he killed Nariṣyaṇa the father of Dama. Indrasena the mother of Dama told him of his father’s murder and then jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband, she died. Because of grief at the loss of his parents and anger towards the slayer, Dama started with a mighty army and engaged Vapuśman in a fierce battle. He killed Vapuśman in the battle and with his blood he made offerings to the spirits of his parents. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 133).

VAPUŚMATI. Daughter of the King of Sindhu. She became the wife of Mārutta. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 133).

VAPUŚTAMA. The prominent queen of King Janamejaya. She was the daughter of Suvarṇavarmā, the King of Kāśi. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 2). Vapuśtama had two sons, Śatānika and Saṅkukarna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 86).

VARADA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

VARADANA. A holy place near Dvārakā. It was here that Durvāsas gave Bhagavān Śrī Kaṭṭha boons (Vra). From that day this became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms.

VARADASYANGAMA. A holy place. Those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35).

VARĀHĀ. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 17, that this hermit stayed in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VARĀHĀ II. A holy place in the middle of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 88, that Mahāviṣṇu stayed in this place for a while in the shape of Varāh (Boar) and that those who bathe in this holy bath would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Agniṣṭoma.

VARĀHĀ III. (Boar). One of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

1) Need for this incarnation. Jaya and Vijaya, two doorkeepers of Mahāviṣṇu showed disrespect towards the famous hermits Sanaka and others who went to visit Mahāviṣṇu. The angry hermits cursed them to take birth as asuras. Accordingly Jaya and Vijaya took birth as the two asuras Hīranyāka and Hīranyakaśipu and were born from Prajāpati Kaṭṭha by his wife Diti. Even their birth itself was inauspicious. Once, while Kaṭṭha was carrying on evening worship, his wife was filled with libido. She embraced Kaṭṭha. Because she got pregnancy in an inauspicious moment, two asura sons were born. At the time of their birth darkness spread over the whole of the world, and some ill omens were seen. The Devas (gods) trembled. The elder son was called Hīranyakaśa and the second son was called Hīranyakaśipu. As Hīranyakaśipu grew up he began to quarrel with the Devas. When the fight grew fierce, he picked up the earth in his hands as a ball and went under water. There was left only water. The Devas went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed to him in order to get the earth back.

At this time Manu Svāyambhuvha, the son of Brahmā, was living with his father looking after his welfare. The father, who was pleased with the services of his son said, “My dear son, you should worship Devī, who will be pleased with your devotion and will bless you. If she is pleased with you, you will become a famous Prajāpati.” Hearing the words of Brahmā, Svāyambhuvha worshipped Devī with ardent devotion, deep meditation and severe vows and penance, at which Jagadamba was pleased. She appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. Manu requested that he should be permitted to carry on creation without any obstruction. Devī gave him permission. Manu returned to his father Brahма and said, “Father, point out to me a solitary place. I will sit there and create subjects by the blessings of Devi.” Only when he heard the request of his son, did Brahма begin to think about the exigency of providing his son with such a place. For, the earth was completely under water. For a long time even Brahма was being subjected to much inconvenience to carry on creation. Only Bhагаван Adи Nарāyaṇа (Viṣṇu) could do anything in this matter. So Brahма with the Manus, hermits and others began to meditate on Mahāviṣṇu.

2) Incarnation. Instantly the young one of a Boar jumped out of the nose of Brahма through his breath. That divine figure of Boar stood in the air and began to grow. Within a few moments, it became a colossal Being. It grew up as big as an elephant. Soon it became as large as a mountain. Seeing this, Brahма and the others stood in amazement. The Boar made a grunt in a loud roaring sound. The people of Janaloka, Satyaloka etc. understood that it was the sound of Mahāviṣṇu. They raised glory and praise to Bhагаван, who heard all these praises, but without condescending to tell anything, looked at all of them with grace and love, and with a mighty force jumped into the sea. It was immensely troubled by the manes of God Almighty. Varuṇа prayed to him to save him from them. Bhагаван folded his mane and went down to the deep water and made a search for the earth. The Boar walked smeling and snorting and found out the earth. He slowly lifted it on his tusks and started from there. On the way, the fierce and wicked Hiranyākṣa hindered him. Bhагаван Viṣṇu used his club Nandaka and killed Hiranyākṣa. It was besmeared with his blood; Mahāviṣṇu came up to the surface of water with the earth. He set the earth firm over the water. Thus Brahма gave Manu a place in which earth which floated on the water like a lotus-leaf, and empowered him to perform creation.

3) Incarnation of Boar again. The goddess Earth, the deity of earth which was raised to the surface of water, fell in love with Mahāviṣṇu and embraced him. He embraced her in return. These mutual embraces continued for one complete Deva-vara (year of God) and consequently the goddess Earth became tired and weak and unconscious. So the earth slid down a little under water. Bhагаван took the form of a Boar again and lifted the earth to its original place and returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 3; Deví Bhāgavata Skandhas 8 and 9; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Pādma Purāṇa, Bhumikhaṇḍa, Chapter 91).

VARĀḤA IV. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Sahābh Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 18).

VARĀHAKARṇa. A Yakṣa (demi god), This Yakṣa remains in the palace of Kūbera. (Mahābhārata, Sahābh Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 16).

VARĀHAMBHA. An asura. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva. Chapter 227, Stanza 52.

VARĀHAPURĀṆA. See under Purāṇa.

VARAMANI. A beetle made of jewel. Brahма had given a boon that only he who fought with this jewel-beetle in his mouth could kill Pāṭala Rāvana. This secret was known only to the giants, such as Rāvana and others. This Vāraṇaṇi was kept in an underground cell of a harem near the Kāli temple in the Pāṭala.

The battle between Rāma and Rāvana was going on. Hanumān made a fort coiling his tail like a spring and Rāma and Lākṣmaṇa stayed inside this fort. While they were sleeping, Pāṭala Rāvana made a tunnel under the earth and carried away Rāma and Lākṣmaṇa. Vibhiṣaṇa knew this, only next day morning. Instantly he sent Hanumān to Pāṭala. In accordance with the advice of Vibhiṣaṇa, Hanumān went directly to the cell in the harem, took Varaṇaṇi and put it in his mouth. Then he fought with Pāṭala Rāvana and defeated him. Thus with the help of the Vāraṇaṇi Hanumān rescued Rāma and Lākṣmaṇa. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

VARĀṆA. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vāmanā Purāṇa that the river Vāraṇa which flowed from the right leg and the river Āṣi, which started from the left leg of Bhагavān, who lies in contemplation at Prayāga, are two holy rivers. (See under Vāraṇaṇi).

VARĀṆA. A country in ancient Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, that the army of the Kauravas had surrounded this country.

VARĀṆAṆI (VARĀṆAṆI). Kāśī.

(Before reading the information given here refer to the details given about Kāśī under Kāśī and Divodāsa).

1) The name Vāraṇaṇi. Formerly this place was known as Prayāga. Later it got the name Vāraṇaṇi and then Kāśī. The name Vāraṇaṇi is originated from two rivers. Bhagavān Yogasāyī who stays in Prayāga was born from a portion of Mahāviṣṇu. From the right leg of Yogasāyī the river Vāraṇa started and from his left leg the river Āṣi started. These two rivers are praised and worshipped all over the world. The temple of Yogasāyī is situated in the place between these two rivers. As the place is situated between Vāraṇaṇi and Āṣi it is called Vāraṇaṇi. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 9).

2) Other information.

(i) Bhīṣma went to Kāśī and took Ambā, Ambikā and Ambalikā, the daughters of the King of Kāśī, to his kingdom by force. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 3).

(ii) Vāraṇaṇi is a holy place of pilgrimage. By bathing in Kapilāhrada, a holy bath there, and worshipping Saṅkara, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Rājaśṭiṣṭya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 78).

(iii) The middle part of Vāraṇaṇi is called Avimukta. Those who forsake their lives at Avimukta will obtain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 79).

(iv) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Vāraṇaṇi a prey to fire. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 76).

(v) A very great scholar named Tūładhāra Vaiśya once lived in Vāraṇaṇi. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 261, Stanza 41).

(vi) Once, in ancient days, Siva imparted to the hermit Jāigīṣṭ at this place, the eight miraculous attainments such as aśīmā, garīṁ etc. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

(vii) Vāraṇaṇi is equal to the capital city of Indra.

(viii) In ancient days a hermit named Saṅhavaṁta used to come here daily to worship Śiva. It was at this place that the emperor Marutta accepted the hermit Saṅhavaṁta as his priest. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 6 and 7).

VĀRAṆĀVATA. The place where Duryodhana built the wax-house for the Pāṇḍavas. It is believed that the modern village Varṇava, 19 miles north east to Meerut in North India, is the place where this Purāṇic Vāraṇāvata stood. Information about Vāraṇāvata found in Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Once the ministers of Dṛṣṭaraśtra made a consultation about the festival in this city. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 3).

(ii) Vāraṇāvata was one of the five villages requested for by the Pāṇḍavas, on their return after their life in the forest. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 19).

(iii) Yuyutsu, the son of Dṛṣṭaraśtra, carried on a battle here for six months. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 58).

VARANJĪ I. The wife of Vajrāngī, an asura. (For more details see under Pārvatī, Para 2).

VARANJĪ II. Wife of Saṅhavaṁta, a King of the Lunar dynasty. The father of this Varanji was Dṛṣṭadān. A son named Ahamyāti was born to Varanjī. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 14).

VARARUCĪ. An ancient Indian scholar in astronomy and astrology. (Some details regarding Vararuci are given under Bhartṛhari).

1) Birth. It is stated in Kathāsārītāgāra, Kathāpīṭhā-lambaka, Taranāga 1, that Vararuci was the rebirth of a Gaṇānāyaaka (guard of Śiva) named Puṣpadanta. Once Śiva happened to tell Pārvatī some previous stories of the Vidyādharas. Puṣpadanta eavesdropped and heard everything. Pārvatī understood this and cursed him to become a man. Accordingly Puṣpadanta was born in the city of Kaṇṭāmbi under the name Vararuci or Kaṭyaṇya. (For details about the curse see under Gunāḍhyāya).

2) Of sharp intelligence. Vararuci was born as the son of the Brahmin Somadatta at Kaṇṭāmbi. Agniṣikha was another name of Somadatta. Vasuḍattā was the mother of Vararuci. In the previous birth, Vasuḍattā was a hermit maid. Due to a curse she lost her hermit-maidhood and took birth as a woman under the name Vasuḍattā and became the wife of Somadatta.

As his father died in his childhood, Vararuci was brought up by his mother. She was in great penury after the death of her husband. One day two travellers came to her house. While they were sitting on the veranda, the sound of a conch was heard. Then the mother called Vararuci and said to him. “Son, the dance of Nanda, the friend of your father, is about to begin.” Vararuci requested his mother to let him go to the temple and see the dance so that he might learn it. Hearing this, the guests were amazed. How can one learn dance by seeing only once? That was the doubt in the minds of the travellers. “Vararuci could learn anything by hearing only once”, his mother said. As a test, they recited to him a portion from the Vedas. Vararuci repeated the portion to them without any mistake. After this the guests took the boy and showed him the dance and brought him back. The boy performed every item of the dance he saw, before the guests. They were immensely pleased.

3) Getting a teacher. The guests had actually been searching for a boy who could understand anything at the first hearing. There was reason for it. In the great city of Nandarāja, there was a great Brahmin named Saṅkharavāmi. He had two sons named Varṣa and Upavarsa. Both married and lived in separate houses. By and by Varṣa became cruel and wicked and poor. Upavarsa became learned and wealthy. The rainy season approached. In those days it was a custom for women to make a sweet food of rice flour with sugar and give it to cruel Brahmins. It was to prevent the extreme cold in the winter and the extreme heat in the summer from affecting them severely. The wife of Upavarsa made this sweet food and gave it to Varṣa. When he brought it home, his wife scolded him. Varṣa felt very sorry because of his foolishness. He gave up all his desires and began to worship Kūmaravāmi. Kūmaravāmi was pleased with him and blessed him with all kinds of knowledge. Kumāravāmi had ordered him to teach all of this knowledge to one who could learn at first hearing. From that day onwards Varṣa had been waiting for a disciple who could learn at first hearing.

During this period there lived two Brahmins named Devasvāmi and Karambhaka in the city of Vetasapura. They were friends. A son was born to each of them. The son of Devasvāmi was named Vyālī. The name of the son of Karambhaka was Indradatta. When Vyālī was a child, his father died. Seeing their grief the father of Indradatta left the country. Both of the boys, having nobody to look after them, went to perform penance, before Subhramanayasvāmi. Subhramanayasvāmi ordered them in their sleep to go to Varṣa in Pāṭalikā, the city of King Nanda, and to learn every thing from him. The boys immediately went to the city of King Nanda and enquired about the teacher Varṣa. The people told them that Varṣa was a fool. They were sorry to hear it. Still they did not turn back. They reached the house of Varṣa, and entered the house which was the abode of rats and bats, the walls of which were crumbling due to rain as it had not been thatched for a long time. The courtyard was full of Cassiatora plants. Inside the house, here and there on the floor, Cyperus-grass was growing. The wife of Varṣa who was in utter penury stood up and welcomed them. She told them about her husband. “He is waiting for a disciple who would learn everything at first hearing.” Vyālī and Indradatta agreed to bring such a disciple and they started on a journey in search of such a boy. They were the two travellers who came to the house of Vararuci. Vyālī said all about these things to the mother of Vararuci. She was very glad and said. “Everything fits well. At the birth of my son, an ethereal voice said: ‘At first hearing he will learn everything. He will learn everything from the teacher Varṣa. He will publish works in grammar and astrology’. If he has interest in good things he will get the name Vararuci. So I had been thinking how and where to find this teacher Varṣa.”

Next morning, with the permission of his mother, Vararuci started for the house of Varṣa, with Vyālī and Indradatta. They reached the house of Varṣa. Next morning they smeared and purified the floor and the three sincere and simple disciples sat facing the east. The teacher Varṣa recited to them the divine spell 'Om', and instantly all the Vedas and the ancillaries of Vedas made their appearance. The teacher commenced teaching. The three disciples learned, Vararuci hearing only once, Vyāli hearing twice and Indradatta hearing thrice. Hearing these divine recitations and repetitions which were not to be heard anywhere else, Brahmins crowded to the place. King Nanda of Pātaliputra praised the teacher Varṣa and sent him plenty of wealth and conferred on him ranks and privileges.

4) Marriage. Vararuci learned everything from the teacher Varṣa. He went with his friends once to see the Indra-festival. There, Vararuci happened to see Upakośā the daughter of Upavarsa and fell in love with her. That night he did not sleep. At last he slowly closed his eyes. A divine woman clad in white garments appeared before him. It seemed to him that the woman said to him, "You need not worry in this matter. Upakośā was your wife in the previous birth. She will marry only you. I am Sarasvatī who pervades your body." Vararuci woke up. Next day the elders came to know of this, and gave her in marriage to Vararuci.

5) Vararuci becoming a Minister. Education was finished. It was time for Vyāli and Indradatta to give presents to the teacher Varṣa. The teacher demanded a crore of Vilkas (a Venetian ducat used for neck-ornament). They were not having so much wealth. They went with Vararuci to Nanda, the King of Ayodhya, and the Brother-in-law of Vararuci. When they reached Ayodhya, they heard that the King had just died. Indradatta said "By the practice of contemplation I shall enter the body of the King. Vararuci should come and beg money of me. Till my return Vyāli must keep my body."

"The spirit of Indradatta immediately entered the King's body. The dead King rose up. People were struck with wonder. They celebrated a festival. Vyāli kept the body of Indradatta within a temple. Vararuci went to the presence of the King and begged for a crore of Vilkas. The King called his minister Sakataṭā and told him to give Vararuci a crore of Vilkas. Sakataṭā, who was an intelligent man, felt some doubt in the coming to life of the King. He decided that some one might have entered the body of the King. He ordered that every dead body in the city should be burnt. Along with the bodies, the body of Indradatta also was taken by force from Vyāli. At this time the King compelled Sakataṭā to give the beggar Vilkas. But till the dead bodies were burnt, Sakataṭā did not obey him. Because his body was burnt Indradatta had to remain in the body of the King. Sakataṭā gave Vararuci the required amount. But of what use was the money? Indradatta had become the King. The King and Vyāli made a secret consultation, as a result of which Vararuci was made the Prime Minister. Sakataṭā was charged with Brahmayatā and was put into a dungeon with his hundred sons. They were allowed fried and powdered grain and a 'ceratu' (a measure) of water as food for each.

Sakataṭā said to his sons, "My sons, all of us cannot live with so little food. The most intelligent one among us should live by eating the whole food, to take revenge on the Yoga Nanda King. Who will do so?"

Sons,—We don't think that we are powerful to do that. So you must live, father! So Sakataṭā ate the whole food and lived while his sons, one by one, died of hunger before his eyes. Sakataṭā sat in the middle of the Skeletons with the sole purpose of taking revenge. Vyāli gave the present to the teacher and went home.

Indradatta and Vararuci lived as king and minister.

6) Loss of ministership. By and by Indradatta had fallen into bad ways. The subjects were beset with famine. The people hated the king and the minister. They made a cry to bring Sakataṭā back. They obtained the permission of the king and brought Sakataṭā out of the dungeon. Sakataṭā knew that so long as Vararuci was alive, he could do nothing to the King Yoga Nanda. So he decided to wait for an opportunity, and accepted an office under Vararuci. One day Yoga Nanda went out for a walk. He saw in the Ganges the palm of a hand with five fingers. He called Vararuci and asked him what the sight was. Vararuci showed two fingers in that direction. Immediately the palm of the hand disappeared. The King was amazed at this and asked him for its meaning. He said "The meaning of showing fingers was that if five men unite together, they could accomplish anything. I showed two fingers, to mean that if two men unite together they also could achieve anything." At this reply the king was much pleased and Sakataṭā felt miserable at the intelligence of Vararuci.

On another occasion the King saw his wife looking at a Brahmin guest through the window. He got angry and ordered that Brahmin to be killed. When that Brahmin was being taken to the scaffold, a dead fish, placed for sale, laughed loud. The King asked Vararuci for its reason. Saying that he had to consider about it before giving a reply, he went out and meditated upon Sarasvatī. Devi appeared and told him, "If you climb up to the top of this palm tree and sit there to night you will understand why the dead fish laughed." Vararuci did as he was told. A fierce giantess came there with her young ones. The children began to ask her for food. The giantess told them that they would get the flesh of a Brahmin next day, and that he was not killed that day because the dead fish had laughed. The young ones asked her why the dead fish laughed. The giantess said "The wives of the kings are not chaste. In all harems men live in the guise of women. Without stopping this the king was going to kill an innocent Brahmin. That is why the dead fish laughed." Vararuci, who heard this conversation, got down when the giantess was gone. He went to the king and told him why the fish laughed. The king made a sudden search in the harem. He found out some men in the dress of women. The king honoured Vararuci and released the Brahmin. One day an artist who drew portraits, came to the palace. He drew a portrait of the king and the queen and placed it before the king. The picture was life-like. The king gave the artist several presents. Once Vararuci happened to enter the bed-room of the king. He saw the picture on the wall. The picture was beautiful. Still, considering the appearance of each part of her body the queen ought to have a mole on her loin. Vararuci put that mole in the picture. When Vararuci had gone the king entered the room and saw the mole in the picture. The king asked his servant, who that person was who had put that mole in the picture. He replied that it was Vararuci. The king thought that Vararuci had nocturnal connections with the queen. Perhaps it was in this way that Vararuci found out men in the dress of women. The king called Śakatāla to him and told him to kill Vararuci secretly. Śakatāla felt pity on Vararuci and hid him in a place. Vararuci told Śakatāla, "No body can kill me. My friend is a giant. He will come to me the moment I think of him. If I tell him he will swallow the whole world." When he heard this, Śakatāla desired to see the giant. Vararuci thought of him and the giant appeared. Śakatāla was terribly afraid of the giant. Vararuci made him disappear. Śakatāla asked him how he got the friendship of the giant. Vararuci replied, "While you were in the dungeon, a city chief was disappearing daily from this city. The king asked me to find out the reason. One night, while I was walking through the city, I saw this giant. He asked me, "Who is the most beautiful woman in this city?" I replied "Whoever falls in love with a woman, to him, that woman is the most beautiful. You who do not know this principle, are a fool." The giant had no answer. He said, "You alone have defeated me. I am glad of it. The moment you think of me I will come and help you." Saying this the giant disappeared. Thenceforward we became friends."

Śakatāla felt great respect for Vararuci. Hiranyakagupta, his son of Yoga Nanda, went for hunting. His horse ran fast and he was separated from his army and got into a deep forest far away. He ate some fruits and plums and got on a tree to rest for the night. At that time a lion chased a bear, which climbed on the same tree. The prince trembled with fear. The bear said "Do not fear. I am your friend." Both talked for a while and became fast friends. Shortly, the prince began to sleep. The lion asked the bear to push that man down. The bear said that he would not deceive his friend. The disappointed lion sat under the tree. Then the bear slept and Hiranyakagupta sat awake. The lion asked the prince to push the bear down. Thinking that he could save his life by complying with the request of the lion, he pushed the bear down. Fortunately the hold of the bear was firm and so it did not fall. The bear cursed Hiranyakagupta. "May you become mad." The king was very sorry when his son returned a mad man. The king repented that he had killed Vararuci. For this was the time when the king needed him most.

Śakatāla went to the presence of the king and said that Vararuci was still alive. In accordance with the order of the king, Śakatāla brought Vararuci. The king showed him his mad son. By the blessing of Sarasvatī, Vararuci understood that the prince had deceived his friend, and informed the king of what had happened. Immediately the prince was cured of his madness. Yoga Nanda asked Vararuci, how he knew the cause of the madness of the prince. He replied, "A man of intelligence can understand anything by symptoms and inference." He also said that in this way he knew about the mole of the queen. When the king heard this he bowed down his head. After this Vararuci left the palace. He did not stop to accept the favours of the king. Nor did he pay any heed to the compulsion of the king to stay. He reached his house. Everybody who saw Vararuci began to cry. Not knowing the reason, he stood dumbfounded. Upavāsa came to him and said that when the news about the slaughter of Vararuci reached home, Upa-kōsa got into fire and his mother died of broken heart. The grief-stricken Vararuci went to the forest for penance.

After this Śakatāla waited for an opportunity to bring Indradatta (Yoga Nanda) down. Once he had been walking out side the city when he saw a Brahmin digging a pit. Śakatāla asked him why he was digging the pit. He replied, "I stumbled on this Darbha grass. So I am rooting it out." Śakatāla resolved to make use of this Brahmin to achieve his purpose. His name was Cāṇakya. Śakatāla took Cāṇakya to the palace. A ceremony of offerings to the manes was being conducted in the Palace. Another Brahmin named Subandhu also came there. The king ordered 'āgrabhōjana' (first meal) to be given to Subandhu. Cāṇakya trembled with fury. At that time he could not eat. He took a vow that only after pacifying his anger by killing Yoga Nanda within seven days, would he tie up his lock. Cāṇakya began practising sorcery against the king. The king caught burning fever and died on the seventh day. Śakatāla killed Hiranyakagupta. After this Śakatāla made Candragupta, the son of the real Nanda who died earlier, the king. Making Cāṇakya his minister, Śakatāla went for penance.

7) Sons. See under Pākkānār.
8) The end. Vararuci began to perform penance in the Vindhīya mountain. At that time a brahmin came to the hermitage of Vararuci. He informed Vararuci of the death of Yoga Nanda. Thinking about the littleness of the pleasures of the world, he began to walk through the Vindhīya mountain when he saw the devil called Kāpa-bhūti. Telling everything to the devil Kāpa-bhūti, Vararuci started for Badaryāśrama to discard his body. On the way he saw a hermit who lived on water alone. In the meanwhile his finger was cut with the tip of Darbha grass and blood oozed from the wound. Vararuci, by his attainments, changed the blood into the juice of the herb. The hermit cried out, "Oh, I have become a man of attainments." With a laugh Vararuci said, "You have not yet overcome your egoism. I did so to test you. First of all you must overcome your egoism and become wise." After saying this Vararuci went to Badaryāśrama and reached there. He did penance there and Devi appeared. According to her advice he made a fire by contemplation and burned his body in it. Then Vararuci became the old Puspadanta and went to the presence of Śiva.

VARASTRĪ. A sister of Brhaspati. The Vasu named Prabhāsa married Varastri. This woman who was an expounder of the Vedas, pervaded all the creations by the power of harmony with the Supreme Spirit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 96: Vāyu Purāṇa, 84, 15).

VARATANTU. The preceptor of a hermit called Kautsa. (See under Kautsa).

VARATANU. A King of the Kurus. Because of his sinful deeds in the previous birth he was denied the happiness of getting children in the next birth. In the rebirth his name was Śrīdhara. He lived with his wife Prabhāvatī for a long time, but did not get children. When the hermit Vāśa came to his palace once, the King...
asked him for the reason of his remaining childless. Vyāsa replied "Oh King, hear why you have only one wife and why you do not get children. In the previous birth you had been a brahmin named Varatantu. Your wife was called Sākāri. When both of you were going somewhere once, you happened to see a low-caste child falling into water. Without paying any heed to it, you went on your way. The child was drowned. Though both of you have taken births in royal families due to the several good deeds of yours, you have become childless because of that one sinful act." According to the instruction of Vyāsa, he gave Brahmins alms of gold, clothes, oxen, pumpkin etc. and performed Bāлавrata, the rite for the sake of children. Thus he got remission of his sin. Within a year he got a son loved and respected by everyone. That handsome prince became an emperor who came to be the founder of a dynasty. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṇḍa, Chapter 6).

VARATU. A King born in the family of Mahāuhās. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 15).

VARASA. I. Son of Soma, one of the eight Vasus. Manoharā was the mother of Varasas. Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna was the next birth of Varasas. (For further details see under Abhimanyu).

VARASA II. The son of Suci, a Brahmin born in the family of Ğṛṣṭamada. This Varasas had a son called Vihavya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

VARDHAKSEMI. A mighty King of Vṛṣṇi dynasty. The following details about him are taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was a great warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Stanza 17).

(ii) He was present at the Svayāṃvara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

(iii) He confronted the Teacher Krṣṇa in the Bhārata battle and was killed by him. (M.B. Kanśa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 21).

VARDHAMĀNA. A character in the story of Paṇca-tantra. (See under Paṇcatantra).

VARDHANA. One of the sons born to Śrī Krṣṇa of his wife Mitrāvindā. (Bāgovata, Skanda 10).

VARENYA. One of the seven sons of Bṛgū. The seven sons of Bṛgū were Cyavana, Suci, Aurora, Śukra Vajrasirśa, Savana, and Varenya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 126).

VARGĀ. A celestial maid. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, describing how Vargā and her friends were changed into crocodiles and had to live in water for a long time. Once there lived an 'apārasa' (celestial maid) named Vargā in Devāryāṇa. She had four friends called Saurabhēyi, Sāmīci, Budbudā and Lātā. Once they were going to the house of Kubera their patron. On the way they saw a hermit. They saw the whole forest shining with the radiance of the power of penance of the hermit. They decided to entice the hermit somehow. With this intention they entered his hermitage. Seeing their dalliance and coquetry, the hermit got angry and cursed them to become crocodiles for a hundred years. They implored him with tears, for liberation from the curse. The hermit told them that in due course a noble man would come and get them out of water and that then they would obtain their original form. They walked towards a lake.

On the way they saw Nārada. They told him everything. He told them. "On the coast of the southern ocean there are five tirthas (holy baths) known as Agastyā, Saubhadra, Pauloma, Kārandhama and Suprasanna. You may go to these lakes and live there as crocodiles one in each. In due course Arjuna, the son of Pāṇḍu will come and redeem you."

According to the words of Nārada the five celestial maids walked to the south and reached the Paṇca-tirtha (the five holy baths) and each of them entered a lake as a crocodile. After this nobody dared to live near those holy baths. After some time Arjuna started on his pilgrimage. He passed through many places and reached the Paṇca-tirtha. He enquired why the place was forsaken by people. The hermits told him that there was a crocodile in each of the five baths and that they would eat anybody who got into the bath. Arjuna got into a lake. Immediately a crocodile came and caught hold of him. With great difficulty he dragged it out of the lake. Instantly the crocodile changed into a beautiful damsel. The celestial maid Vargā told the amazed Arjuna her story and she added that her four friends were lying in the neighbouring four lakes. Arjuna redeemed every one of them. After this, Vargā and her friends went to Devāranya and Arjuna to Mānapūra. From that day onwards the five tirthas came to be known as Nārītirthas.

VĀRTA. A King of ancient India. This King stays in the palace of Yama praising and worshipping him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10).

VARUṆA I. One of the eight guardians of the quarters.

1) Birth. Varuṇa was the son of Prajāpati, Kaśyapa born of Aditi. He was one of the twelve sons of Aditi. So he is considered to be one of the twelve Ādiyās (Sons of Aditi). The twelve Ādiyās are Dāhā, Āryaman, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Arīśa, Bhaga, Vivāśva, Pūṣa, Savitri, Tvaṣṭa and Viṣṇu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

These twelve Ādiyās were the twelve Devas (gods) known as Tuṣitas in the Manvantara of Manu Cākṣuṣa. A statement occurs in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arīśa 1, Chapter 15, that when Vaivasvata Manvantara was about to begin after the end of Cākṣuṣa Manvantara, the famous Tuṣitas united together and took birth as the sons of Kaśyapa.

2) Kingship of the waters. In Kṛtayuga the Devas approached Varuṇa and said to him. “You must be the lord of all the waters, as Indra is our protector. You can live in the heart of the ocean. All the rivers in the world, and the ocean which is their husband will obey you. You will wax and wane along with Candra (Moon).” Varuṇa agreed to comply with their request. All of them anointed Varuṇa as the King of the waters. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 47).

3) The Guardian of the quarter west. Brahmā appointed Varuṇa as the guardian of the western zone. Vaśravāna once did penance before Brahmā, and when Brahmā appeared before him, he made a request that he should be appointed as one of the guardians of the quarters. Brahmā replied. “I have already selected Indra, Varuṇa and Yama as guardians of the points. I was thinking who, the fourth, should be, when you came. So from this day onwards, Indra shall be the guardian of the East, Yama that of the South, Varuṇa, that of the West and you Vaśravāna shall be the guardian of the North.” After saying this, Brahmā disappeared. Thus Varuṇa became the guardian of the West. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Family. Varuṇa had several wives and children. Prominent among them were Gaurī and Varuṇāni. Mention is made about the sons Susēṇa, Vandi and Vasīṣṭha and daughter Vāruṇi. Cārṣaṇi was another wife of Varuṇa. Prajāpati Bhṛgu, who died in the sacrifice of Daśa took birth as the son of Varuṇa and Cārṣaṇi. Devi Jyeṣṭhā, the daughter of Prīcst Suṣra was another wife of Varuṇa. The children of Jyeṣṭhā were Bala, Surā the Suranandinī and Adharmaka the destroyer of the elements. The semen of Varuṇa fell on Valmika (White-ant-hill) from which the great hermit Vālmiki was born. Besides them, Daśasāvāṇi, the ninth Manu was the son of Varuṇa. Puṣkara was another son of Varuṇa. The handsome Puṣkara was received as husband by the daughter of Soma (Candra). Vandi, who was defeated by the hermit Āṣṭavakra at the palace of Janaka was the son of Varuṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9; Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 52; Ādi Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 5; Vana Parva, Chapter 134, Stanza 24; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Sarga 17, Stanza 13; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Sarga 46, Stanza 36).

5) Carrying away Utathya’s wife. Bhadrā, the daughter of Soma (Moon) was extremely beautiful. Soma gave her in marriage to the hermit Utathya. Varuṇa carried her away. Utathya got angry and drank up the ocean dry. Varuṇa returned Bhadrā to Utathya. (For further details see under Utathya).

6) Theft of Varuṇa’s cow by Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa once decided to perform a sacrifice. He made all preparations. But he did not get the required cow at the stipulated time. So he got the Homadhenu of Varuṇa by theft and began to perform the yāga (sacrifice). Varuṇa knew this. Instantly he went to Kaśyapa and demanded his cow. But Kaśyapa refused to return the cow. Varuṇa complained to Brahmā, who sent for Kaśyapa and asked him about the cow and both Brahmā and Varuṇa cursed Kaśyapa that he who had taken the cow by stealth would take birth as a cowherd in Amīḍā. (For further details see under Kaśyapa and Nandagopa).

7) Curing Hariścandra. For detailed story see under Hariścandra.

VASAYU. A son born to Purûravas by Urvâṣî. (Padma Purâṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍâ, 12).

VASĪŚṬHA. A hermit who was the son of Brahmā.

1) The three births of Vâsiṣṭha. Vâsiṣṭha with the radiance of Brahmā, is very famous in the Purâṇas. He had three births.

i) First birth.

a) Birth. Vâsiṣṭha is one of the mental sons of Brahmā. This is the first birth of Vâsiṣṭha.

"Nârada was born from the lap, Dakṣa was born from the right hand, Vâsiṣṭha from the breath (prāṇa) Bhrgu from the skin, Kratu from the hand of Brahmā." In this birth, Arundhaṭi was the wife of Vâsiṣṭha. Arundhaṭi was known by the name Ûrjâ also. There is a Puranânic story behind the marriage of Vâsiṣṭha and Arundhaṭi.

In her previous birth the name of Arundhaṭi was Sandhyâ. She was born from the pāṇiḥ of Brahmā. As soon as she was born she grew up. Seeing her exquisite beauty the Prajâpati were filled with excitement. Even Brahmā, her father, was somewhat excited at her sight. Śiva, who understood this, teased Brahmā. Sandhyâ was ashamed. Even after Śiva, Brahmā, Prajâpati and the others had gone their ways, she remained there blaming her birth. She said to herself: “The moment I was born, I grew up to be a young woman. My father and my brothers looked at me with desire. I also looked at them excitedly. As an atonement for this sin, I will burn my body in fire. I do not want a body desired by my father and brothers. With this decision she went to the mountain Candrabhâga, which is the source of the river Candrabhâga, and began to perform penance. Brahmā who came to know of this, was filled with pity and sent Vâsiṣṭha to her. He went there in the form of a Brahmin boy and taught her how to perform penance. After the return of Vâsiṣṭha she continued the severe penance to Viṣṇu. Her penance became the subject of talk and wonder everywhere. After a short while Viṣṇu appeared before her sitting on his conveyance Garuḍa. She praised Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu was pleased with her and asked what her desire was. She said: “Lord, creatures should not be sexually excited at their birth. They should have sexual desire only when they are grown up. The three worlds must know that I am chaste. In all my births I should not look at anybody except my husband with sexual desire. The man who looks at me with sexual desire should lose his manliness and become a hermaphrodite.” Mahâviṣṇu agreed to her request. It was from that day onwards that sexual desire appeared in creatures in their grown-up stage only, after they have passed the stages of infancy and childhood. Mahâviṣṇu told her. “It is preordained that this body of yours will be burnt in fire. Medhâhitī, (Meghâhitī), the son of Priyavrata is performing the great sacrifice called Jyotistoma which is to be completed in twelve years. It is coming to a close. There is none equal to him because of this sacrifice. That great hermit’s sacrifice is being performed in the basin of this river Candrabhâga. Unseen by the hermits, you should go there and get into the fire. Because of my blessing you will be born from that fire as the daughter of Medhâhitī. You should go into the fire thinking of him whom you want to be your husband in this birth.”

Mahâviṣṇu touched Sandhyâ with the tip of his finger. Sandhyâ walked to the sacrificial hall. Seen by none, she got down into the fire. She was burnt in the blazing fire. By the order of Viṣṇu; the God fire placed Sandhyâ who was burnt in the sacrificial fire, in the Solar region. The sun divided that body into two and placed them in his chariot. The upper portion became the pratassandhyâ (dawn) between the day and the night and the lower portion became the Śāyantana Sandhyâ (the evening twilight). At the end of the sacrifice, from the centre of the sacrificial fire a girl, like the flame of fire rose up. Medhâhitī took that child in his hands and called her Arundhaṭi. The child became famous throughout the three worlds, as the name stood for the principle that on no reason what-soever will righteousness be obstructed. (Rodha means obstruction. So Arundhaṭi is one who cannot be obstructed). In some other Purânas Arundhaṭi is given as the daughter of Prajâpati Kardama and Devahūti.

b) Marriage. Arundhaṭi grew up in the hermitage of Medhâhitī. Candrabhâga holy bath which was the playfield of Arundhaṭi, is even today, known as Arundhaṭiturtha. Arundhaṭi became five years of age. Brahmā saw her when she was playing on the ground after having taken her bath. At the instruction of Brahmā, Arundhaṭi was entrusted to Sāvitri and Bahuḷa for education. Sāvitri is the wife of the Sun. Arundhaṭi lived in Mānas lake with Sāvitri, Gāyatrī, Bahuḷa, Sarasvatī, Drupadā and such other celestial women and completed her education. One day Arundhaṭi happened to see Vâsiṣṭha who was shining with radiance. They fell in love with each other. Parents and relatives and the elders came to know of this. Sāvitri patting Arundhaṭi blessed her to become the wife of Vasiṣṭha. The marriage of Arundhati with Vasiṣṭha was conducted in the presence of the Gods.
c) Sons. Seven sons, named Citraketu, Purocīs, Viraca, Mitra, Ulbaṇa, Vasubhrīḍyāna and Dyumāṇ were born to Vasiṣṭha by Arundhati. All the seven of them were Brahmāsris.
d) The meaning of the names Vasiṣṭha and Arundhati. The meaning of the name Vasiṣṭha is given by Vasiṣṭha himself as follows:—
I am known as Vasiṣṭha for two reasons. I am 'Vasūman'. The Śrutis say that Air, Earth etc. are Vasūs. I have become Vasiṣṭha because I have brought under control the Vasus beginning with Animā (the power of reducing the body to an atom). See what Arundhati herself says, about the meaning of the name Arundhati.

"I consider mountains, earth and heaven as elements in which I live, only after considering my husband as the element in which I live. My husband is the first and foremost element in my life. Moreover I conform (anurodha) with the mind of my husband. So know me as Arundhati',"

e) Conjugal fidelity of Arundhati. The Saptarishi (the seven hermits) once left Arundhati alone in a forest and went to the Mountain Himalayas to gather fruits and roots. In those days, due to severe summer, the earth became a wilderness. So the hermits lived in the Himalayas. Arundhati all alone did penance in the forest. On one day Siva took the form of a Brahmin and going near Arundhati requested her for alms. She replied: "There are only Ziziphus fruits here, and nothing else to eat." The Brahmin asked her to boil them. She placed the pot of Ziziphus fruits on the oven and sat there hearing the good stories told by the Brahmin. Thus without thinking about her hunger or thirst she sat there for twelve years hearing the stories narrated by the Brahmin. When the hermits returned from Himalayas, Siva assumed his original form and said, "Hermits! This woman, sitting in the hermitage, has acquired more penance than you have acquired in the Himalayas. Good woman! What boon do you want?" She requested that that place should be known as the holy place called Badarapacana (cooking of Ziziphus fruits). Siva allowed it. Even today that place is considered a holy place.

f) Death. When so many devas were dead at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Vasiṣṭha also died along with them. Arundhati followed her husband. After death both of them entered the aśrama and became two stars.
g) Seeing Arundhati. In India there is a custom of showing the women, the star Arundhati. Arundhati is the first of the women who took only one husband in her life. The meaning of this custom is this that this mentality of Arundhati should be acquired by the married women of India. Moreover, if the star stands in front of the star Vasiṣṭha, it is considered to forebode calamities in the world. (Kālikā Purāṇa).

ii) Second birth.
General information. Vasiṣṭha who died at the sacrifice of Dakṣa took birth again from the sacrificial fire of Brahma. Akṣamālā was the wife of this Vasiṣṭha. Akṣamālā was the rebirth of Arundhati. So, in some Purāṇas, both are shown as one. This birth of Vasiṣṭha was terminated by the curse of emperor Nimi of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (For details see under Nimi).
(iii) Third birth. In the third birth Vasiṣṭha was born from a pot as the son of Mitṛāvarūṇas. In this birth Vasiṣṭha was the brother of Agastya. (For detailed story see under Agastya, para 2). In this birth the wife of Vasiṣṭha was an Arundhati, who was the sister of Nārada. Thus according to the Purāṇas, it took three births for Vasiṣṭha to complete his life. It is difficult to ascertain, in which particular birth, a particular story, stated in the Purāṇas, took place. It is probable that a large number of episodes might have taken place in the second and third births.

Stories connected with the life of Vasiṣṭha are given below:
1) Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were two hermits who quarrelled with each other through-out their lives. The quarrel between Vasiṣṭha a Brahmin hermit and Viśvāmitra a royal hermit, is given below:
(i) Reason for the enmity. Viśvāmitra was a King who cared much for the welfare of his subjects. Once he went with his army to hunt. He became tired by the hunt and reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha who welcomed them with hospitality. He told them that food would be ready when they returned after a bath. The King and his men bathed quickly and when they returned, a grand feast was ready for so many thousands. The King was in great perplexity. After the meals Viśvāmitra approached the hermit Vasiṣṭha and asked him how he got such a grand feast ready. He replied that the cow Kāmadhenu in his hermitage was capable of granting any wish. The King desired to have the cow. He asked the hermit to exchange the cow for a crepe of ordinary cows. Vasiṣṭha did not agree to this. Viśvāmitra said that the noble and superior things of the country belonged to the King. The hermit did not agree to that also. Finally Viśvāmitra was about to take away the cow by force. Thus the quarrel began. Understanding the wish of Vasiṣṭha Kāmadhenu held her horns and tail up and stood as a fierce and cruel figure. From the various limbs of the cow so many thousands of warriors jumped out and a fierce battle ensued in which the hundred sons and the huge army of Viśvāmitra met with defeat. At last Viśvāmitra tried to launch a direct attack against Vasiṣṭha. But the arrows of Viśvāmitra were changed to flowers when they touched the body of Vasiṣṭha. At last the King admitted that the power of the penance of a Brahmin hermit was the real power and he admitted defeat from Vasiṣṭha. From that day onwards a deep-rooted hatred against Vasiṣṭha arose in the heart of Viśvāmitra. He left the administration of his Kingdom in the hands of his relatives and went to the south where he erected a hermitage and began to do severe penance. He acquired great powers of penance and became a royal hermit of immense attainments and the quarrel between the two great hermits Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra began. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 5 sargas from 51).
(ii) Second confrontation. The next contest between the two hermits was due to the king Triśāṅku of the Solar dynasty. Triśāṅku wanted bodily attainment of heaven. Vasiṣṭha tried to discourage the king. Viśvāmitra took up the matter. He began to perform a sacrifice to lift up the king bodily to heaven, and Triśāṅku began to rise up higher and higher. But Indra did not allow him to enter bodily into the heaven. At last Viśvāmitra, by the power of his penance created an artificial heaven midway between the heaven and the earth and placed Triśanku in that heaven. With this the gap between the two hermits widened. (For more details see under Triśanku).

(iii) Third confrontation. By the blessing of Varuṇa, a son named Lohita was born to Harīścandra. He had promised Varuṇa to sacrifice his son Lohita. But Lohita came to know of this and he left the palace. Harīścandra was in a difficult situation. Vasistha advised him to buy a son and to sacrifice him. Accordingly a Brah-min boy named Sunāṣṭēpha was bought. Vasistha decided to sacrifice him. Viśvāmitra said that he could not be sacrificed. Harīścandra was loved by Vasistha.
So Viśvāmitra tried to harm him as far as possible.
Harīścandra fell in the trap of Viśvāmitra and lost his country, city, wife, everything and had to live in funeral places. (For detailed story see under Harīścandra.)

(iv) Fourth confrontation. Viśvāmitra did not like the deception practised by Viśvāmitra, on Harīścandra.
Once Viśvāmitra and Vasistha met in the forest by chance. Vasistha scolded Viśvāmitra, who had only the guise of a hermit, thus: “You wicked Viśvāmitra!
Why do you put the truthful Harīścandra into so much misery? You are deceiving him as the stork sits in meditation and deceives the fish. So you will become a stork.”

Viśvāmitra looked at the hermit Vasistha who had cursed him and said, “So long as I am a stork you shall be Kingfisher. Thus they cursed each other.
Both of them became birds and went to the shore of Mānasa lake and each building a nest on the top of trees began to live there. There was nothing but quarrel between the two birds daily. Both pecked and scratched each other to such an extent that they were covered with bleeding wounds. They looked like an Erythrina tree filled with flowers. Everybody who saw them was filled with sadness. Thus they lived there for a long time.

Once the Kind-hearted Brahmā, the father of Vasistha, saw their sorry plight. Having pity on them he came there with the other gods and delivered them both from the curse. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

(v) Fifth confrontation. Viśvāmitra called the river Sarasvatī and asked her to bring Vasistha along with her current. Sarasvatī did not like the idea. Still, fearing the curse of Viśvāmitra she agreed to do so. The river-basin where Vasistha had been performing penance was pulled down by the current of the river, and taking Vasistha in the current carried him down. Sarasvatī did not wish to leave Vasistha at the mercy of Viśvāmitra. So when they reached the door of the hermitage of Viśvāmitra, she carried him further down in a swift current. Viśvāmitra got angry and cursed Sarasvatī.
“Let blood flow through the river.” With that the water of Sarasvatī changed to blood-colour. The gods were perplexed at this. They all gathered on the banks of the river. In the presence of the gods, both the hermits came to a compromise. Thenceforward that place became a holy tirtha under the name Vasiṣṭhāpavāha.
(M.B. Sāyā Parva, Chapter 42).

3) Other details.

(i) Vasiṣṭha changed Ilā a woman, into a man.
(For details see under Ilā 1).

(ii) Wives and children. Seven sons Rajas, Gotra, Urdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra, were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Īrjā. These seven pure and just persons were the Saptarasīs (seven hermits) in the first Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aniśa I, Chapter 10).

(Rāja, Gātra, Urdhvabāhu Savana, Alagha, Sukra and Sutapas are the names given in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20, of the sons of Vasiṣṭha born by his wife Īrjā).

(iii) Vasiṣṭha and emperor Nimi. (See under Nimi)
(iv) The Rgveda of Vasiṣṭha. There are ten Māṇḍalas in Rgveda, of which the seventh Māṇḍala was composed by the sages of Vasiṣṭha’s hermitage.

(v) Cursing Ravaṇa. Once Ravaṇa asked Vasiṣṭha to come as his teacher and teach him the Vedas and the other scriptures. Vasiṣṭha did not comply with his request. The angry Ravaṇa got Vasiṣṭha a captive. But the King Kuvalayāśva of the Solar dynasty, liberated Vasiṣṭha from captivity. The rescued Vasiṣṭha cursed Ravaṇa. “You and your family will be exterminated by those born of the Solar dynasty.” (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

(vi) Vasiṣṭha jumped into the river. See under Adṛyaṇī.

(vii) In uniting Tapati and Sainvarṇa Vasiṣṭha played a very prominent part. (See under Tapati).

(viii) It was Vasiṣṭha who put a stop to the sacrifice for the extermination of the Raḵṣasas (giants) performed by Pariśāra. (See under Pariśāra).

(ix) Vasiṣṭha and Mucukunda. See under Mucukunda.

(x) Vasiṣṭha told Śrī Rāma the history of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 73).

(xi) The hermitage of Vasiṣṭha was situated in the valley of mount Mahāmeru. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 6).

(xii) The cow of Vasiṣṭha was stolen by the eight Vasus
See under Aṣṭavasus.

(xiii) Vasiṣṭha was the teacher of Bhīṣma. (Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 45).

(xiv) Vasiṣṭha participated in the Birth festival of Aṛjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 51).

(xv) Vasiṣṭha tried to commit suicide. (See under Adṛyaṇī).

(xvi) Vasiṣṭha shone in the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 19).

(xvii) In the Bāhūrata-battle an effort was made by Vasiṣṭha to dissuade Droṇa from the battle. But it was in vain. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 33).

(xviii) Vasiṣṭha was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 7).

(xix) Once rain failed in the world and creatures became miserable. At that time Vasiṣṭha fed the creatures. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 137).

(xx) Once Indra lost the Devaloka (the world of the Devas) and he became gloomy and miserable. Vasiṣṭha went to him and consoled him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 91).

(xxi) Vasiṣṭha was one of the hermits who were Brahmin tribal workers. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 296, Stanza 17).

(xxii) Once Vasiṣṭha imparted knowledge to King
Janaka. This exhortation is given in Mahābhārata, (Śānti Parva, six chapters from 302).
(xxiii) Vasistha was one of the twentyone Prajapatis. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 36).

(xxiv) Vasistha is considered to be one of the Citraśikhaṇḍīs (Saptarsis—seven hermits) (See under Citraśikhaṇḍīs).

(xxv) Once Vasistha talked about Purusarthas (the objects of life) to Brahma. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 6).

(xxvi) Vasistha talked to Saudāsa about giving cows as alms. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 5).

(xxvii) On another occasion Vasistha gave advice to Parasurāma and talked about the origin of Gold. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 44).

(xxviii) Vasistha once told Arundhatī low weakness was caused. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 31).

(xxix) Vasistha avowed that he was not one of them who had stolen the lotus flowers of Agastyā. (Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 114).

(XXX) Āpava, Arundhatipati, Brahmarsī, Devarsi, Hairanyagarbha, Maitrāvurunī, Ṛṣvanī, and such other words are used as synonyms of Vasistha, in the Mahābhārata.

VASIŚṬHA. An Agni (fire). (Mahābhārata, Vana Parvā, Chapter 220, Stanza 1).

VASIŚṬHA (M). Vasistha tirtha. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parvā, Chapter 84, that he who bathes in this tirtha would become a Brahmīn.

VASIŚṬHA PARVATA. A mountain famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 2, that Arjuna came and sat on this mountain during his pilgrimage.

VASIŚṬHĀPAVĀHA. An ancient holy bath on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. (See under Vasiśṭha, fifth confrontation).

VASIŚṬHĀŚRAMA. A holy place near Niścīrāsaṅgama. This holy bath is famous throughout the three worlds. Those who bathe in this place will enjoy the fruits of performing Vājapeya yajña. (Drinking sacrifice). (M.B. Vana Parvā, Chapter 87, Stanza 140).

VASORDHĀRA. Wife of the Vasu named Agni. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VAŚTRAPA. A group of Kṣatriyas. The princes belonging to this group brought presents to Yuddhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sāhyā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 15).

VAŚTUPURUṢA. In days of yore a ghost of immense size, who was feared by all other ghosts came into existence. This ghost was buried inside the earth by the Devas. This ghost is called Vāstupuruṣa. He is the deity of whatever we build on the earth. The offering made to this Vāstupuruṣa on completion of a house is called "Puravāstubhī". (Agni Puruṇa, Chapter 40).

VASU I. A King named Uparicaravasu. For further details see under Uparicaravasu).

VASU II. Aṣṭavasu. (The eight Vasus). (For further details see under Aṣṭavasu).

VASU III. A son born to Kuśa, King of Kanyākujba by his wife Vaidarī. Kuśa had four sons, Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūratarajas and Vasu. Of them Kuśāmba built the city of Kuśāmbi, Kuśanābha the city of Mahodayapurā, Asūratarajas the city of Dharmānanya and Vasu the city of Girivrajā which is erected in the middle of five hills. The river Māgadhi flows around this city. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa Sarga 32).

VASU IV. A Vasu is mentioned in Brahmapāṇḍa Purāṇa Chapter 58, as the brother of Parasurāma. Vasu, Rumapāṇḍa, Suṣeṇa, Viṣvāvasu and Parasurāma were the five sons born to Jamadagni by his wife Reṇukā.

VASU V. A son of Murāsura. The sons of Murāsura were, Tāmra, Antarikṣa, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Viṣvāvasu, Nabhāsāvan and Aruṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VASU VI. A mighty King of the Kṛma dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 13).

VASU VII. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 17, that the King Ilīna had five sons, Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu by his wife Rathantari.

VASU VIII. A scholarly Brahmīn-hermit. The hermit Paila was the son of this Vasu. (M.B. Sāhyā Parva Chapter 33, Stanza 35).

VASU IX. Vasu is used as a synonym of Śiva in Mahābhārata, Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 140.

VASU X. A name of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 25).

VASU XI. A King. He was born to Uttānapāda by Śūnṛtā. A controversy arose among hermits once about cow-sacrifice and for a solution of the problem the hermits approached this king Vasu, who told them his perception that the sacrifice of cow was, strictly speaking, a matter of slaughter and as such it was to be forbidden. As the hermits could not agree with the King, they cursed him "Let the King go to Pāṭāla (underworld). Vasu then did very severe penance and attained heaven. (Matsya Purāṇa, 143, 18-25).

VASUCANDRA. A King who was the supporter and helper of Yudhīṣṭhira. He was as mighty as the powerful Indra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 40).

VASUDĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 5).

VASUDĀNA I. A Kṣatriya King. This King who was a member of the council of Yuddhiṣṭhira was the ruler of Paśu. It is stated in Mahābhārata that this King presented Yuddhiṣṭhira with twenty-six elephants and two thousand horses. (Sāhyā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 27). In the Bhārata battle this King was the supporter of Yuddhiṣṭhira and Dṛṣṭadvyumna. But he was killed by the arrow of Droṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 151 and 171; Droṇa Parva, Chapters 23 and 190; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6).

VASUDĀNA II. A prince of Pāṇcāla, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Droṇācārya. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 55).

VASUDĀNAPUTRA. A King who had taken the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas. He killed Abhīmbhū, the son of King of Kāśi. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 74).

VASUDATTĀ I. Mother of Vararuci. (See under Vararuci).

VASUDATTĀ II. (VASUDEVĀ). Father of Sudevā, a woman who had taken rebirth as a hog. (See under Sudevā III).

VASUDEVĀ I. Being the son of Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was called Vāsudeva.

VASUDEVĀ II. See under Pauḍrakavāsudeva.

VASUDEVĀ. Father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.
1) Genealogy. See under Kṛṣṇa.
2) Precious birth and current birth. Vasudeva was the rebirth of Prajāpati Kaśyapa. Aditi and Surasā, the wives of Kaśyapa took birth as Devaki and Rohiṇī respectively. (For details see under Kaśyapa).
3) Marriage and Family. Rohiṇī, the wife of Vasudeva, gave birth to Balarāma, the fighter Sārana, Dārada, Dama, Piṇḍāraka, and Mahānāma. Of Devaki who was also called Māyā and Amāvāsī, the younger son Kṛṣṇa and his beautiful sister Subhadrā were born. Vijaya, Rocamā, Varumā and Devala were sons born by Upadāśī. The two sons Agāvaha and Mandaga, otherwise called Angada were born of Vṛkadevi. Revanta who could not be defeated in battle, was born from Saptamādevī. The first son of Vasudeva was Kaśūṣika, whose birth was from a Vaiṣāya woman called Śraddhā Devī when Vasudeva was travelling in the forest. Kapila, a mighty son was born by the queen Śrutandharā. Saubhadra head of the archers and Abhava were born by his wife Janā. (Padma Purāṇa, P. 1314).
4) Other details.
(i) Vasudeva was the son of Śūrasena, and the husband of Devaki, the father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the brother of Kuntī, and the minister of Ugrasena. It was Vasudeva who sent the priest Kaśyapa to Satāṛṣīnga to perform the purification ceremonies such as naming etc. of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123, Daṁśiñāya-pātha).
(ii) After the Bhārata-battle, Vasudeva asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa and learned from him the detailed news about the battle. (Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 60).
(iii) Vasudeva fell into a swoon when he heard that Subhadrā had become unconscious. (M.B. Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 5).
(iv) The ceremony of offering to the manes (Śraddhā) of Abhimanyu was performed by Vasudeva. (M.B. Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 1).
(v) When the Yādavas fought among themselves after drinking liquor, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Dvārakā and visited Vasudeva, and requested him to protect his wives who were awaiting Arjuna. Then after kissing the feet of Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Rāma went to do puṇya. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 8).
(vi) When the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi was completely destroyed Vasudeva thinking about the Supreme soul in his heart forsook his body. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 15).
(vii) Arjuna performed the funeral rites of Vasudeva and aided his four wives to enter the funeral pyre. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 19).
(viii) Vasudeva entered heaven and took his place among Viśvadevas (gods concerned with offering to the manes). (M.B. Svarga-rōhaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 17).
(ix) The synonyms of Vasudeva, used in Mahābhārata are Anakadundubhi, Śaurī, Śūraputra, Śūrāsūnu, Yaduḍvāna and so on.
Vāsudevaḥ Śrīta. A Sanskrit poet of Kerala. Vasudevabhaṭṭatirī was a poet who used alliteration abundantly. His important works are 'Yudhiṣṭhirā-vijaya, Tripuradhāna Śurikathā, Vāsudeva Vijaya, Gajendramokṣa, Nalodaya etc.
Vāsūdhā. Daughter of Narmadā, a Gandharva woman. Narmadā had three daughters Sundari, Ketimati and Vasudhā. (For more details see under Puspokāṭā).
Vāsudhāra. A holy place. Those who visit this place could enjoy the fruits of performing horse-sacrifice. If one gives offering to the manes after getting oneself purified by bathing in this holy tirtha (bath), one will attain the world of Viṣṇu. There is a lake of the Aṣṭavas (eight Vasus) in this place. By bathing there, one could become the subject of the love and regard of the eight Vasus. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 63).
Vāsuḥoma. A King of the country of Aṅga. Once he gave advice to Māndhātā on righteousness. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 1).
Vāsujeśṭha. A King. This King was the son of Pusyaśmitra. (Matsya Purāṇa, 272, 28).
Vāsuṣki. One of the famous Nāgas (serpents).
1) Birth. The uragas and nāgas (serpents) were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrā. Vāsus, the eldest son of Kadrā spent his childhood with his parents.
2) Difference of opinion. Viṁata and Kadrā staked on the colour of the tail of Uccaitra-ravas (A horse obtained at the churning of the sea of Milk). To win the stake, Kadrā asked her sons to hang on the tail of Uccaitra-ravas as black hairs. But the truthful Vāsus was not prepared to do so. Kadrā cursed Vāsus and the others who sided with him. From that day onwards Vāsus and those who were cursed, separated from their mother and formed into a serpent group. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 37 and 48).
3) The length of Vāsuski. The Devas and the asuras decided to get Amṛta (Ambrosia—the celestial honey of immortality) by churning the sea of milk. The Devas went to bring Mandara-mountain, to be used as the churning rod. Their attempt was futile. The asuras made a trial with the same result. The Bhūtaṅgaṇa (Guards) of Śiva also made a vain attempt. On the instruction of Viṣṇu, Garuḍa went and brought the mountain as easily as an eagle takes away a frog. Now Vāsus should be brought. The Devas and Gandharvas failed in that attempt also. Garuḍa who was haughty of his strength and speed, went to the city of the nāgas (serpents) and requested Vāsus to come to the sea of Milk. Vāsus replied that if the matter was so urgent he had no objection for being carried to that place. He took the middle part of Vāsus in his beak and flew up higher and higher and reached beyond the horizon. Still the lower half of Vāsuski was lying on the ground. So he took Vāsuski in his beak as folded in two. Still the result was the same. Garuḍa became aware of the impossibility of carrying Vāsuski and returned, ashamed and disappointed. Viṣṇu rebuked him for his arrogance. After this, Śiva stretched his hand to Pāṭalā. Vāsuski became a small bangle on that hand. Thus Vāsuski was brought to the shore of the sea of Milk. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda).
4) Other details.
(i) For the safety and protection of the Nāgas (serpents) Vāsuski gave his sister Jaraṭkaru as wife to the hermit Jaraṭkāru. (See under Jaraṭkāru).
(ii) The nāgas anointed Vāsuski as their King. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Daṁśiñāya-pātha, Chapter 36).
(iii) When Vāsuski saw the serpents, born of his family, falling into the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and dying.
in large numbers, he sent his nephew Astika to find out a way to rescue the perishing nāgas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 20).
(iv) Vasuki participated in the birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71).
(v) Vasuki advised the Nāgas to give the divine juice to Bhīmasena, in accordance with the request of Āryaka. (See under Bhīmasena).
(vi) Vasuki stays in the palace of Varuṇa worshipping him. (M.B. Ṣabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 8).
(vii) Arjuna once allured the sister of Vasuki. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 14).
(viii) In Tripuradahana (the burning of Tripura) Vasuki acted as the bow-string of Śiva and as the axle of his chariot. (M.B. Karpa Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 22).
(ix) In the fight between Arjuna and Karna, Vasuki was a well-wisher of Arjuna. (M.B. Karpa Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 43).
(x) The Devas anointed Vasuki as the King of the Nāgas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 30).
(xi) Vasuki gave Subrahmanya two followers named Jaya and Mahājaya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 52).
(xii) Vasuki is one of the seven nāgas which hold up the earth. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 41).
(xiii) When Balabhadra rāma went to Pāṭāla after his death, Vasuki had gone there to receive him. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).
(xiv) Once Vasuki and Vāyu tried to find out who was the more powerful of the two, in consequence of which contest Mount Trikūṭa was broken from the vicinity of Mahāmeru and was thrown into the southern Sea. (See under Trikūṭa).
(xv) Words such as Nāgarāj, Nāgarāja, Nāgendra, Pannaga, Pannagarāt, Sarpārāj, and so on are used as synonyms of Vasuki in Mahābhārata.

VĀSUKITĪRTHĀ. A holy place situated on the banks of the Gaṅgā in Prayāga. Bhogavatītīrthā is another name of this holy bath. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 86, that by taking bath in this holy tīrtha one could attain the fruits of performing the horse-sacrifice.

VASUMĀN I. (VASUMANAS). A King of the dynasty of Iksvākū.

He was one of the guests at the serpent-sacrifice (Sarpasatra) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Adi Parva Chapter 53, Stanza 9). He visited Bhīṣma who lay on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza). See under Guruparamparā.

VATSYA II. A country famous in the Purāṇas. This country has the name Vatsa also. (See under Vatsa) VĀYASAVIDYA. The art of making the crow tell the past and foretell the future. (For further details see under Kālakavṛkṣika).

VĀYU I. One of the eight guardians of the world. (Dīkṣālakas).

1) General information. Vāyu was born from the breath of Viśvaprūṣa. (Rgveda 10, 90). Trāṣṭa was the son in-law of Vāyu. The eight dīkṣālakas are Indra, Vahni (Fire), Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera and Śiva. Vāyu is the guardian of the North West zone. The palace of Bhagavān Vāyu is known as Gandhavatī.

2) Confrontation with Vāsuki. Once Vāyu and Vāsuki tried to find out who of the two was mightier, in consequence of which, Trikūṭaparvata, a peak of Mount Himālaya, was broken from its bed and thrown into the southern ocean near Laṅkā. Later, the city of Laṅkā was built on this mountain. (For details see under Trikūṭa.)

3) Children. Bhīmasena and Hanumān are said to be the prominent sons of Bhagavān Vāyu. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 112, that Agni was the son of Vāyu. To make fire from wood by attrition, the hands obtain strength by the help of the life breath called Vyāna (a breath or vāyu). It is from this, that the idea that fire is the son of Vāyu, came into existence. To know how Vāyu obtained the paternity of Bhīma and Hanumān see under Bhīma and Hanumān. It is stated in Brahma Purāṇa that a group of celestial maids called ‘Mudā’ owes its origin to Vāyu.

4) Love of Vāyu. Once Bhagavān Vāyu happened to see the six beautiful daughters of Kusūnābha, a king, and he was excited sexually. As the princesses refused to satisfy his desire, Vāyu changed the dolls into hunchbacks, by a curse. (For detailed story see under Kuṣaṃābha.)

5) The Vāyu (breaths) in the body. (See under Nāḍīcakra.)

6) Curbing the arrogance of Silk-cotton tree. Long ago a silk-cotton tree grew up on the top of the Himālayas. It grew up to be a big tree spreading its branches in all directions. Birds built their nests on the branches of that big tree and hermits and animals found shelter under its shade. The silk-cotton tree became arrogant. Once Nārada came there and praised the tree:— “How gigantic, this silk-cotton tree is! Even in a great storm its branches do not move.” The praise of Nārada made the tree more haughty. It told Nārada that the storm etc. were its servants. Nārada told Vāyu, what the silk-cotton tree said to him. Vāyu got angry and coming to the tree, said thus:— “You, wicked silk-cotton tree, in days of yore, when Brahmā was carrying on creation he took rest on you for a while. That is why I keep motionless when I come to you. It is not because I am afraid of you. I knew that you belittled me before Nārada. If you are bold enough, come and fight with me.”

The silk-cotton tree accepted the challenge. Next day Bhagavān Vāyu changed into a storm and blew against the tree. The tree lost leaves, flowers and fruits and stood bare. Thus within a very short time the arrogance of the tree was curbed.

This story was told to Yudhishṭhira by Bhrīṣma, to show that rendering help to a foe, will only make him haughty. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 154). Other details.

(i) When Indra cut off the wings of the mountains, Bhagavān Vāyu saved the mountain Maināka from this danger, by hiding it in the ocean. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 1, Stanza 126).

(ii) The image of Bhagavān Vāyu should be consecrated as sitting on the haunch of a deer, holding a flag. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(iii) Indra sent Vāyu also along with Menakā to hinder the penance of Viśvāmitra. While Menakā was dancing in front of Viśvāmitra, Vāyu displaced her cloth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 1).

(iv) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22, that Vāyu is the messenger of the gods.

(v) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20, that Vāyu stays in the palace of Brahmā, praising him.

(vi) Once Pradyumna tried to kill Śālva. At that time Vāyu went to Pradyumna as the messenger of Gods. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22).

(vii) Vāyu proved that Damayantī was chaste. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 36).

(viii) Vāyu declared that Sītā was chaste. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 27).

(ix) In Tripuradāhana (the burning of Tripura) Vāyu acted as the arrow of the bow of Śiva. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Stanza 76).

(x) Vāyu gave Subrahmanya two attendants called Bala and Atibala. (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 44).

(xi) Once Vāyu advised Pururavas about the need of a priest. (M.B. Śāntī Parva, Chapter 72, Stanzars 10-25).

(xii) Once Bhagavān Vāyu talked elaborately on the secrets of goodness and badness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 128).

(xiii) Bhagavān Vāyu once talked about the greatness of Brahmīn to Kārtavīryājuna. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 152).

VĀYU II. An ancient hermit of India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 9, that this hermit visited Bhīma on his bed of arrows.

VĀYUBALA. See under Vāyucakra.

VĀYUBHAKṢA. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śāḥā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 13, that this hermit had been a prominent figure in the palace of Yudhīṣṭhira.

VĀYUCAKRA. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śālya Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 32, that this Vāyucakra was born from the semen kept in a pot by the hermit called Maṅkaṇaka. From this same pot some other hermits such as Vāyubala, Vāyuyāla and others were born. (See under Maṅkaṇaka, Para 3).

VĀYUHĀ. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka).

VĀYUJĀVĀ. See under Vāyucakra.

VĀYUMAṆḌALA. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. See para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka.

VĀYUPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

VĀYURETAS. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka).

VĀYUVÉGA I. A Kṣatriya King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69 that this King was born from a portion of the asura named Krodhavāsī.

VĀYUVÉGA II. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. (See Para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka).

VĀYUVÉGA III. One of the sons of Dhyātarātra. He was present at the Swayarāvara (marriage) of Draupadī (M.B. Aranyaka: Chapter 177, Verse 2).

VAYYA. A royal hermit of the period of Ṛgveda. Mention is made about the royal hermits such as Vāyya, Karkandhu and others in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 112.

VEDA. The sun of the hermit Ayodhadhaumya. (For further details see under Ayodhadhaumya).

VEDA (S).

1) Introduction. The root ‘Vid’ in Sanskrit means ‘to know’. The books composed of the knowledge of the Aryans, collected and compiled were called the Vedas.

2) The origin and importance of the Vedas. It is said that Brahma was the creator of the Vedas. Many say that, for the performance of sacrifices Brahma created from Agni (fire), Vayu (Wind) and Ravi (the Sun), the three Vedas Rig, Yajus and Saman which are eternal and in accordance with regulations.

The Vedas have two sides, the spiritual and the mundane. Moreover all the explanations of the Vedas from the Brahmanas to the Bhagya of Saya, pertain to sacrifices. The literary meaning of Veda is mundane. Considering these two points and the facts that they are religious books and that they reveal the mental and social outlooks of the early Aryans, and as the origin of all the thoughts of Indians, all the Vedas, especially Rigveda, hold a lofty place.

3) Parts of the Vedas. Mahavishnu incarnated as Vyasa in Dwapara Yuga and divided the Vedas. The first Veda consisted of four paddas and a hundred thousand granthas. Vyasa divided it into four parts known as, Rigveda, Yajurveda, Samaveda and Atharvaveda. The sage and seer Vyasa thus created by Rg, “Hautra” (a collection of lyrics in praise of different Gods, to be recited by the priest styled the ‘hurt’), by Yajus “Adhvaraya”, (a book of sacrificial prayer, of prose formulas to be uttered by the ‘Adhvaru’ priest, who performed the manual work involved in a sacrifice), by Saman, “Audghatra”, (Songs meant to be sung at the Soma sacrifice by a special class of priests ‘Udgatr’) and by Atharva “Bhratma”, (a collection of songs, spells and incantations, for the healing of disease, the restoration of harmony, the exorcism of evil spirits and to celebrate the power and omniscience of God) and established them separately. Paila, a scholar in Rgveda, and a disciple of Vyasa, gave the original Veda to Indrapramiti and its Sanhitas (collections) to Baskala as gifts. Baskala divided the Sanhitas into four, and gave each of them to Baudhaya and others. Yajurveda was divided into twenty-four branches. They were composed by Vaishampayana of extraordinary intelligence, a disciple of Vyasa. Kandhas (Chapters) such as Vajasaneyana etc. were composed later by hermits such as Yajnavalkya and others in the form of Smritis (tradition, as handing down only the tradition derived from ancient sages, to whom the Vedas were ’revealed’). Jaimini the disciple of Vyasa, divided Samaveda into different branches. Sumantu and Sukarmma compiled separate Sanhitas (collections) from them. Sukarmma composed thousand Sanhitas. Sumantu the disciple of Vyasa took the Atharvaveda and taught it to thousands of Paippalada disciples. By the blessings of Vyasa, Suta made the Purana Sanhita (the collection of Puranas). (Agni Purana, Chapter 150).

4) Branches of the Vedas. It has already been mentioned that the Vedas are four in number called Rig, Yajus, Saman and Atharv. Each of these Vedas has branches called Sanhitas (collections) and Brahmanas (treatises relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Aranyakas are appendices to the Brahmanas. Upnishads (secret or esoteric doctrines) are appendices of the Aranyakas. Thus each of the Vedas has Sanhitas, Brhamanas, Aranyakas and Upnishads. All these are, in a way, expositions of the Vedas. In all these expositions there are numberless Suktas. All these taken together are called Vedic literature.

In the Samhitas there are lyrics in praise of different gods. All these are spells and incantations (mantras) in the form of songs. The under-currents of all these spells are Vedas and stories from the Vedas. Generally speaking the Brhmaanras contain prose texts giving practical observations on sacrifice which are mentioned in the songs of praise. Here and there stories from Purhas and epics occur. The Aranyakas (forest-texts) got that name, because they are books of instruction to be given in the forest or writings meant for wood-dwelling hermits. As they contained esoteric spells and incantations which might cause injury even to those who were not concerned with them instruction in them was not given in towns or villages. The contents of the Aranyakas are the allegorical signification of the rites and sacrifices and the mystic meaning of the Vedas.

It has been mentioned that the Upnishads are appendices of the Aranyakas. Still there is not much difference between the two and hence they cannot be separated from one another so easily. The Upnishads are called Vedantas. (The aim and completion of the Vedas), because they are the end of the Vedas. The Vedantas belong to the later period of the Vedic age. Instruction in Vedantas was given only after completing the study of the mantras (Vedas) and the Brahmanas. The Upnishads contain philosophical speculations about the conception of Brahman and the Vedas. The word Veda includes the Vedangas also. Vedangas (Ancillaries of the Vedas) are Siks (phonetics), Vyakarana (grammar), Chandas (metrics), Nirukta (etymology), Joyita (astronomy), and Kalpa (ritual). At first instruction is given in the study of Brahman and the study of Vedas. When more discussions and expositions on them are needed, the study of Brahmanas and Aranyakas are resorted to. In course of time the Brahmanas and Aranyakas, which contain discussions and expositions of the Vedas became independent branches of study under these names. That is why they contain mainly prose texts.

There are one lakh of mantras or spells and incantations in all the Vedas. They are for blessing everybody and to make the four objects of life easily attainable. Sankhyayana and Aavalaya sorted and grouped the mantras. Accordingly there are two thousand one hundred and ten mantras known as Brahmanas. Dvaprayana and other hermits have stated the number of granthas (verses) in Rigveda. It is said that there are one thousand nine hundred and ninety nine mantras in Yajurveda. There are one thousand eighty-six branches also. The branches in Yajus are known by the names Kavya, Madhyayandini, Kashi, Madhyakati, Maitriya, Taittirya, Vaisampayanika and so on.

In Sama Veda there are branches such as Kauthumi, Atharvanaprajina and so on; and songs such as Aranyakam, Uktam, Uham and so on. The number of Sama vedic verses are nine thousand four hundred and twenty-five.

Sumantu, Janjali, slokayana, Saunaka, Paippalada, Muftjakasa and such others were responsible for the sorting and grouping of the mantras in the Atharvaveda. Altogether there are one thousand six hundred Upanishads. (Agni Purana, Chapter 271).

5) Expositions of the Vedas. The religion of the Aryans became an established one when Vyasa had created the Vedasəṁhitās. The aim of Vyāsa was to bring about uniformity in the religious observances by performing rites and rituals, religious ceremonies such as sacrifices etc. without any flaw. Following this a very wide Vedic literature grew up. The study of the Vedas, critical review of meaning, the connection between mantras and tantras (chants and rituals), Grammar, etymology, all these became inevitable. As the Vedas could be looked at from different points of view, from very early days, various types of expositions of the Vedas came out. Seven types of commentaries, Nairukta, Yājñika, Vaiyakaraṇa Jyautisā, Sāmpadāyīka Ādhyātmika, Aitiḥāsika (pertaining to etymology, sacrifice, grammar astronomy, customs of a tribe, Brāhma or Spiritual legends and ancient lore) were the prominent among them. When the westerners began research work in the Vedas, another branch of literature also took form, known as the Āgamicas (the historical). Even in the time of Yāska, who was an authority on Nirukta (etymology) the Vedas were expounded on the basis of legends and ancient lore. Hints to this effect are seen in Yāska's works. Mention is made about other types of expositions also, in them. The last book of importance in the Sāmpadāyīka type of exposition, was Vedārtha-prakāśa, of Sāyana. But the commentary of Skandavāmi, the books Rgathadiptikā and Udghabhasya of Mādhavacārya etc. have spread the sāmpadāyīka type of speculations in India. There is another cult in India which believes that everything seen in the Vedas is spiritual and that the spells and incantations are esoteric.

6) The gods of the Vedas. All the gods known today are not found in the Vedas. Even those who are found do not have the prominence that is given to them now. For example, the deity Viṣṇu, worshipped as one of the three godsheads today, is not as omnipotent as the Indra of the Vedas. Though Viṣṇu is praised in five spells in Rgveda, when compared with other deities, he was not of much prominence. In the Vedas the incarnation of Vāmana is not given much importance. Even though Rudra is a recognized deity and mention occurs about Kapardi, in the Vedas, there is not a song of praise of Śiva in the Rgveda. There is no mention at all, about the worship of the Phallus, Devī and so on in the Vedas. The Vedas celebrate the Omniscience of Varuṇa, Indra, Agni, Mitra, the Maruts and so on. The lustre of Indra was gradually dimmed with the eﬄux of time and he became a mere libertine in the Purāṇas. The importance of many deities such as Varuṇa, Agni, Mitra, Aśvin and so on was greatly diminished in the Purāṇas. Thirtythree deities pertaining to Earth, Ether and Sky are praised in the Vedas.

7) The rites concerning instruction in Vedas. Manu has given certain instructions as to how the teaching of Vedas should be conducted.

8) The teachers of Veda. See under Guruparāmpara.

9) The period of the Vedas. The Indians believe that the spells and incantations and the Brāhmaṇas are not man-made, but are revelations by God. So they are considered to be beginningless and endless. The hermits are considered to be seers of the spells. It is mentioned "Mantradraṣṭāna tu Kartāraḥ". (They are seers of Mantra, not makers). In the opinion of one party, according to this maxim, it is not necessary to search for the creators or the period of creation, of mantras. They hold that only the Sūtras (thread, clue, guide, rule, aphorism) are made by man.

The westerners and the modern thinkers of India do not agree completely with this view. They believe that the early Aryans who entered India, first settled down in the Punjab and that the local civilization which they had assumed, broke out as songs of praise. In course of time, these songs of Praise took the form of Rgveda mantras (saying, song, formula). In the beginning there was only one Veda. Many believe that this state continued up to B.C. 1500. It is a fact universally acknowledged, that this Vedic literature is the most ancient literature of the world. There is difference of opinion as to the period of origin of this Vedic literature. Prof. Macdonell and Prof. Jacobi are foremost among those who have made their opinions. In the opinion of Prof. Macdonell, the Vedic literature originated in the period between B.C. 1500 and 1200. But Jacobi's opinion is that all the Vedas were made before B.C. 4000.

VEDADIṢA. The son of Bṛhadra, the King of Cedi. Mention is made about him in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

VEDAGARBHĀ. A name of Devī. When Devī killed Sumbha and such other Śāstras, Indra got pleased with her and praised her as follows:

"Āryā, Durgā, Vedagarbhā, Ambikā, Bhadrakāli; Bhadrā, Kṣemā, Kṣemakāri, Naikabāhū, I praise you."

(Ārya Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

VEDAKALPA. A section of Atharvaveda. The hermit Muṇḍakaśa divided Atharva Veda into five Sāṁhitās (collections) called Nakṣatra Kalpa, Veda Kalpa, Saṁhitā Kalpa, Āṇigraha Kalpa, and Śanti Kalpa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aiṁā 3, Chapter 6).

VEDĀṆA. A goddess who caused pain to living things. Adharma married Hīṁsā. Two daughters named Nṛtā and Nīrṇī were born to them. From them Bhaya, Naraka, Māyā and Vedanā were born. Mṛtyu was the daughter of Māyā. Duhkhā was the son of Vedanā. (Ārya Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

VEDĀNGA. See under Veda.

VEDANIDHĪ. A hermit. For further details see under Pramohiṇī.

VEDĀNTA. See under Veda.

VEDĀSARMĀ I. The son of a brahmin named Śivasarman. (See under Śivasarmanā).

VEDĀSARMĀ II. See under Vidura.

VEDĀŚIRAS I. A hermit born in the clan of Bhrigu. He was born to the hermit Mārkanḍeya by his wife Mūrdhānī otherwise called Dhumrā, Pīvārī was the wife of Vēdāśiras. (Brahma : 2, 11, 7; Vāyu Purāṇa 28 : 6).

While Vēdāśiras was doing penance once, a celestial maid named Sucī came to make him deviate from penance. A daughter was born to him by her. Yamadharma wished to kidnap that daughter. Vēdāśiras cursed Yamadharma to become a river. (Skanda Purāṇa, 4 : 259).

VEDĀŚIRAS II. A hermit. He was the son born to Kṛṣṇa by his wife Dhiṣṭa. Vēdāśiras learned Viṣṇu Purāṇa from the Nāgas (serpents) in Pātāla (underworld) and taught it to his disciple Pramati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 6 : 47).
VEDASMTA. A river. (Mahabharata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 17).

VEKA. A woman of the race of Râkṣasas (giants). This woman was the sister of Puṣpotkaṭa and Kaikasya. (See under Akampana).

VENA I. An ancient King who was notorious for his bad rule.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visnu in the following order: Brahma - Svayambhuva Manu - Uttanapada - Dhruva-Siṣṭa-Riṣu-Caṇṣuṣa Manu-Kuru-Aṅga-Vena.

2) Birth. Ten sons including Kuru, were born to Manu Caṇṣuṣa by his wife Naḍvalâ. Agneya, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six sons Aṅga and others. Aṅga married Sunîthâ. The son Vena was born by Sunîthâ. It is mentioned in Visnu Purâna, Aṁśa I, Chapter 13, that Sunîthâ, the mother of Vena was the eldest daughter of Yama, and in Vâmana Purâna Chapter 47, that this Sunîthâ was the daughter born to Kâla and Mṛtyu, Vena who was born as the son of the daughter of Yama was born a wicked man because of the badness of his grandfather.

Vena grew up as a great sinner. A story occurs in Padma Purâna about an incident which caused Vena to become a great sinner.

The story says that Sunîthâ was the mother of Vena. In her story she used to imitate her father's job which was hurting others. One day when she went to the forest for play with her maids she saw Susaika the son of a Gandharva named Gitakolâhala. That youth who was handsome in every part of his body, was doing penance meditating on the goddess Sarasvatî for the attainment of the art of music. Sunîthâ began to annoy him daily. Susaika bore this annoyance patiently. He said only this - "Go away, go away." But she did not pay heed to his appeals. Once she became angry and struck him. Getting angry at this, Susaika called out, "You wicked girl! Why do you annoy me? You have beaten me, who am engaged in penance, for no cause." That righteous Gandharva youth cursed his anger considering that she was a woman.

She told him "My father will beat everybody in the three worlds. He will harm the wicked, and will not do any harm to the good. So he rules the country righteously." Sunîthâ told all about the story to her father. Though Yama, the incarnation of righteousness, heard all that his daughter said he did not give any reply.

She again went to the forest and struck him with a whip. Susaika rose up, shivering with pain and cursed her thus:

"You wicked girl! When you become a house-holder and join your husband you will get a son who will be a scoffer of Devas and Brahmans and an all-round sinner." Thus cursing her he continued his penance. Vena was born according to this curse.

3) The wicked rule of Vena. The hermits anointed Vena as the King. He became lord of the whole earth. He made a proclamation thus:- "Sacrifice is prohibited. Giving alms, is prohibited. Offerings of no kind should be made. Who else, other than I, can be the Yajna-puruṣa? (the deity who eats the food of sacrifice) ? I am the only lord and consumer of sacrifices".

Hearing this proclamation, the hermits approached him and told him that the Vedas were the basis of righteousness, that sacrifices were ordained in them, and that if no sacrifice was performed the Devas would not be pleased and so on. But this did not make any change in his behaviour.

The hermits became angry. They all gathered together and recited spells and struck him with Darbha (poa) grass and killed him. As there was no King the world fell into darkness. Because of the troubles caused by plunderers, people gathered round the hermits. Hermits joined together and churned the left hand of Vena, from which a man of short stature came out, to whom the hermits said, 'Niṣṭâ' (sit). Because the hermits said Niṣṭâ, Niṣṭâ came into existence from that dwarf born of the sins of Vena. Then the hermits churned the right hand of Vena. At this churning a person as big as a mountain with divine signs came out. He had bow and arrows and in his palm there were marks of a wheel and flag. Seeing this the Devas anointed him the King of the earth. He ruled righteously and brought the goddess earth (Prthvi) who had estranged herself from his father Vena close to him. Because he had conciliated Prthvi he became famous as a King. (Yamana Purana, Chapter 47).

VENĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. Information about this river, taken from Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Venā-river stays in the palace of Varuṇa serving him. (M.B. Sañña Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

(ii) Sahadeva defeated the ruler of the country at the basin of river Venā, during his conquest of the regions of the south. (M.B. Sañña Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12).

(iii) Those who fast on the basin of this river for three days will go to heaven in an aerial chariot yoked with pea-cocks and swans. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 32).

(iv) Among the rivers which originate fire, this river also is included. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 224, Stanza 24).

(v) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 165, Stanza 20, that this is a river worthy to be remembered every morning and evening.

VETRIKA. A country in India. Duryodhana had sent the army of the kingdom of Vētrika for the protection of Bhīṣma. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 7).

VIBHĀNDAKA (VIBHĀNDAKA).

1) General information. A hermit, born in the family of Kasapa. Once he happened to see Urvasī. When he pondered over her, seminal flow occurred to him. An antelope swallowed it and gave birth to a son. That son was known as the hermit Ṛṣyasṛṅga, when he grew up.
(For details see under Ṛṣyasṛṅga).
2) Other details.
(i) Vibhaṣḍaka stays in the palace of Indra and glorifies him. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 18).
(ii) Vibhaḍa is as radiant as Prajāpati. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 32).

VIBHAVĀRI. A mental daughter of Brahmā. She is considered to be the personation of Night. It is mentioned in Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 154, that according to the instruction of Brahmā, Vibhāvari entered the body of Umā and from that day onwards the body of Umā became dark.

VIBHAVĀSUC. A hermit who got angry quickly. This hermit cursed his brother Supratika. (See under Garuḍa, para 5).

VIBHAVĀSUD. A hermit. This hermit respected Ṛudhiṣṭhirā much. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 24).

VIBHAVĀSUI. One of the sons born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. Vibhāvasu also was present at the battle between Vṛtrasura and Indra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VIBHINDU. A king who was very liberal. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala 8, that this king had given Medhatithi a gift of forty-six thousand cows.

VIBHIṢĀNA. Brother of Rāvana. The son Viśravas was born to Prajāpati Pulastya. Rāvana, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa were born to Viśravas by his wife Mālinī. A daughter named Sṛpājanakā also was born to them. Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa went to do penance under the leadership of their eldest brother Rāvana. They did severe penance and obtained various boons. The boon given to Vibhīṣaṇa was to live as a righteous man. After that they came back and defeated Kubera, the ruler of Lāṅkā and brought Lāṅkā under their control. Rāvana became the ruler of Lāṅkā. Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa lived with their brother in Lāṅkā. Rāvana married Mandodari. Kumbhakarṇa took Vajrayālā the daughter of Mahābalī and Vibhīṣaṇa took Saralā, the daughter of Saśiṣṭa a Gandharva as their wives, according to Utara Rāmāyaṇa. Rāvana conquered the three worlds and was ruling as the emperor of the whole world, when Śrī Rāma and Lāṅkāmaṇa went to the forest, with Śītā. Rāvana carried Śītā away to Lāṅkā. Rāma and Lāṅkāmaṇa, with the help of the monkey-army entered Lāṅkā. At this time Rāvana called together his ministers to consider the details about the battle with Śrī Rāma. Every present except Vibhīṣaṇa voted for the battle. Vibhīṣaṇa advised Rāvana to return Śītā, the stolen property and beg Śrī Rāma for pardon. Rāvana got angry and expelled Vibhīṣaṇa from Lāṅkā. Vibhīṣaṇa joined the side of Śrī Rāma and informed him of all the military secrets of Rāvana. In the battle which ensued Rāvana was killed and Vibhīṣaṇa was made the king of Lāṅkā by Śrī Rāma. It is stated in Kāmarāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa that according to the instruction of Śrī Rāma and at the instance of Indra, Viśvakārmā came to Lāṅkā and renovated the city of Lāṅkā. Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā and became the king. One day Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Rāvana (Rāvana with thousand heads) stole away the daughter of Sugrīva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhīṣaṇa. Vibhīṣaṇa informed Śrī Rāma of this. Śrī Rāma, with Lāṅkāmaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa, Sugrīva, Hanumān and the monkey-army went to the city of Sahasramukha Rāvana in the middle of Mīlaka sea. A fierce battle ensued which lasted for three days. All the Rākṣasas were killed. (See under Sahasramukharāvana).

It is mentioned in Kāmba Rāmāyaṇa that in the horse sacrifice performed by Śrī Rāma, the control of the army was in the hands of Sugrīva and financial control was vested in the hands of Vibhīṣaṇa.

VIBHIṢĀNA. II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, as given below, about another Vibhīṣaṇa who had ruled over Lāṅkā.
Once Ghaṭotkacca went to the palace of Vibhīṣaṇa as the messenger of Sugrīva. Vibhīṣaṇa who heard from Ghaṭotkacca about Yudhiṣṭhirā honours the messenger greatly and gave him a large quantity of valuable presents.

VIBHIṢAŅA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 22).

VIBHĪRA. A King who was the descendant of Yaśāti. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that he was the son of Kṛti and the father of Aṇuha.

VIBHĪRAVARĪ. Father-in-law of the hermit Šuka. Šuka, the son of Vyāsa married Pivirā, who gave birth to four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devāsrita and a daughter named Kirti. This daughter Kirti was married by Aṇuha the son of King Vibhīra. Brahmadatta was the son born to Aṇuha by Kirti. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

VIBHU I. A King of the family of Bhārata. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that he was the son of Prastot and the father of Prthuṣeṇa.

VIBHU II. Indra of the age of the fifth Manu. (See under Manvantara).

VICITRAVĪRA. Father of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (For further details see under Dhṛtarāṣṭra).

VIDAYAVATA. A devil. In the previous birth, this devil was a Kṣatriya King named Hariharā. This King lived as a godless man in consequence of which, he was born as a devil in his next birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭāla Khana, Chapter 95).
VIDALLA. Minister of the king Dhruvasanadhi. (For further details see under Dhruvasanadhi).

VIDANDA. A king in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 12, that Vidaqqa and his son Daqda were present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi.

VIDARBAHA I. A brother of Bharata. It is stated in Bhagavata, Skanda 5, that Kesavarta, Ilavarta, Brahmaparta, Aryavarta, Bhadraketu, Sena, Indrasprk, Vidarba, and so on were brothers of Bharata the son of Rsabha. Nimi was his son.

VIDARBAHA II. See under Jyamagha.

VIDARBAHA III. An ancient country in India. The information about this Purānicly famous country obtained from Mahabharata, is given below:

(i) Once Sahadeva, during his regional conquest, captured Bhojakata, a part of Vidarba and expelled the king Bhismaka from the country. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 11).

(ii) By the blessing of hermit Damayanti, three sons, Dama, Danta and Damana and a daughter, Damayanti, were born to Bhismaka the king of Vidarba. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58, Stanza 5).

(iii) Having heard about the Svayamvara (Bride selecting a suitable husband from the candidates present) of the princess Damayanti of Vidarba, the gods Indra, Agni, Varuna and Yama came to Vidarba; (See under Damayanti).

(iv) Damayanti is called Vaidarbhī because she was born in Vidarba. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 55, Stanza 12).

(v) Rukmini, the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, was the daughter of a king of Vidarba. Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa carried Rukmini away by force. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 13).

VIDEHA MĀTHAVA A king born of the dynasty of Mathu. There is an interesting story about this king in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa. It is as follows.

Videga put Agni in his mouth and lived without talking, fearing that Agni might jump out. His priest Rahuğana tried to the utmost, but he could not extricate fire from the mouth of the king.

Once by chance the word Gṛta got out of the mouth of Rahuğana. Instantly the fire in the mouth of the king blazed into a big flame and burst out of the mouth. That fire gradually increased and began to consume the world, Rivers became dry. It seemed that even Videga and his priest would be burnt to ashes in that blazing fire. At last Videga got into the river Sadānirā, which flowed through the boundary of his own kingdom, with the intention of not becoming a prey to the ever-increasing fire. With this the fire abated.

VIDEHA I. Another name of emperor Nimi. (See under Janaka).

VIDEHA II. The kingdom of Mithilā. This country which lies on the North East part of India was ruled by Kṣatriya kings of the dynasty of Videha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, that Bhūmasena had during his eastern regional conquest, conquered this country. About this kingdom which is the native country of Pitē, the following information is available in Mahābhārata.

(i) The hermitage of Parāśurāma was on the North of Videha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 13).

(ii) The army of Videha attacked Arjuna in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 32).

(iii) Kṣara defeated the Kṣatriya princes of the country of Janaka (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 6).

(iv) Parāśurāma cut the Kṣatriyas of this country into pieces with his sharp arrows. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 11).

(v) This country had been giving tribute to Kṣara. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 33).

VIDHĀTĀ. A son born to Bhigu. By his wife Khyāti two sons Dhātā and Vidhātā and a daughter named Lakṣmī were born to Bhigu. Lakṣmī was given in marriage to Viṣṇu. The daughter of Meru, Āyati, was married by Dhātā and Niyaṭi by Vidhātā. The son Mrkṣuṇḍu was born to Vidhātā by Niyaṭi. This Mrkṣuṇḍu was the father of Mārkṣṇḍeya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aśīṇa I, Chapter 10).

The following statements occur about Dhātā and Vidhātā in Mahābhārata.

(i) At Nākaloka (heaven) Dhātā and Vidhātā took the form of women and allowed hermit Uttānika to see them. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 166).

(ii) Dhātā and Vidhātā stood above the city of Virāṭa to see the battle between Arjuna and Kṛpa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 11).

(iii) Dhātā and Vidhātā lived with Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 42).

(iv) Dhātā and Vidhātā gave to Subrahmanyā two followers named Suvrata and Sukarmā. (M. B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 42).

VIDHAVĀ A woman whose husband is dead. In ancient India, it was ordained how a widow should live. It was allowed for a widow to get a son by her younger brother but law to continue the family line in case the death of her husband occurred before the couple had children. The procedure about this is given in Manusmṛti, Chapter 9.

“He who goes to accept the widow with the permission of great people, should besmear his body with ghee and go to her bed in the night in a dark room. She should have only one son in this manner. After she has become pregnant, they should behave to each other as a teacher and a younger brother in-law.”

VIDHRITI. Son of Khagana and the father of Hiranya-nābha. He was a King. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VIDISĀ. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 12, that this river stays in the palace of Varuṇa serving him.

VIDRĀVAN. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa by Manu. (Matsya Purāṇa 6:18).

VIDRUTA. A King born in the family of Yayāti. He was the son of Rucaka. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VIDULĀ. A heroic Kṣatriya woman of India. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, there is a story, how this Vidulā sent her son, who had fled from the battle-field because of fear, back to the battlefield again. The Pāṇḍavas, who had completed forest-life and Pseudonymity successfully and returned to Hastināpura were again deceived and put to shame. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's argument as a mediator was not successful, in the palace of the Kauravas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came away from the palace of Duryodhana and entered the house of Vidura and visited Kuntī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked her opinion on the idea of waging a war against the Kauravas. It is not meet and right on the part of a heroic mother to welcome a son who comes home being defeated in battle. To substantiate this point, she told Śrī Kṛṣṇa the story of Vidulā, as given below.

Vidulā was a brave woman, who lived in ancient India. Her son Sañjaya fought with the King of Sindhu and was defeated. When he came home Vidulā did not receive him. She emboldened him by saying that she would be more proud of a son, who had sacrificed his life in the battlefield than one who returned home defeated. All his arguments which were excuses for his cowardice, were refuted by his mother. At last Sañjaya engaged again in a battle with the King of Sindhu. On hearing this story told by Kuntī Śrī Kṛṣṇa became immensely pleased. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, 3 Chapters from 134).

VIDURA I.

1) General information. Vidura was a superhuman being, very famous in the story of Mahābhārata, as a brother of Dṛḍarāṣṭra, as a man of colossal intelligence who had been closely watching the goings and comings of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, as the adviser of Dṛḍarāṣṭra, and as a man of immense learning and wisdom.

2) Incarnation of Dharmadeva. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 107, which describes Vidura as born from a portion of Dharmadeva. The story is given below.

Long ago there was a hermit called Māṇḍavya in India. As he was standing in deep meditation near his hermitage, the men of the King chased some thieves and came to the place where the hermit stood. The robbers placed the stolen property near the hermit and ran away. The king's men caught the hermit, and the robbers. The King ordered them to be placed on a trident. The thieves died on the trident. But Māṇḍavya was not dead. The King sawed the trident and got Māṇḍavya down. The hermit went to Dharmadeva and asked him what his blame was for suffering the punishment of the trident on him. Dharmadeva replied that the punishment was inflicted for a cruel deed he had done in his childhood. He had caught some flies and made a bunch of them by piercing them with the rib of a coconut-palm leaf. But Māṇḍavya argued that Dharmadeva was not right in punishing him because the Śastra and rules of righteousness said that mistakes committed by boys below the age of twelve could not be considered to be sins. Further he cursed Dharmadeva that he would take birth on the earth from the womb of a Śudrā. Accordingly Dharmadeva took birth from the womb of the servant of Ambikā and Ambalikā.

3) Birth. Vidura was born as the brother of Dṛḍarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For detailed story see under Dṛḍarāṣṭra I, para 2).

4) Up to marriage. Dṛḍarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura spent their younger days in Hastinapur as inseparable brothers. Their teacher was Bhīṣma. Vidura learned the Vedas, Śastra, Purāṇas, Itihāsas etc. also, along with the education given to a prince such as archery, club-fight, sword-fight, wrestling, controlling elephants etc. He understood that to be righteous was far better than fighting. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 108, that Vidura got the sense of righteousness, and education in fighting, at the same time.

Childhood ended. As Vidura was born to a Brahmin by a Śudrā woman he had no right to become King. When he grew up, the duty to find a wife for him fell on Bhīṣma. At that time a damsel born to a Brahmin by a Śudrā woman was being brought up in the palace of King Devaka. With the permission of Devaka, Bhīṣma brought the girl and gave her in marriage to Vidura. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 114, that sons and daughters were born to the couple.

5) Partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura was the most intelligent and wisest man of his time, and he always favoured righteousness. Though he viewed the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas with equal favour, in his heart he felt some partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas, because they were virtuous, whereas the Kauravas were becoming more and more wicked. As this partiality arose from his sense of righteousness, nobody could blame Vidura for this. His aim was the prosperity of the Lunar dynasty of Kings.

Many ill omen were seen at the time of the birth of Duryodhana. Vidura understood that if that infant grew up he would be a comet to the Lunar dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 115, that Vidura advised Dṛḍarāṣṭra that it would be better for him to throw away that infant.

The death of Pāṇḍu drew Vidura closer to the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura took the lead in performing the funeral rites and other ceremonies which followed. The Pāṇḍavas were very sad and miserable at the death of their father. It was at this time that Duryodhana poisoned Bhīmasena, tied him with a rope and threw him into the river Ganges. Bhīmasena was carried to the world of nāgās (serpents). Kuntī felt grieved at the loss of her son Bhīma, but Vidura consoled her.

It was due to the wisdom of Vidura that the Pāṇḍavas escaped from the disaster in the lac-house. As soon as Duryodhana had completed the lac-house, Vidura understood the deception lying hidden under it and he informed the Pāṇḍavas of everything about it. Moreover he sent a man named Kanhaka and made an underground passage from the lac-house. When the lac-house was burnt down, the Pāṇḍavas escaped by the under-ground passage and reached the banks of the Ganges. Vidura had sent a ferryman secretly to take them to the other side of the Ganges. When Bhīṣma got the news that the Pāṇḍavas had been burnt to death in the lac-house he became very sad. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 149, that Vidura informed Bhīṣma secretly that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead.

After this event the Pāṇḍavas come into the scene only at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Pāṇčālī. Bhīṣma and Droṇa proposed that the Pāṇḍavas should be brought back and be given half of the kingdom. Vidura, by his arguments convinced Dṛḍarāṣṭra that the proposal of Bhīṣma and Droṇa was correct. Dṛḍarāṣṭra asked Vidura to bring the Pāṇḍavas back. Vidura went to the city of Drupada and brought the Pāṇḍavas back and consolde their mother Kuntī. After this Yudhisṭhira performed Rājaśīya (sacrifice of royal consecration). Vidura took part in it and took the charge of financial part of the sacrifice. It was after this that Duryodhana challenged Yudhishtira for a game of dice. Vidura saw beforehand that this move on the part of Duryodhana was dangerous. So he talked forcibly against this, and gave warning to all concerned. As Duryodhana did not agree with Vidura, he was scolded. But Duryodhana was firm and the game was conducted. Pāṇḍāli was harassed by means of stripping and the Pāṇḍavas went to the forest. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, that Vidura had been witnessing all these scenes with wet eyes.

6) Separated from the Pāṇḍavas. When the Pāṇḍavas were driven to the forest, Dhrtañkṣa felt sorry. He became more afraid of the people than he was sorry for the Pāṇḍavas. He understood that his subjects would unite and rise against his sons. He called Vidura and asked him for a remedy. Vidura who was full of impatience, made a speech against the wickedness of the sons of Dhrtañkṣa and advised him to forsake his own sons and to bring the Pāṇḍavas back and give them the kingdom. Dhrtañkṣa did not like this approach. He said that Vidura was partial to the Pāṇḍavas and asked him to go away from the palace. Vidura became grieved at this. He followed the Pāṇḍavas, and walking a long distance, reached the forest Kāmyaka and met the Pāṇḍavas. When Vidura had gone Dhrtañkṣa felt miserable. He sent for Vidura and when he returned Dhrtañkṣa begged for pardon. Vidura again became the adviser of Dhrtañkṣa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 6).

7) Adviser of Dhrtañkṣa. The advice of Vidura is famous in Mahābhārata. The main duty of Vidura was to console Dhrtañkṣa by speaking about righteousness when he became troubled in mind because of the constant quarrels between his sons and the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura fulfilled his duty well. Duryodhana was firm on the point that not a dot of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Hastinapura as mediator. Duryodhana showed disrespect to him. Vidura said in strong words that it was wrong on the part of Duryodhana to have done so and compelled Dhrtañkṣa to show due respect and hospitality to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Accordingly Dhrtañkṣa welcomed Śrī Kṛṣṇa and showed respect and hospitality. Knowing this, Duryodhana and his brothers tried to make Śrī Kṛṣṇa a captive. Vidura harshly scolded them for this attempt. Seeing all these impudent actions on the part of his sons, Dhrtañkṣa became distressed. Vidura consoled him by good exhortations. He told Dhrtañkṣa about the transience of life and the importance of the soul. When the battle was fiercely going on in the battleground of Kurukṣetra, Vidura went there to console him and gave him good advice. The death of Bhīṣma was an unbearable grief to Vidura. He took part in the funeral of Bhīṣma. He himself placed the body on the funeral pyre. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 11).

8) Pilgrimage. When Vidura failed in his attempt to ward off a pitched battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas he felt extremely miserable. Without taking part in the battle, he started on a pilgrimage. Getting the news at Prabhāśakṣetra about the end of the battle, he went to the basin of river Yamunā. On the way he heard the news of the passing away of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, from Uddhava. Before death Śrī Kṛṣṇa had revealed that Vidura had heard Uddhavagītā from Maitreyā. This book which is in the form of a conversation between Vidura and Maitreyā contains the talk between Kapila and Devahūti. Description of the line of Manus, sacrifice of Dakṣa, story of Dhruva, story of Pṛthu, story of Puraṇajāna etc. were the subjects of the talk. (Bhāgavata, 3–4).

9) End. The Bhrata-battle came to an end. The Kauravas were exterminated. Efforts were begun to establish law and order. In all these efforts Vidura was a help to the Pāṇḍavas. Still he spent most of his time with the old Dhrtañkṣa. Yudhishtira came to Dhrtañkṣa and both embraced each other. Seeing this Vidura cried aloud. Vidura advised Yudhishtira how to carry on the administration of the new government. After this he decided to go to the forest to spend his last days. Dhrtañkṣa, Gāndhārī, Kuntī, Vidura and Sākuni went to the forest. The Pāṇḍavas tried in vain to prevent them from going. When Dhrtañkṣa, Gāndhārī, Kuntī, Vidura, Sānijaya and others started for the forest, even Bhīmasena cried aloud. Pāṇḍavas and the people of the city went along with them up to the river Ganges. On the bank of the Ganges near the hermitage of Satayūpa, a hermitage was erected and Vidura and the others lived there.

They lived there for nearly six years. The Pāṇḍavas became unable to bear the separation from their elders. Once Dharmaputra dreamt about his mother. Next day the Pāṇḍavas went to the banks of the Ganges. Pāṇḍāli, Subhadrā, Uttarā and many people of the city followed them. They went to the Satayūpa-hermitage and saw Dhrtañkṣa and the others. But the great Vidura was not there. When asked about it he got the reply that having become abstemious and having no more desires he was wandering about. Yudhishtira was greatly troubled.

Next day at dawn when Yudhishtira went to bathe in the Ganges, on the way he saw Vidura sitting in contemplation with a stone in his mouth. Yudhishtira stood with joined palms before the lean and weak form of that sage and said “Look, Dharmaputra bows before you.” He repeated this several times. But there was no change in Vidura. Yudhishtira’s disappointment did not last long. For, in a short while Dharmaputra saw that a divine radiance emanated from the body of Vidura and passed on to his body and that the body of Vidura fell lifeless on the ground. This union took place because both Vidura and Yudhishtira were portions of Dharmadeva. After this Dharmaputra made preparations to burn the body of Vidura. Then an ethereal voice said “Vidura is abstemious. His body should not be burned.” Dharmaputra went to the hermitage and informed all, about the death of Vidura. (M.B. Ātramāvātika Parva, Chapters 26 to 28).

Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Svārgarohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 22, that Vidura entered Svarga (heaven) and stays there in the form of Dharmadeva.
string and went to every house saying "Look, here am I, a slayer of Brahmin. Please, give alms to the drunkard and killer of a Brahmin." Saying thus he walked from house to house and took alms. But he did not get remission of Brahmayā (killing of a Brahmin).

Filled with grief and sorrow and mental worry the sinner Vidura sat in the shade of a tree. At that time Candrasarma, a Brahmin of Magadha came there. He was a wicked man who had killed his teacher because of inordinate lust in consequence of which he had been forsaken by his own people. Vidura asked Candrasarma who wore no sign of a Brähmana, what he was. Candrasarma told his story to Vidura who in return told him his sinful acts.

At this time another Brahmin named Vedaśarma came there. He also was a sinner. The three of them told each other about their sinful acts. At this time Vallāla, a Vaisya came there. He was a drunkard who had killed cows. These four desperate sinners travelled together and visited several fūras (holy baths). But they did not get remission of their sins. At last they started for Kānaṇjaragiri.

While these desperate sinners were living in Kānaṇjar came a poor Brahmin there. He asked them why they were so sad. They told him everything. When he heard their story they felt pity for them. The old Brahmin said

"You sinners should go to Prayāga, Puṣkara, Sarvatirtha and Vārānasī and bathe in the Gaṅgā on New Moon days and you will become free from sin." They obeyed the old Brahmin and went to the holy places told by him. Thus Vidura and his friends became sinless.

VIDŪRA. A king of the Kuru dynasty. He was the son born to the great king Kuru by Subhāngī, a damsel of Dāśārha family. Vidura married Sambriyā, a princess of Madhu royal family. A son named Anasvā was born to her. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 39-40).

VIDURĀGAMANAR JYALABHAPARVA. A sub-section of Ādi Parva, comprising chapters 199 to 217, in Mahābhārata.

VIDŪRATHA I. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Information got from Mahābhārata about this king is given below.

(i) Vidūratha also was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 19).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10, mention is made that the brightness of this king increased after his participation in the festival conducted on mount Raivata.

(iii) Vidūratha was one of the seven famous and mighty kings of the Yadu dynasty. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 14).

(iv) Vidūratha was a close friend of Śiśupāla, Śālva, Jarāsandha and so on. Jarāsandha employed this Vidūratha as the guardian of the Eastern entrance of the city of Mathurā. When Śri Kṛṣṇa killed his brother Dantavakra, Śālva, Śiśupāla and others, Vidūratha ran to take revenge on Kṛṣṇa. But he was killed by Śri Kṛṣṇa. (Bhagavata, Skanda 10).

(v) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 16, that after death he joined the Viśvadevas.

VIDŪRATHA II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 75, that Rāśvakīn hid the son of this king in a mountain and saved him from the Kṣatriya extermination of Pārśurāma and at that time spotted leopards brought up this child.

VIDŪRATHA III. A king who was the friend of the hermit Bhalaṇḍa. This king had two sons named Suniti and Sumati and a daughter named Mudāvati. One day while Vidūratha was hunting in the forest, he saw a cleavage on the earth caused by the yawning of Kujrmbhāṣura. The king stood there for a while looking at the cleavage. Then the hermit Suvrata who had been standing close by approached the king and said, "This asura Kujrmbha has a divine pestle with him. Because of the possession of this pestle he has become invincible and is a threat to the whole world."

Vidūratha, who knew everything from Suvrata, lived cautiously. One day his daughter was carried away by this Kujrmbhāṣura. Suniti and Sumati confronted the asura to rescue their sister but were made captives. Finally Vatsapriya, the son of the hermit Bhalaṇḍa killed the Rāksasā (giant) and liberated princess Mudāvati. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

VIDŪRATHA I. A king born in the family of Bharata, the son of Dusyanta. The father of this king was Sura-tha and his son was Sārvabhauma. (Bhagavata, Skanda 10).

VIDŪRATHA II. Brother of Dantavakra. When Śri Kṛṣṇa had defeated Dantavakra, his brother Vidūratha came to fight with Śri Kṛṣṇa and was killed in the fight. (Bhagavata, Skanda 10).

VIDUŚA. A king of the Aiṅga dynasty. Ghṛta was the father of king Vīduṣa and Pracetas was his son. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VIDYĀ. A maid of Devi Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 48).

VIDYĀ II. A deity. This deity is worshipped as the deity of three Vedas which are the most important of the religious or Vedic literature. Mention is made about this deity in the preface of Rgvedabhāṣya by Sāyaṇa, as follows.

Once Vidyā approached a Brahmin and said "I am your wealth. Your duty is to impart me to disciples who are pure, celibate, law-abiding and active, and who protect the treasure. I hate disciples who are jealous.”

VIDYĀDHARAS (S). A group of semi-gods. Vidyādhāras, Apsarasas (celestial maids), Yaksas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras and so on are semi-gods. Of these Kinnaras are lute-players, and Vidyādhāras wear garlands, and all these groups live in the sky. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 8, that when attracted by spells and incantations, Indra went to the Sarpasatru (serpent sacrifice) of Janamejaya, the Vidyādhāras walked behind him (Indra).

VIDYĀNĀTHA (AGASTYA). A Sanskrit writer on rhetori-

r. He was also called Agastya. He is the author of Pratāparudrīyam. The real name of Pratāparudrīyam is Partāparudrayasobhaṇam.

He was a member of the court of King Pratāparudrādeva who ruled over the Kingdom of Waraṅgal from 1295 to 1323 A.D. He has written a drama of five acts, under the name "Pratāparudra. Kalyāṇa.” Pratāparudrīyam is a book on rhetorical figures.
VIDYĀŚAGARA. Father of Bhartṛhari. See under Bhartṛhari.

VIDYĀTIRTHA. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 52, that those who bathe in this tirtha (bath) would get knowledge.

VIDYOTĀ. The son born to Sage Dharma, by his wife Lāmbā, the daughter of Dākṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 6).

VIDYOTĀ. A celestial maiden of Alakāpri. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 45, that Vidyotā took part in the dance performed in honour of Aṣṭāvakra, the hermit.

VIDYUDDHARA. A Deva Gandharva. (See under Nāhuṣa).

VIDYUDRŪPA. A Yakṣa who was the favourite of Kubera. This Yakṣa married Madanikā, the daughter of Menakā. Once when these two were sitting on mount Kailāsa and drinking liquor the bird Kaṅka born of the family of Garuḍa came there. Vidyudrūpa killed Kaṅka after a small fight. Hearing about the death of Kaṅka, his brother Kandara came to avenge the death of his brother. A fierce battle ensued between the two, in which Vidyudrūpa met with death. After this Madanikā accepted Kandara as her husband. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 2, 4, 28).

VIDYUDVARGAS. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 31).

VIDYUJJHIVA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). This Vidyujjhiva was a friend of Ghatotkacā. He was killed by Duryodhana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 20).

VIDYUJJHIVA II. Husband of Śūrpanakha. A son named Sambhukumāra was born to the couple. As this son Sambhukumāra was standing like a young tree in the forest Danḍjakāranya, Lākṣmaṇa cut it down by his sword. Thus Sambhukumāra died. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa).

VIDYUJJHIVA III. One of the important Rākṣasa followers of Rāvaṇa. This giant, by his sorcery and witch-craft, showed Śītā, the head cut off from the body of Śrī Rāma and his broken bow, to make his consent to become the wife of Rāvaṇa. He repeated this stratagem on several occasions. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 12).

VIDYUJJHIVA IV. One of the sons born to Viśravas by his wife Vākā. Mention is made in Vāyu Purāṇa that this Rākṣasa lives in the city called Arvākātala in Pāṭala (underworld) known as Mahātāla.

VIDYUNMĀLĪ I. A son of Tārakākura. He was one of the Tripurās. (For details see under Triputra).

VIDYUNMĀLĪ II. A mighty and brave Rākṣasa who was a friend of Rāvaṇa. After the death of Rāvaṇa, this asura, who lived in the Pāṭala (underworld) stole away the sacrificial horse of Śrī Rāma to avenge the death of Rāvaṇa. Śatrughna killed Vidyunmāli and redeemed the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Kāṇḍa).

VIDYUTĀ. A celestial maiden of Alakāpri. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 45, that this celestial maiden performed a dance in honour of the hermit Aṣṭāvakra.

VIDYUTĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 62).

VIDYUTKEṢA. A Rākṣasa (giant). (For details see under Praheṭi).

VIDYUTKEŚI. A Rākṣasa King. The notorious Śuкеṣi was the son of this King. (See under Śuкеṣi).

VIDYUTPARΝĀ. A celestial maiden born to Kaśyapa-prajāpati by his wife Pradūli. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Aśī Parva, Chapter 63, that celestial maids such as Alambaṣa, Vidyuntrapāṇa, Mīrakṣeṭi, Tilottamā and such others were famous for their beauty.

VIDYUTPRABHĀ I. See under Muktaphalalakaṭu.

VIDYUTPRABHĀ II. A hermit. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 125).

VIDYUTPRABHĀ III. A Dānava (Asura). This asura pleased Rudradeva by penance and acquired from him the control of all the three worlds for one lakh of years, the recognition as a follower of Śiva and the kingdom of Kuśadvipa, as boons. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 14).

VIDYUTPRABHĀ I. Ten celestial maids of Northern quarter. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 21).

VIDYUTPRABHĀ II. Grand-daughter of Mahābali. (See under Sridatta).

VIGAHANA. A famous King, born in Mukaṭa Vaniśa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

VIGHANA. A giant on the side of Rāvaṇa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 6).

VIGRAHA I. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanya by the ocean. The other one was Saṅgraha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 50).

VIGRAHA II. One of the six attributes of Kings. (See under Saṃgraha).

VIGRAHA III. (Image).

1) General information. God, who is not discernible to the outward senses, is given embodiment and consecrated in places of worship by people. These figures are called Vigraham (idols or images). People worship Śālagrāma, (a kind of ammonite found in the river Gaṇḍakī), Bāṇalīga (Phallus), mystical diagrams, animals, birds, trees, rivers, lakes, places of death etc. and so many other things.

2) The different kinds of Vigraham. Vigraham are of three groups. They are :- (1) Mysterious (2) Evident-mysterious (3) Evident. Śālagrāma, Phallus etc. belong to the group mysterious. The Mukhaliṅga, considered to be the image of Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva) in the Elephanta cave, belongs to the group Evident. The image of Phallus is Evident-mysterious. In the first, there is no form or figure. In the second there are parts of the figure. The image which shows the entire figure is Evident. Some gods and goddesses possess two appearances, peaceful and fierce. Those who wish to succeed in performing cruel deeds and to vanquish enemies, worship fierce gods whereas those who wish for peace, worship peaceful Gods. Viṣvārūpa, (assuming all shapes), Narasirnha (the man-lion), Vacaputraśāyi (as lying on banyan-leaf) and Parasurāma are fierce forms of Viṣṇu. Destroying Kāma (cupid) Gaja and Triputra are fierce forms of Śiva worshipped by some people. Generally temples with images in this form are erected outside the village or city.

Owing to the differences, in the making and the materials used, the images are divided into three groups.
They are portraits, half-portraits and corrupted portraits. The whole of the figure will be made in (portraits) citra. In half-citra only the front view will be completed. Corrupted Citras are images done on the wall or rock.

3) Main images. Main images are mostly Śaivite or Vaiṣṇavite. There will be one or two other images. Worship of Devi (Goddess) is one of them. The Śaivites will worship Pārvatī also after Śiva and the Vaiṣṇavites Mahālakṣmi also after Viṣṇu. In South India the worshippers are Śaivites and Vaiṣṇavites.

4) Śā vítīes. In India a large number of people worship Śiva. There is no much difference in the mode of worship of these various people. There are worships which are in accordance with the Vedas and which are not. Forms of worship which are Sātvika (of goodness) and which are not, could be seen. The Śaiva worship called Paraśupāda is very ancient. The phallus at Guḍimalla is considered to be as old as B.C. 2nd century. From this it could be inferred how old, the Śaivite worship is in India.

5) The Śā vítī images. Of the emblems denoting Śiva, the most important is the Phallus, which is of two kinds, movable and immovable. Risen by itself and/or erected and set firm and consecrated inside temples are immovable; that which is made of earth, metal, jewel, wood or stone, is movable. There are Phalluses made for the time being. They are fixed on platforms or pedestals. They are of different sizes and shapes. The Phallus is made of male stone and the pedestal of female stone.

6) The portions of Śiva. There are various kinds of images meant to reveal various attributes of Śiva. Liṅgodbhuva (originated from Phallus), Candrashekharas, Raudra, Umāśāṁbha (with Umā etc.) are some of them. Kāmāntaka (killing Kāma or Cupid), Gajāri (enemy of Gaja), Kālāri (Enemy of Yama) and Tripurārāhaka (burning Tripura) are figures of extermination. Śiva has the figures of blessing Candesa, Viṣṇu, Nandiśvara, Vighneshva and Arjuna also. There are a large number of images in various dancing poses. There are four other figures of Dakṣināmūrti, such as the explanation, knowledge, yoga (or meditation, contemplation and other ways of union with the Universal Soul) and Viśādhara (carrying a lute). A few other forms are Bhikṣāṭaka (begging alms), Kapāladhāri (wearing skulls), Gaṇgādhara (bearing the Gaṅgas), Ardhanaṁśi (God half of whom is a woman), Viṣābhavāhana (seated on a bull), Viṣābhakṣaṇa (eating poison) etc. The figures of Śadāśiva, Maheśa, Ekādaśarudras (eleven Rudras), Vidyeśvara and Mārtṛyaṭaka are seen occasionally here and there. There are scriptures describing these figures.

7) The Devas (gods) connected with Śiva. Among the gods connected with Śiva, first place is given to Gaṇapati. Worship of Gaṇapati was in vogue from 6th or 7th century B.C. Perhaps the images that we see today were made after this period.

In South India temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are not scarce. The position of Gaṇapati is at the entrance of villages and fortresses, at the foot of banyan trees, at the entrance of temples and at the south-west corner of Śaivite temples.

There are images of Gaṇapati in the postures of standing and dancing. Main images are those with the trunk turned to the right and to the left. The trunk is turned to the right in some and to the left in others.

8) Subrahmānya. Subrahmāṇya is worshipped only in South India. Subrahmāṇya is known by various names such as Kumāra, Muruka, Kārttikeyar, Śkanda, Arumukha, Guha, and so on. Temples dedicated to Subrahmāṇya are seen in plenty in Tamil Nadu. They are all situated on the tops of hills. There is sufficient proof in the poetic works of the Saṅgha period, to the fact that Subrahmāṇya-worship was prevalent in South India. On excavation at the place Nāgārjunakoṇḍa in the District of Guntur, images of Subrahmāṇya were found under the earth. They were as old as the 3rd century B.C.

Images of Subrahmāṇya are seen in various postures and shapes such as sitting, with six faces, with one face, with two hands, with four hands, sometimes with wife, in the state of having finished investiture with the Brahma-string etc. There are figures sitting on the peacock also.

9) Other images. Images of Śakti, Lākṣmi, Earth-goddess, Sarasvatī, Saptamatras (Seven Mothers), Jyeṣṭhā, Viṣṇu, the ten incarnations, the planets such as the sun etc. the deities of the weapon like the thunderbolt, Śakti (lance), Nandikeśvara, Candēśvara, Śātā, Kṣetrapāla, Brahmā, Guardians of the zones, śāśvinidevās, half gods etc. are also dedicated and worshipped in temples.

VIHĀNGA. A serpent (nāga) born in the race of the Nāga Airāvata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 12, that this serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of the serpent-sacrifice performed by Janamejaya and was burnt to death.

VIHĀNGAŚA. A soldier of the giant Khara. This Khara who confronted Rāma and Lākṣmaṇa in Daṇḍakāraṇyā (forest Daṇḍaka) had twelve army captains under him, including Viḥāṅgama, (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

VIHAVYA. The son of Varcas who was born in the dynasty of Gṛtsamada. Viṣṇayya was the son of this Viḥāvyaya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

VIHUNDA. An asura. This asura was the son of the mighty and great Asura Hūṇḍa. At the time of the fierce battle between the devas and the asuras, this mighty asura Hūṇḍa and Nahuṣa confronted each other and Hūṇḍa was killed. After this Viḥūṇḍa, the son of Hūṇḍa fought with Nahuṣa. In the earlier part of the battle Viḥūṇḍa and his army suffered defeat. Viḥūṇḍa began to do penance in order to defeat the Devas who got terrified at this and went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed for protection. Viṣṇu consoled them saying that he would take necessary steps. When the Devas were gone, Viṣṇu took the form of a beautiful woman and went in search of Viḥūṇḍa. They met each other in the garden Nandana. Viḥūṇḍa fell in love with her. He wanted to marry her. She said, "Oh, Handsome Vīhūṇḍa, I have no objection to be your wife. But there is a condition, you, must gather seven crores of Kāmāda flowers and offer them as oblation to Śiva, and then make a garland of Kāmāda flowers and put it on my neck. From that day onwards I am yours." Viḥūṇḍa agreed to it. He went for the flowers. He wandered over forests and mountains. Nobody had any idea of such a tree or flower. Thinking that this condition, laid by the damsel, was a deceit played upon him, he stood perplexed when the hermit Śukra saw him. He told the hermit everything. Then Śukra told him, “Kāmodā is neither a tree nor a flower. She is goddess who came up from the sea of Milk at the time of the churning. She dwells at Gaṅgādvāra. When she laughs pure white fragrant flowers fall from her lips, on the water of Gaṅgā, every moment. When she is sad, the flowers that fall from her lips will be red.”

Vihunḍa started for Gaṅgādvāra. Nārada knew this. He came to Vihunḍa and said, “It is difficult to reach Gaṅgādvāra and please Kāmodā, and obtain the flower. So the easiest way is to gather the flowers that come down through the water of Gaṅgā.” Vihunḍa agreed. He took his seat on the bank of Gaṅgā and waited for the flowers to come.

Nārada decided to cause harm to Vihunḍa. So he went to Kāmodā and by way of telling her news, he informed her that the hermit Bhṛgu had cursed Mahāvaiguṇḍa and changed him into a man. On hearing this Kāmodā began to cry. Red flowers fell from her lips. They were carried down in cluster by the water of Gaṅgā. Vihunḍa gathered them and went to the dwelling place of Śiva. Śiva and Pārvatī saw this by their inward eyes. Pārvatī did not like the idea of offering red flowers at the feet of her beloved husband. Śiva found out a remedy for it. He advised Pārvatī to offer white flowers at his feet standing as a boy. Vihunḍa came with red flowers Pārvatī appeared in the form of a boy. Both began to vie with each other in offering flowers at the feet of Śiva. Gradually it changed to a fight between the boy and Vihunḍa. In the fight Vihunḍa was killed. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi khaṇḍa, some chapters from 119).

VIJAYA I. A minister of Daśara. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA II. A gate-keeper of Vaikuṇṭha. (See under Jaya).

VIJAYA III. A Son of Pūruṇavas. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, that Ayus, Śruṣyāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya were the sons born to Pūruṇavas, by Urvaśī.

VIJAYA IV. A King of Kosala. It is stated in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 73, that this King Vijaya of Kosala confronted Parārūma and was defeated.

VIJAYA V. This was the secret name given to Arjuna by Dharmaaputra during the time of their pseudonymity. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35).

VIJAYA VI. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He joined with Jaya and Durjaya, two Kauravas and fought with Nila, Kāśya and Jayatcena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA VII. The name Vijaya is used as a synonym of Śiva in Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 51.

VIJAYA VIII. The name Vijaya is used as a synonym of Viṣṇu in Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 21.

VIJAYA IX. A King who ruled over the city of Vārāṇasī. Vijaya destroyed the city of Khāṇḍavī and the forest Khāṇḍava rose there. Later he gave the forest to Indra. The most powerful King of this dynasty was Uparicara (Kālikā Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

VIJAYA X. A country of ancient India famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA XI. The trident of Śiva. During the journey to Bhadravatā, of Subrahmanya, this trident Vijaya of Śiva went behind King Yama. This trident had three prongs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 37).

VIJAYA XII. A bow of Indra. This is as bright as Gaṇḍiva and as strong as the bow Sārīgadhanus of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The bows of the Devas, considered to be most divine, are Vijaya, Gaṇḍiva and Sārīga. Vijaya belongs to Indra, Gaṇḍiva to Varuṇa and Sārīga to Viṣṇu. Once Druma, a Kimpuruṣa (demi god) who lived in the mountain Gandhamādana got Vijaya from Indra. After that Rukmi, his disciple got this bow from Druma. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA XIII. The divine bow of Karṇa. It is said that this bow was the most divine of all weapons. This bow which was made by Viśvakarma, originally belonged to Indra. At that time Indra had defeated many asuras with the help of this bow. Indra gave this bow to his loved disciple Parāśurāma. Karṇa got this boar from Parāśurāma. It is said that this bow was superior to Gaṇḍiva. It was with the help of this bow that Parāśurāma conquered the Kṣatriyas twenty times. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 42).

VIJAYA XIV. The daughter of King Dāśārha. The emperor Bhumanyu married her. A son named Suhotra was born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 33).

VIJAYA XV. Daughter of Dvīpt, the King of Madrāśa. This Vijāya was the wife of Sahadeva the son of Pāṇḍu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80, that a son named Suhotra was born to Sahadeva by Vijāya.

VIJAYA XVI. A synonym of Devī Durgā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 16).

VIJAYADĀŚAMI. A festival of Indians. As this festival is celebrated for nine nights from the 1st to the 9th in the bright lunar fortnight of the month of Kanni (September-October) it is known as Navarātri (Nine nights) and as it continues up to Daśamī (the tenth night) it is called Dasra. The Hindus believe that the Vijayadasamī (the victorious tenth) was the day on which Devī Durgā killed Mahīṣasura and got victory. So this day is considered to be a suitable moment to begin the learning of all the arts which would enable one to carry on a successful life. Sarasvatī is considered the transfiguration of Durgā. As people became less superstitious, they began to consider the story of killing Mahīṣasura as a metaphorical saying, to mean the killing of ignorance. So the day of victory of Devī Durgā (the same as Sarasvatī) is considered to be the auspicious moment for the beginning of learning. The warrior places his weapons, the man of literature his books and pen, the musician his musical instruments, at the feet of Devī and with devotion and worship receives them back from Devī on the Vijayadasamī day at an auspicious moment.

This is a festival celebrated everywhere in India. In several native states this festival used to be celebrated under the sponsorship of the royal family as a State festival. As it is believed that Mahīṣasura had lived in Mysore the celebration of Dasra in that State generally is on a grand scale. In Kerala, from olden times this festival was celebrated under the patronage of the Vaṅci Royal family.

VIJAYALAKŚMI. One of the eight Lākṣmis. The duty of Vijayalakṣmi was keeping the treasury of Brahmā. Once she showed carelessness in her duty. So Brahmā cursed her to go and guard the gate tower of Râvana. Accordingly Vijayalâkṣmi guarded the gate of Lâgâ under the name Lâgâlakṣmi. When she was hit by Hanûman she obtained her original form and returned to the world of Devas. (See under Lâgâlakṣmi).

VIJITĀŚVA. One of the five sons of emperor Pûthu. Vijitâśva decided to perform one hundred horse-sacrifices and completed ninety-nine. Seeing this Indra feared that he might be deported. So he stealthily took away the sacrificial horse of Vijitâśva.

There was a fierce battle between Indra and Vijitâśva in which Indra was defeated, and Vijitâśva recovered the stolen horse from Indra. It was from that day onwards that this son of Pûthu got the name Vijitâśva.

Being pleased with the King, at this expert fighting, Devendra taught him the art of vanishing. (Bhagavata. Skandha 4).

VIJVALA. Son of the bird Kuñjala which was a famous scholar. (For further details see under Subâhu. XIV).

VIKAḌRU. A noble Yâdava. It was this Vikadru who brought to the notice of Śrî Kṛṣṇa the fact that Jârâsandha had dared to attack Mathurâpûrî for the eighteenth time. (M.B. Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 17).

VIKALPA. An ancient country of India famous in the Purânas. (Mahâbhârata, Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 59).

VIKAṆKATAPARVATA. A mountain in the vicinity of Mount Meru. (Devi Bhagavata, Skandha 8).

VIKÂRÂNA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarâṣṭra. The following information is available in Mahâbhârata about this valiant fighter.

(i) Vikârâna, the son of Dhrtarâṣṭra was one of the eleven mahârâthas. (great warriors). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 39).

(ii) Among the disciples of Droṇa, who attacked Droṇapada, Vikârâna was one. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 19).

(iii) Vikârâna was present at the Svâyanâvara (marriage) of Draupâdi (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 1).

(iv) Vikârâna was one of those kings who stood silent and sad, being unable to answer the questions put by Draupâdi when she was about to be stripped of her clothes. (M.B. Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 68, Stanza 1).

(v) Once Karṇa reviled at Vikârâna. (M.B. Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 68, Stanza 80).

(vi) At the time of the theft of the cows of king Virâṭa by Duṛyodhana and his brothers. Vikârâna fought against Arjuna. (M.B. Virâṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 9).

(vii) A severe fight followed in which the defeated Vikârâna fled from the battle-ground. (M.B. Virâṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 41).

(viii) Hit by the arrow of Arjuna, Vikârâna was wounded and he fell down from the chariot. (M.B. Virâṭa Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 41).

(ix) On the first day of the battle of Bhârata, Vikârâna entered in a combat with Śrutasoma. (M.B. Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 58).

(x) He fought with Sahadeva. (M.B. Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 21).

(xi) Abhimanyu defeated Vikârâna. (Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 21).

(xii) Ghaṭotkaca defeated Vikârâna. (Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 36).

(xiii) There was a combat between Nakula and Vikârâna. (Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 11).

(xiv) He fought with Bhîmâsenâ. (Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 113).

(xv) He fought with Śîkhaṇḍi. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 31).

(xvi) He fought with Nakula and was defeated. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 30).

(xvii) Bhîmâsenâ killed him. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 29).

VIKÂRÂNA II. A hermit devoted to Śiva. Mention is made in Mahâbhârata, Anuśâsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 99, that Śiva was pleased with the devotion of this hermit and appearing before him granted him boons.

VIKÂRÂNA III. A country of ancient India. The warriors of this country joined the army of Sakuni and fought against the Pâṇḍavas. (Mahâbhârata Bhîṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 15).

VIKÁRTANA. A king of the Solar dynasty who was afflicted with leprosy. It is stated in Padma Purâṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 135, that he got recovery from the disease by bathing in the river Sâbhramâti.

VIKAṬA I. A brother of Praḥasta. (See under Akampâna).

VIKAṬA II. A character in the story of Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

VIKAṬA III. (VIKAṬÂNA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarâṣṭra. In the Bhârata-battle, fourteen sons of Dhrtarâṣṭra joined together and wounded Bhîmâsenâ. Vikâta was one of them. This Vikâta was killed by Bhîmâsenâ. (Mahâbhârata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 51).

VIKĀṬA. A giantess in the harem of Râvana. She tried to entice Sîtâ for Râvana. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Sundara Kânda, Sarga 23, Stanza 15).

VIKÂTHINI. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 18).

VIKRÂMÂDIṬYA. Vikramâditya, who is believed to be one of the mighty emperors of Bhârata, was an extraordinarily wise, righteous and valiant ruler. There are several stories in all the languages of India, prevalent everywhere. They are generally called Vikramâditya stories. Vikramâditya was the son of Mahendrâditya, King of Ujjayâni. Mahendrâditya and his wife Śaumyadarśanâ were in great distress as they were childless. Sumati, the Prime Minister, Vajrâyudha, the army commander, and Maḥîḍhara, the priest, were as distressed as the royal couple. The King and the queen engaged themselves in fast and prayer.

In the meanwhile, the Devas found life extremely difficult due to the wicked deeds of the barbarians, and they went to Kailâsa and told Rudraâdeva of their grievances. They said, "Oh! Lord! All the asuras exterminated by yourself and Maḥâvîśu, are born on the earth as Barbarians. They commit great sins such as killing the Brahmâins, obstructing sacrifices carrying away hermit damsels etc. The sacrificial offerings in the sacred fire with Vedic Mantras by Brahmâins, is the food of Devas. Because of the troubles caused by the Barbarians in the earth, the sacrifices are hindered and the Devas are in trouble due to lack of food. So a being, mighty and strong enough to exterminate all the Barbarians on the earth, should take incarnation."

Śiva agreed and sent the devas back to their world. Then he called Mâlâyâvan and told him to take birth as the son of Mahendrâditya in the city of Ujjayâni.
Siva added, “You should exterminate all the Barbarians and reinstate rituals and ceremonies. The Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, ghosts etc. will be under your control. You will be an emperor there with divine powers.” Accordingly Mālayāvān took birth as the son of Mahendrāditya. That infant was Vikramāditya who became a mighty emperor later. (Kathāsaritsagāra, Viṣamaśilalambaka, Tārāṅga 1).

VIKRAMASĪLA. A King praised in the Mārkandeya Purāṇa. Kālindī was his wife and Durgama his son.

VIKRĀṬNA. A King who was the father of Sudhṛti and the son of King Dama. It is mentioned in Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 86, that Vikrāṭa was an ideal King who loved and cared for his subjects.

VIKRITI. A King of the family of Yayāti. This King’s father was Jimūta, and his son was Bhīmaratha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIKSARA. A noble asura born to Kaśyapa Prajrāpātī by his wife Danu. The most powerful of the Dānāvas (asuras) given birth to by Danu, were Viksara, Bāla, Vīra and Vṛtra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33). Of these Viksara took rebirth later as King Vasumitra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 41).

VIKUṆṢI. A son of Iksvāku. It is said that Iksvāku was born from the spittle of Manu. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, that after the death of Śaryāti, the Rākṣasas (giants) attacked Ayodhya and the sons of the King having fled to different directions, Iksvāku continued the dynasty of Saryāti in Ayodhya. Hundred sons beginning with Vikuṇḍi were born to Iksvāku. Of these hundred sons fifty were employed to rule over the regions of East and North and fortyeight, to rule over the regions in the south and the west. With the remaining two sons the King stayed in Ayodhya, and carried on administration.

One day King Iksvāku resolved to conduct the great sacrifice of offering to the manes called Mahāpralaya-śrāddha, for which preparations were speedily made. The hermits such as Vasishṭha and others arrived according to invitation. He sent his son Vikuṇḍi to the forest to bring the required amount of flesh for the sacrifice. Vikuṇḍi entered the forest and hunted hare, hog, deer etc. and collected the required quantity of flesh; but on the way home, he became filled with hunger. To appease his hunger he took a small hare from the collection cooked it and ate it. He took the balance to the King who was much pleased with his son and gave the animals to Vasishṭha the family priest for proskana (sprinkling of holy water on the animals before sacrifice). But Vasishṭha got angry and said, “flesh which constitutes remains is not acceptable.” The King understood the truth only then. He was filled with anger and distress. He expelled Vikuṇḍi from his country for this misdeed. Thus because he had eaten a Śaṣa (hare) Vikuṇḍi got another name Saṣāda. Saṣāda not at all caring about the misfortune that befell him, went to the forest and lived on fruits and roots and worshipped Devī, with ardent devotion. Iksvāku died. Saṣāda knew this and returned to Ayodhya and assumed reign. He performed several sacrifices on the banks of river Sarayū. The famous Kakutṣtha was the son of this Vikuṇḍ. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

VIKUNDĀLA. A Vaiśya who obtained heaven by bathing during the month Māgha in the waters of Kālindi. This Vaiśya was a deplorable sinner. Still the men of Kāla (Yama) sent Vikuṇḍala to heaven without minding his sins. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khandā, Chapter 30, as follows:

In days of old there lived a Vaiśya named Hema-kundala in the great kingdom of Niṣadha. He was a devotee and worshipper of devas and Brahmāṇas. He carried on trade and agriculture and by plundering he amassed much wealth. Hemakūndala grew old. He thought about the frailty of life and spent a sixth part of his wealth for charitable purposes. For remission of the sins committed throughout the whole of his life, he gave alms as stipulated in the Purāṇas. After entrusting the family affairs to his sons Śrikūndala and Vikuṇḍala, he went to the forests for penance.

His sons were young. They turned away from righteous ways and followed a path of pleasures and wickedness. They refused to pay any heed to the advice of their elders. Drinking and going to other women became their routine. Within a short time they lost their wealth. They had nothing to eat. Their friends and favourites all discarded them. Being forsaken by every body, they engaged themselves in theft or robbery. They were afraid of the king and the people, and so they shifted to the forest. They lived by hunting. At this time the elder brother was caught by a tiger. The younger brother was bitten by a snake. Thus, on the same day, both sinners met with death. The messengers of Yama took both of them to the world of Yama. According to the order of King Dharma, Vikuṇḍala got heaven and Śri Kundala got hell.

Vikuṇḍala who was glad at obtaining heaven asked the men of Yama on the way, why he was given heaven. They replied, “There was a Brahmin who was well-versed in all branches of knowledge. He was the son of Harimītra. His hermitage was on the southern bank of Yamunā. Yourself and the Brahmin became friends in the forest. Because of that friendship you were enabled to take bath in two Māgha months in the holy waters of Kālindi which is capable of washing all the sins away. By the first Māgha bath you got remission of your sins. By the second Māgha-bath you became eligible for the attainment of heaven.”

VIKŪṆJA. An ancient country in India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 9, that it was the warriors of this country who stood with the king Bhadrabala on the left wing of the Garuda Vyūha of the army formed by Bhīṣma, in the battle of Bhārata.

VINĀYAKA II. Gaṇapati.

VINAYAKACATURTHI. One of the important festivals of the Hindus. This is called the day of worship of Gaṇeśa. The Caturthi (4th day) of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Sīndha is the birth day of Gaṇapati. It is a famous festival in North India. They make the images of Gaṇapati, every year, and make offerings to them on this particular day.

It is believed, that he who sees the moon on Vinayaka Caturthi, will be subjected to dishonour and derision. This belief is based on the following story.

Gaṇapati is very fond of sweetmeat especially Kozhukkaṭṭa (globular solid sweetmeat; called Modaka). It is the custom in North India to worship Gaṇapati by offering these sweet meats, even today, with all kinds of festivities. On one birthday Gaṇapati went from house to house and ate belly-full of modakas and returned home on his conveyance, the rat. On the way the rat saw a snake and began to tremble with fear. Due to the shivering of its legs Gaṇapati fell down. The belly of Gaṇapati was broken due to the fall and a large quantity of modakas came out. Gaṇapati gathered everything that fell out of his belly and stuffed them again in the stomach and joining the cut edges entwined the snake tightly round the stomach. Candra who was standing in the sky seeing all these things laughed with contempt. At this, Gaṇapati got wild and plucked his tusk and throwing it at the moon cursed him. "Let nobody look at you on the Gagapati-festival day.” (Brahma-vi-va-varta Purāṇa). This story is slightly different according to Gaṇeśa Purāṇa. That story is, that Śri Paramesvara gave a plum to his elder son Subrahmanya without the knowledge of his younger son Gaṇapati, on the 4th day of a bright lunar fortnight and the moon who smiled at it, was cursed.

VINDHA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 34, that Vinda was killed by Bhīmaśena in the battle of Bhārata.

VINDHA II. A prince of Avanti. It is stated that this Vinda had a brother called Anuvinda. The information obtained about Vinda from Mahābhārata is given below:

(i) Sahadeva defeated this Vinda at the time of his southern regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 10).
(ii) Vinda helped Duryodhana by fighting on his side with an akṣauhinī of army. (M.B. Udyaoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 24).

VIPĀŚIT II. Husband of Pivari, the princess of Vidarbha. It is mentioned in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, that because of the sinful acts done by this man towards his wife he had to go to hell.

VIPĀṬA. A brother of Karṇa. Arjuna killed him in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 62).

VIPĀṬHA. An arrow. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 6, that this arrow was larger and more powerful than other arrows.

VIPARA. A King born in the family of Dhrūva. Two sons named Śiśu and Bhavya were born to Dhrūva by his wife Śambhū. Suchāyā the wife of Śiśu gave birth to Rīpu, Rīpuṇāya, Vīpā, Vṛkāla and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṃśa I, Chapter 13).

VIPRACITTI.

1) General information. A Dānava (asura) born to Priyāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Daṇu. Daṇu had given birth to thirtythree notorious asuras (demons). Vippacitti was the eldest of them. His younger brothers were Śambhara etc. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25).

2) Other details. (i) Sīṁhkā was the wife of Vippacitti. This Sīṁhkā was the sister of Hīrāyakaipu and Hiranyakaśa and the daughter of Kaśyapa and Diti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 15).
(ii) It was this Viprācitti who took rebirth later as Jarāsandha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 4).
(iii) Viprācitti stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and glorifying him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 12).
(iv) When Mahāviṣṇu took the form of Vāmana and began to measure the three worlds, Viprācitti with some asuras surrounded Vāmana. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Dākaśiṇāyā pātha, Chapter 38).
(v) In Mahābhārata, Saṇya Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12, a statement occurs to the effect that in days of old, Mahāviṣṇu took the form of Indra and killed Viprācitti. (vi) In the war between Devas and asuras, Viprācitti was killed by Indra. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

VIPRTHU. A Kṣatriya of Viṣṇu dynasty. The following information is available about him in Mahābhārata.
(i) Viprthu was present at the Svayānishvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 18).
(ii) He participated in the festival conducted on the mountain Raivata. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10).
(iii) Viprthu was a member of the group of Yādavas who took the dowry to Hastiāpara in the marriage between Arjuna and Subhadrā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 32).
(iv) Viprthu stayed in the Palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 30).

VIPRTHU II. An ancient king in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 294, Stanza 20, that Viprthu had been the emperor of the world.

VIPULA I. Brother of Balabhadrarāma. The sons born to Vasudeva by Rohiṇi were Balabhadrarāma, Gada, Sārṇa, Durdama, Vipula, Dhrva and Kṛta. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIPULA II. A mountain near Girivrajā, the capital city of Magadha. Mention is made about this mountain in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2.

VIPULA III. A hermit who was born in the dynasty of Bhrigu. There is a story showing how this hermit protected the wife of his teacher from Indra while he was the disciple of the hermit Devasārmā, in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 40. The story is given below: Ruci, the wife of the hermit Devasārmā, was extremely beautiful. Devasārmā was aware of the fact that Indra had often looked at his wife with covetous eyes. He had to perform a sacrifice. But he feared that if he went away from the hermitage his wife would be carried away by Indra. At last he called his beloved disciple Vipula and revealed the secret to him. The teacher told his disciple that Indra was a libertine as well as a magician and that he would appear in various forms to seduce Ruci, and asked him to protect Ruci even at the cost of his life. Then Devasārmā left the hermitage for the sacrifice. Vipula followed the wife of his teacher, wherever she went. He feared that Indra might come even unseen by anybody. So he decided to get inside Ruci by supernatural powers of Yoga. He made Ruci to sit in front of him and stare into his eyes and through the rays of her eyes he entered inside her.

Knowing that Devasārmā had left the hermitage, Indra came in front of Ruci. By the power of Stambhāna (suppressing the use of faculties by mantra) Vipula made Ruci stand motionless staring into the face of Indra. She did not give any reply to the questions of Indra. At last Indra looked into Ruci with inward eyes and saw as in a mirror Vipula sitting inside her. With shame Indra left the place instantly.

When the teacher returned on completion of the sacrifice Vipula told him all that had taken place. The teacher was pleased and told his disciple that he might ask for any boon.

He got the boon to be a righteous man throughout his life and left the hermitage.

It was during this period that the marriage of Prabhāvati, the sister of Ruci, took place. The marriage of Prabhāvati with Cītrarātha, the king of Anīga, was settled. A messenger from Anīga informed Ruci about it. Then some flowers fell from the sky near Ruci. She wore them and went to the marriage. Prabhāvati wanted to have the same flowers. Vipula was sent to bring flowers of the same kind. As Vipula was returning with the flowers, he saw two men turning a wheel. Each of them claimed that he had turned more than the other, and quarrelled with each other. One of them pointing at Vipula, said that he who told lies would get what Vipula would undergo in hell. Vipula was worried at hearing this. He proceeded on his journey. He saw six men gambling. One of them pointed at Vipula and said "A false gamester would get what Vipula would get in hell."

Being flurried by these two talks, Vipula ran to his teacher to understand its meaning. He went to Cāmpāpurī and saw the teacher and asked him the meaning of what he had heard. The teacher told him, that the two who turned the wheel were day and night and the six who were engaged in gambling were the six Rūṣa(seasons) and that Rūṣa and day and night are witnesses of every sinful act committed any time. Vipula became aware of his sin. While he was staying inside the wife of his teacher, his genital touched her genital and face touched face. He had not told the teacher this. But the teacher said that it need not be considered a sin because the deed was done with no bad intention.

VIRA I. An asura born to Prajāpatī Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33).

VIRA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtrāśtra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103).

VIRA III. A fire. This Agni was the son born to the fire named Bharadvajya by his wife Vīrā. This fire has other names such as Rathaprabh, Rathadhvāna, Kumbharetas etc. It is said that along with Somadevātā, this Agni also would get the second portion of Ājya (ghee offerings). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9, that this mighty fire has a wife named Sarayū and a son named Siddhi.

VIRA IV. Son of a fire called Pāncājanyā. This agni is considered one of the Vināyakas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 13).

VIRA V. A king in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 7, that this king had attended the Svayānishvara marriage of the daughter of King Cītrāgada of Kalinda.

VIRA VI. A king of the Pūru dynasty, Bhadrārtha, Kuśa, Yadu, Prātyaggra, Bala and Matsyakāla were brothers of this king, Girikā was their mother. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VIRA. The wife of the Agni (fire) named Bharadvāja, the son of Śañjyu. The Agni Vira was the son of this Vira. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9).

VIRA II. A river of India, very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 22).

VIRA III. The wife of King Karandhama. She was the mother of Avikṣit. Once, when serpents began to do harm to all the living and non-living things in the world, Vīra approached her grandson Marutta and advised him to conduct a serpent-sacrifice. Marutta began the sacrifice. The serpents were terrified and sought protection from the wife of Avikṣit. She being kind-hearted, made her husband intervene and stop the sacrifice. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 126).

VIRABHĀHU I. A brother of Subrahmanya. It is stated in Skanda Purāṇa, that this Virabāhu stood with Subrahmanya and fought bravely.

VIRABHĀHU III. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtaraṣṭra. In the battle of Bhārata he fought with Uttara and Bhīmasena. Bhīmasena killed him with his club. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 35).

VIRABHĀHU III. A king of the country of Cedi. The daughter of Sudāma, the king of Daśārha was his wife. It was this king of Cedi who gave protection to Damayanti, when she was forsaken by her husband Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 13).

VIRABHADRA. One of the guards of Śiva.

1) Origin. There are two different opinions in the Purāṇas, regarding the origin of Virabhadra. There is no doubt that his birth was due to the anger of Śiva. When Śiva knew that his wife Pārvatī jumped into the fire and died at the sacrifice of Daśākṣa, he struck his matted hair on the ground and from that, Virabhadra and Bhadrakāli came into being. This is the version given in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7. According to Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, Virabhadra was born from the mouth of Śiva. From each of the hair pores of Virabhadra, who was born from the mouth of Śiva to destroy the sacrifice of Daśākṣa, a fearful monster was born, all of whom, formed a group of ghosts called the Raumyas.

2) The Destruction of the sacrifice of Daśākṣa. See under Daśākṣa.

3) Attainment of boon. After the destruction of the sacrifice of Daśākṣa, the fearful monster Virabhadra, began to exterminate the entire creation. Then Śiva appeared and pacified him and said “You shall become a planet in the sky called Ānāgaraķṣaka (Bodyguard) or Maṅgala (well being). Everybody will worship you. Those who thus exalt you, will get health, wealth and long life.” (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7; Vāyu Purāṇa, 101, 209; Padma Purāṇa, Śrīti Khaṇḍa, 24).

After the destruction of the sacrifice of Daśākṣa, Virabhadra severed a portion of his radiance, and from that radiance, later Ādīśāṅkara (Śaṅkarācārya) was born. This story occurs in Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva.

4) Prowess. Virabhadra was not only a follower of Śiva. He was a prominent general of the army. In the battle of the burning of Tripura and the Jalandhara fight, Virabhadra stood with Śiva and fought fiercely. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa and Uttara Khaṇḍa).

5) Protector of the Devas. Virabhadra was the destroyer of the Asuras and the protector of the Devas. Once Kaśyapa and all the other hermits and sages with him were burnt to ashes in the wild fire that occurred in the Sāukaṭa mountain. Instantly Virabhadra swallowed that wild fire and by the power of incantation, he brought to life from the ashes all the Rṣis (hermits) who were burnt to death.

On another occasion a serpent swallowed all the gods. Virabhadra killed the snake and rescued all the Devas. Once an asura called Pañcāmekha put into his mouth all the gods, all the hermits and Bāli and Sugriva. Those who escaped from the danger stood agape being powerless to confront the Asura. At last Virabhadra attacked the asura. That great and fierce battle lasted for years. At the end Virabhadra killed the Asura and rescued all.

Because Virabhadra had thus protected the Devas and the others on three occasions, Śiva became immensely pleased with him and gave him several boons. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, 107).

VIRĀDHĀ. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant) whom Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa killed in the Daśākṣa forest. Virādhā was the rebirth of Tumburu, a Gandharva who had been cursed to become a Rākṣasa. The story about Śrī Rāma’s liberating the Gandharva from the curse and sending him back to the world of Gandharvas, occurs in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka Khaṇḍa, Sargas 2 to 4, as follows.

In days of old, Tumburu, a Gandharva had been serving Kubera. Once Tumburu was asked by Kubera to bring Rambhā. Tumburu failed in bringing Rambhā at the stipulated time. Kubera got angry and cursed Tumburu to become a Rākṣasa. Tumburu requested for liberation from the curse. Kubera granted his request and said “In Tretāyuga, Mahāvīṣṇu will incarnate as Śrī Rāma, who with his sword will change your Rākṣasa form. You will regain your former form and will come back to the world of Gandharvas.” Accordingly Tumburu took birth as the son of giant Jaya. This child born to Jaya by his wife Śataḥradā, grew up and came to be known by the name Virādhā. Two extra-ordinarily long hands and the outward appearances of a giant aroused fear in every living creature. He lived in the forest Daśākṣa. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa came with Sītā to live in this forest. As soon as Virādhā saw them he ran to them with a loud cry.

“With sunken eyes and swollen stomach, widened mouth and an enormous body, with a fierce appearance, of very great height an uncouth figure, body wet with fat, clad in the hide of a leopard, looking like Yama with open mouth, with three lions, two wolves, four leopards, ten spotted deer and the head of a big tusker with tusks smeared with fat, all these caught pierced in an iron trident, and shouting in a roaring sound”, he ran to them and after taking Sītā, he began to run. Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa followed him. Virādhā placed Sītā down and, taking Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa on each of his shoulders he began running. Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa cut off each of his hands. But Virādhā did not die. Rāma and Lakṣmāṇa decided to bury him alive. Virādhā recognized Śrī Rāma and told him his story. Instantly his demoniac form changed and he regained his original form of a Gandharva. Thus Tumburu returned to the world of Devas. (See under Tumburu).

VIRADHANVĀ I. A warrior of the kingdom of Trigarta. He took the side of the Kauravas in the Bhārata-battle and fought with Dhrṣṭadyumna, in which fight he was killed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 9).

VĪRADHANVĀ II. A Gandharva. (See under Puṣḍarikamukha).

VĪRADHARMĀ. A King in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16).

VĪRADYUMNA. An ancient King in India. He had a son named Bhūridyumna. Once this son was lost in the great forest. Viradymunna wandered everywhere in the forest in search of his son. On the way he met a hermit called Tanu. He talked elaborately to the King about the hopes of human mind. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapters 127 and 128).

Virocana I.

1) General Information. An asura. He was the son of Prahlāda and the father of Mahābali. Three sons Virocana, Kumha and Nikumha were born to Prahlāda by his wife Dhṛiti. Virocana, though an asura, performed rites and rituals carefully. He was kind towards Brahmins. His son Bali became famous and got the name Mahābali. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 19).

2) Other details.

(i) Once there was a controversy between Virocana and Sudhanvā. (See under Sudhanvā II).

(ii) During the time of emperor Prthu, when the asuras milked the earth Virocana stood as the calf. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 20).

(iii) Virocana is included among the ancient Kings of prominence. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 50).

(iv) There is a story about the quest for knowledge about universal and individual souls, by Indra and Virocana, in Chāndogya upanishad, as given below.

Once the Devas and the asuras approached Prajāpati to learn about Brahman, the impersonal God. Prajāpati told them: “Ātman (soul) is the first tattva (Essential being) which is sinless, eternal, desireless and unimaginable in the earth.” Having heard this philosophy about the soul, the Devas selected Indra, and the asuras selected Virocana and to know the details, they sent them to Prajāpati as his disciples. Indra and Virocana stayed with Prajāpati for several years to know more about Ātman. But Prajāpati did not reveal to them the secret about Brahman. At last to test them Prajāpati said “Your reflection that you see in water or mirror is the Ātman (soul).”

Virocana, who mistook what the Prajāpati said as truth immediately took his bath, put on costly dress and ornaments and stood near water and saw his reflection in water. After that, taking the reflection for soul, he spread this doctrine among his people. With this the asuras accepted body as soul. But the Devas did not recognize this philosophy. They accepted the doctrine that Ātman is that essence of Nature which is alien to body and mind and which is pure.

(v) There are two different statements about the death of Virocana in the Purāṇas.

(1) In the battle with Tārakāsura, Virocana was killed by Devendra. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 99, Brahmanḍa 1.20.35; Matsya: 10: 11; Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭi Khanda 16).

(2) The Sun God was pleased with Virocana and had given him a crown. The sun told him that death would come only if that crown was removed from the head by some body. Because of this boon Virocana became arrogant. So Mahāviśuṣu took the form of a beautiful woman and enticed Virocana towards him and taking away the crown killed him. (Ganeśa Purāṇa 2, 29).

According to Nārada Purāṇa, Mahāviśuṣu took the form of a Brahmin and reached the palace of Virocana. There changing the righteous wife of Virocana into a mad woman he killed Virocana.

(vi) Virocana had two wives called Viśālakṣi and Devi. Two children, Bala and Ya’odhara were born by them. The wife of the famous Tvaṣṭā was this Ya’odhāra. (Brahmanḍa 3: 1: 86; Nārada Purāṇa 2: 32: Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

(vii) Virocana had five brothers named Kumbha, Nikumbha, Ayusmān, Śibi and Bāskali and a sister named Virocana. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 34, 19).

VIROCANA II. A son of Dūṛtaraṣṭra. He was also called Durvirocana. This Virocana was present at the Svayayinvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 2).

Seven sons named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmuṣṭa, Suptaghna, Yaṭṭhakoṣa, Matta and Unmatta and a daughter named Nālā were born to Mālyavān by Sundari.

All these sons held prominent places in the army of Rāvaṇa. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10, that in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, when Kumbhakarna was killed, the army was commanded by Kumbha, Nikumbha, Makarākṣa, Mahodara, Mahāpārśva, Matta, Unmatta, Praghasta, Bhāsakarṇa, Virūpākṣa, Devāntaka, Narāṇtaka, Trīśīras and Aṭīkāya.

When Sugrīva devastated the army of Rāvaṇa and caused havoc among the giants, Virūpākṣa, who was an archer got on an elephant and entered the battlefield. He confronted Sugrīva first. He thwarted the stone flung at him by Sugrīva, and struck him. For a time Sugrīva found it difficult to withstand him. But in the battle which followed, Sugrīva struck Virūpākṣa down and killed him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yudhā Kanda, Sarga 97).

VIRUPAKSHA III. One of the thirtythree notorious Dānavas (demons) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 22, that it was this asura called Virūpākṣa, who had, later, taken rebirth as King Citravarmā.
VIRÚPAKṢA IV. An asura who was the follower of Narakāsura. This Virūpakṣa was killed on the bank of the river Lohitaganī. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇāyatapātha, Chapter 38).

VIṢṆĀPŪ.
VIŚNU.

1) General information. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara are the Lords of creation, sustenance and extermination of this perishable universe. These trimūrtis (three figures) also are perishable. It is said, that one day of Brahmā will constitute thousand four-fold (catur) yugas and that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will fall down from heaven and die. This is a Brahmā age. The ages of two Brahmās constitute the age of one Viṣṇu. At the end of the age Viṣṇu also will perish. The age of Śiva is double the age of Viṣṇu. Śiva also will perish at the end of his age. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

When everything perishes there comes the deluge (the great flood). After that, for one hundred and twenty Brahmā years the universe will be desolate and void. In that deep eternal silence, Viṣṇu will be seen sleeping on a banyan leaf on the surface of water. That is the beginning of the next great age. In this stage, Bālamukunda is the name of Mahāviṣṇu. As he remains on Nāra or water he will be called Nārāyaṇa also.

The name Viṣṇu means he who possesses the habit of Vyāpana (To pervade). While Viṣṇu, who has the power to spread his control over everything in whatever condition, lies on the banyan-leaf. From his navel, a lotus-stalk grows up, and on the top of the stalk, in the lotus flower, Brahmā comes into being. Brahmā does penance before Viṣṇu and extols him. Mahāviṣṇu confers on Brahmā the power of creation of the subjects. That Brahmā perishes along with the deluge and in his place another Brahmā is born. Thus in the life-time of Viṣṇu two Brahmās come into being and perish.

2) Beginning. In days of yore, when Viṣṇu was lying on the banyan leaf as Bāla Mukunda, he began to think "Who am I? Who created me? Why? What have I to perform?" - and soon an ethereal voice was heard, "I am everything. Except me, there is nothing eternal." From behind the voice Mahādevī appeared, and said "Look Viṣṇu. What is there to wonder at? Whenever the universe is subject to creation, sustenance and extermination, you have taken origin by the glory of the Almighty. The Almighty or the omnipotence is beyond attributes. But we are all subjected to attributes. Your foremost attribute is Sattva (goodness - purity), Brahmā whose main attribute is the attribute of rajas (activity - passions), will originate from your navel. From the middle of the brows of that Brahmā, Śiva will be born, whose main attribute is Tamas (inertia darkness). Brahmā, by the power of Tapas (penance) will acquire the power of creation and build the world. You will be the sustainer of that world. Śiva will destroy the same world. I am Devī Māyā (Illusion - personified as the wife of Brahmā), the great power depending on you for the purpose of creation." After hearing these words of Devī, Viṣṇu went into meditation and deep sleep of contemplation.

3) Avatāras (Incarnations). When injustice and lawlessness abound in the universe, Viṣṇu will incarnate in the world in various forms and shapes, and will drive away injustice and will reinstate righteousness. The basis and the indelible semen virile of all the incarnations, is this spirit of the universe. All Devas, all human beings and all animals are created from a portion of this soul of the universe, which in itself is a portion. Brahmā, first incarnated as Sanatkumāra and lived the life of a Brahmān student of chaste abstinence. The second incarnation was connected with the creation of the earth. It was the incarnation as a hog to redeem the earth which was immersed in the world of Rasātala. The third incarnation was taken to create the sages and hermits. The Supreme God incarnated as the deva-hermit, Nārada and taught Pañcarātra, the Vaishnava-śāstra explaining the ways of observing Karman.

Fourthly, Viṣṇu took the incarnation of Nara-Nārāyanās (two hermits) and performed tapas (penance) difficult to do. The fifth incarnation was that of Kāpila who taught his disciple Āsuri, a Brahmīn, Sālikhāya (one of the six systems of Indian philosophy dealing with evolution). The next incarnation was taken, according to the request of Atri, as his son under the name Dattātreya. Seventhly he took incarnation as Yajñā, the son born to Prajāpatī Ruci, by his wife Ākāti with the groups of devas (gods) such as Yāma and others to sustain the Manvantara (age of Manu) of Svāyambhuva. The eighth incarnation was as the son of Bhaga-vān Nābī by his wife Meru, and the ninth was, as the inner soul of Prthu, according to the request of the sages and hermits, with a view to change the earth to such a state that medicinal herbs may grow in plenty everywhere. The tenth was, as Mātṛṣya (Fish) in Cākṣuṣa Manvantara deluge; the eleventh, as turtle, to lift up the mountain Mandara; the twelfth as Dhanvantari, and the thirteenth was as Mohiṇī (Charming woman). The fourteenth was that of Man-lion, the fifteenth was that of Vāmana, the sixteenth that of Paraśurāma, the seventeenth, that of Vyāsa, the eighteenth, that of Śrī Rāma and the nineteenth was that of Rāma and the twentieth that of Kṛṣṇa in the dynasty of Viṣṇu. The twentyfirst was as Buddha in the beginning of the age of Kali. The twenty second incarnation was in the name of Kalki as the son of the Brahmīn Viṣṇu-yaśas. Each incarnation is explained in places where that word occurs. See under Avatāra.

The avatāras of Mahāviṣṇu are numerous. Thousands and thousands of incarnations originate from Mahāviṣṇu as streams flow from a lake which overflows at all times. Hermits, Manus, Devas, Sons of Manus, Praja-patis, all these are marks and portions of Mahāviṣṇu. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 15; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kīṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 40; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 38; Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1; M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 121; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12; Bhāgavata, Skandha 10; Bhāgavata, Skandha 5; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 272; Vana Parva, Chapter 149; Śanti Parva, Chapter 339).

4) Family life. Vaikuṇṭha is the dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahālakṣmi is the prominent wife. It is seen in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that besides Laksāmodī, Gaṅgā Devī and Sarasvatī also were the wives of Viṣṇu. Laksāmodī has taken several incarnations. Once she took birth from Khyātī, the wife of hermit Bhrigu. At this birth Dēhatā and Viḍhātā were her brothers. On another occasion, she arose from a lotus-flower which grew up from the sea of Milk. (To know more about the wives Laksāmi, Gaṅgā and Sarasvatī, see under Gaṅgā).

There is none to be mentioned as the legitimate son of Mahāviṣṇu. But Brahmā is the first that could be imagined as the son of Viṣṇu. Besides, Mahāviṣṇu once created a bright son, by his mind. That son was named
VIŚNU

Virajas. Sātā is another son of Mahāviṣṇu. Śiva became amorous with Mohini (fascinating woman)—the form which Mahāviṣṇu took at the time of the churning of the Sea of Milk. They led a short family life as a result of which the son Sātā was born. (See under Sātā).

5) Curses. Mahāviṣṇu had cursed and had been cursed on many an occasion. The most important of them are given below:

(i) The curse of Mahālakṣmi. Once Mahāviṣṇu looked into the face of Mahālakṣmi and laughed for no reason. Thinking that Mahāviṣṇu had been making fun of her, she cursed him saying “Let your head be severed from the body.”

At this period an Asura named Hayagrīva had done penance for a thousand years and obtained several boons. One boon was that he should be killed only by a man with the head of a horse. Hayagrīva attacked the devas (gods). Though the gods fought with Hayagrīva for many thousands of years they could not kill him. Even Viṣṇu, admitted defeat. Using the bow as a prop to his chin he stood thinking, for years. In the meanwhile white ants began to eat the string of the bow. When the string was broken, the bow straightened with a sudden jerk and the head of Mahāviṣṇu was severed from the trunk and was thrown away. Viṣvakārma cut off the head of a horse and joined it to the trunk of Viṣṇu, who instantly rose up and killed Hayagrīva. Thus satisfying the need of the gods and making the curse of Lakṣmi come true, Viṣṇu regained his original form and returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

(ii) The curse of Bhṛgu. The Asuras who were defeated in the war with Devas, approached Pulomā, the mother of their teacher-priest Śukra, and sought protection. Pulomā, was the wife of hermit Bhṛgu. She began to do penance for the destruction of devas. Knowing this Viṣṇu aimed his weapon, the Discus, at her and killed her. Bhṛgu got angry and cursed Viṣṇu to take birth as a man and suffer the grief of separation from his wife for many years. This curse was the first cause of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma. (For details see under Bhṛgu, Para 4).

(iii) The curse of Viṣṇu. Once the handsome King Revanta, mounted on the horse Uccāsṛavas and came to Vaikuṇṭha. Looking at the handsome youth, Lakṣmi stood for a while enchanted by Revanta and his horse. Mahāviṣṇu was displeased at this, and cursed her to take birth on the earth as a mare. Accordingly she was born as a mare and when the duration of the curse was over returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (For details see under Ekavira).

(iv) The curse of Vṛndā. See under Māyāśiva.

6) Contests and wars. Wars are very few in the Purāṇas in which Viṣṇu had not participated directly or indirectly. As almost all of them have been dealt with in various places in this book, they are not given here. Only a few of the prominent among them are mentioned here.

(i) Madhukaiṭabhas. Madhu and Kaitabha are two asuras born from the ear-wax of Mahāviṣṇu. They tried to attack Brahmā and Viṣṇu killed them. (See under Kaitabha).

(ii) Killing of Andhaka. Andhaka was a notorious asura. He was the minister of Mahiṣāsura. When war broke out between asuras and Devas, Andhaka caused havoc among the devas. At last in the fight with Viṣṇu Andhaka was killed. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

(iii) Killing of Vṛtrāsura. See under Vṛtra.

(iv) Rāhu. For the story of how Viṣṇu cut into two the asura Rāhu, see under Amṛtaṃ.

(v) Contest with Brahmā. The story of Viṣṇu and Brahmā making a competitive journey to find out the crest and foot of Śiva, is given with slight variations in most of the Purāṇas. (For detailed story see under Brahmā, Para 5).

(vi) For the story of how Viṣṇu confronted the asuras Nemi, Sumālti and Mālayavan see under each of those words.

7) The weapons and ornaments of Viṣṇu. The following are the prominent ornaments and weapons of Viṣṇu.

(i) Śrītvaṣa. This is a mark on the chest. It is said that this is the mark imprinted by the angry Bhṛgu who kicked on the chest of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Bhṛgu).

(ii) Paṅcagānya. This is a white conch. Even by the touch of this conch man becomes wise. (For further details see under Paṅcagāya).

(iii) The Discus Sudārṣana. Vajranāha is another name of this weapon. Viṣṇu uses this weapon to deal with fierce enemies. This is a wheel with a hole in the centre and thousand arms going out from the centre. The outer edge is sharp. This Sudārṣana Cakra is operated by putting it on the first finger and turning it round, and releasing it at the enemy. Though it is terrible for the wicked and unjust, it forebodes good to good people and so it is Sudārṣana (good to look at).

(iv) Kaumodaki. This is the club. The syllable “Ku” means the earth. Kumodaka means he who delights the earth. He who makes the earth delightful is Viṣṇu. As the club is the property of Kumodaka (Viṣṇu) it is called Kaumodaki.

(v) Kaustubha. This is the jewel of Mahāviṣṇu. (Ku=the Earth. Stubhṇati=Pervades (spreads). Kustubha=sea. Kaustubha- obtained from the sea. This jewel obtained from the sea at the time of its churning, is worn by Mahāviṣṇu on his neck. This is a red Jacinth.

(vi) Nandaka. This is the sword of Viṣṇu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, that this sword was obtained from Indra.

(vii) Śrīrang. This is the name of the bow of Viṣṇu. This is called Vaiṣṇavacāpa (the bow of Viṣṇu) also. A description is given in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla-kanda, Sarga 25, as to how this bow was obtained. It is as follows:

Once the Devas made Viṣṇu and Śiva quarrel with each other, to test their might. The fight between the two began. Viṣvakārma gave each of them a bow. The bow of Viṣṇu was called Vaiṣṇavacāpa; the bow of Śiva was called Śaivacāpa. This Vaiṣṇavacāpa is Śārīga. Due to the power of Śārīga, Śiva was defeated in the fight. Getting angry Śiva gave his bow to the King Devarāta of Vidyā. It was this bow that Śrī Rāma broke at the time of the Svayamvara marriage of Sītā. After the fight, Viṣṇu gave his bow to Rēkha. That bow changed hands from Rēkha to Jamadagni and from him to Pāraśurāma, who presented this bow to Śrī Rāma on his return after the marriage with Sītā.

(viii) Vaiṣṇavant. This is the necklace of Viṣṇu. This necklace, made of five jewels stuck together, is known by the name Vanamāla, also. Viṣṇu has a charioteer named Dārūka and four horses named Saibya, Sugrīva, Meghapuṣpa and  Vaiśāhaka.  Garuḍa is the conveyance of Viṣṇu. He holds conch, discus, club and lotus in each of his four hands. It is said that the discus was made by Viśvakarmā with the dust of the Sun. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa particular mention is made about the ornaments of Viṣṇu.

9) The names of Viṣṇu. The names of Viṣṇu given in Amarakośa and their meanings are given below.

1) Viṣṇu. He who is spread everywhere.

2) Nārāyana. (i) He who lies on water. (nāraṁ = water). (ii) He who had adopted Nāra (human body) in incarnations. (iii) He who enters the human society (nāra) as Jīvātmā (individual soul).

3) Kṛṣṇa. (1) of dark complexion. (2) He who does Karṣaṇa (pulling or dragging) on the agha (sin) of jagat (world).

4) Viśnunātha. (1) The son of Vikunṭhā. There is an incarnation as such. (2) At the time of creation twenty-three Tattvas (essences-elements) did not join with one another. So Viṣṇu joined earth to water, ether to air and fire; Thus their individual existence was made Vikunṭhā-prevented. By achieving this he became Viśnunātha. (3) Viśnunātha means wisdom (knowledge). So Viśnunātha is he who has acquired knowledge. (4) Viśnunātha means holy basil (a herb). So Viśnunātha is he who wears rosary of holy basil. (5) Kṛṣṇa means Māya—Illusion. So Viśnunātha is Māya Maya or he who is blended with Illusion. (the female creative energy).

5) Viṣṭara-ravas. (1) Viṣṭara—tree—banyan tree. He who is universally known as banyan tree. (2) Viṣṭara—a bundle of darbha grass. (Poa grass). He whose earlobe is like this. (3) Viṣṭara = is spread—He whose fame is spread everywhere.

9) Mādhava. (1) Dhava-husband of Mā-Lakṣmī. (2) He who is born of the dynasty of Madhu. (3) He who has killed Madhu.

10) Svabhā. He who comes into existence by Madhupāla. (4) Dāityārī the enemy of Dāityas (the asuras, demons).

11) Puṇḍarīkāsya. (1) With aśīs (eyes) like puṇḍarīka (lotus). (2) He who dwells in the lotus, that is the heart of devotees.

12) Govinda. (1) He who lifted up the earth assuming the form of a hog. (2) He who protects the heaven. (3) He who redeemed the Vedas.

13) Garuḍādhvaja. He whose ensign is Garuḍa (Eagle).

14) Pīṭāmbara. He who wears yellow silk.

15) Acyuta. He whose position has no displacement.

16) Śārīgī. He who has the bow called Śārīga.

17) Viṣvaksena. He whose army spreads.

18) Janārdana. (1) He who destroys janana—birth (birth and death) (2) He who had destroyed the asuras called Janas.

19) Upendra. He who had become the younger brother of Indra by taking birth as Vāmana.

20) Indrāvaraja. Younger brother of Indra.

21) Cakrapāṇi. He who has cakra—the weapon Discus—in his hand.

22) Padmanābha. He who has lotus in his navel.

23) Madhuripū. The enemy of the asura named Madhu.

24) Vāsudeva. (1) The son of Vasudeva. (2) He who dwells in all living beings as individual soul.

25) Vīṣṇuvambara. He who has measured the three worlds in three steps. (In his avatāra as Vāmana).

26) Devakinandana. The son of Devaki.

27) Sāurī. Born in the dynasty of Śūrasena.

28) Śrīpati. The husband of Laksmlī.

29) Puruṣottama. The noblest of men.

30) Vanamali. He who wears the necklace which reaches up to the leg and is called Vanamāla.

31) Balidhvariśi. He who had killed the asura called Bali.

32) Kāṁśārāti. The arāti—(enemy) of Karīsa.

33) Adhokṣaja. He who is not discernible to the organs of senses.

34) Śrīvatsālānēcchana. He who has the mark or scar of Śrīvatsa on his chest.

35) Purāṇapuruṣa. The earliest man.

36) Yajñapuruṣa. The earliest man.

37) Kaitabha. He who became victorious over Kaitabha.

38) Vidhu. Expert in all things.

39) Śrīvatsālānēcchana. He who has the mark or scar of Śrīvatsa on his chest.

40) Parānāpurūṣa. The earliest man.

41) Yajñapuruṣa. He who is remembered in yāgas—sacrifices.

43) Jaladāyi. He who lies in water.

44) Viṣvarūpa. One who has the cosmic form.

45) Mukunda. He who gives salvation.

46) Muramardana. He who had suppressed Mura.

47) Sahāsra Nāmams. (Thousand names of Viṣṇu). The list of thousand names of Viṣṇu, is present in Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhanda, Chapter 72. In Mahābhārata, Anusūāna Parva, Chapter 149, also all the thousand names are given. Variations are seen in these two lists.

11) Other details (i) Mention about Mahāviṣṇu occurs in several places in Rgveda. But more prominence is given to Indra. Though Viṣṇu is exalted in five Rgveda mantras (incantations), when compared with other gods, Viṣṇu is only a lesser god. The story of Trivikrama is hinted in Rgveda. But there is no mention about the incarnation of Vāmana or Mahābhārata. Rgveda gives Mahāviṣṇu only the position of a younger brother of Indra. That is why the author of Amarakośa has given Viṣṇu synonyms such as Upendra, Indrāvara etc.

(ii) Mahāviṣṇu was one of those who came to see Śivalinga (Phallus) when it was detached and fell down at the curse of hermit Bhrigu. (For details see under Siva).

(iii) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmaṇya as attendants two Vidyādhāras named Vardhana and Nandana. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 37).

(iv) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmaṇya the necklace Vaijaya- yanti. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 49).

(v) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25, that Mahāviṣṇu stays in the assembly of Brahmā.
(vi) Mahāviṣṇu showed grace to Uparicara vasu. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 33).
(vii) Mahāviṣṇu once took birth as the son of Aditi. From that day onwards he got the name, Aditya also. (For details see under Aditi). For further details regarding Mahāviṣṇu, see under Vīrāṭpuruṣa, Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Brahmasṛsti, Avatāra, Amṛta, Garuḍa, Lakṣmi, Gaṅgā etc.

VIṢṆUCITTA. A noble Vaîṣṇavite devotee, who lived in Tamil Nadu. He lived in Villiputtur. It is said that he was the incarnation of Garuḍa. Viṣṇucitta had another name Periyālvar. Andal who was famous among the Ālvārs was the daughter of Viṣṇucitta.

Viṣṇucitta sang holy hymns in praise of the beloved god. The hymns of praise he sang are called Pallāndu. He got the name Periyālvar or the foremost of the devotees.

Once at Villiputtur, while he was getting beds ready to plant holy basil, he was attracted by a divine infant. It seemed to Viṣṇucitta that the little girl was lying among the basil plants. He took the child home and named her Godā. It was this Godā who became the famous Āndāl later. Legends say that the birth of Āndāl was in 97 Kali Era. Scholars say that Godā was born in the middle of 7th century. There is another story which mentions that Āndāl was born from a portion of Goddess Earth.

VIṢṆUDĀSA. A Vaîṣṇavite devotee who lived in ancient days. The story of this devotee who defeated his king Cola in devotion to Viṣṇu, is given in Padma Purāṇa, Uttra Khaṇḍa, Chapter 110. The story is as follows.

In days of old there was a king named Cola in Kāṇchipura. It was because of his reign that the country got the name Cola. He had performed several sacrifices. On the banks of the river Tāmraparṇi, stood his golden Yūpas (pegs on which sacrificial animals were tied) that the place looked like Cālitrarātha.

Once the king went to the temple and worshipped Viṣṇu by offering flowers of gold and jewels such as chalcedony and prostrated before Viṣṇu and rose up. At that time a Brahmin named Viṣṇudāsa from his own city came there to worship, with holy basil and water as offerings. He worshipped with the leaves and flower-bunches of holy basil. Because of his worship by holy basil, the king's worship by jewels, was dimmed. The emperor got angry and said, "Viṣṇudāsa, you are a poor man who does not know how to worship Viṣṇu. What merit has your worship of holy basil after mine of jewels?" Both began to contest on this point. At last the king said "Let us see who between us will get oneness with Viṣṇu first, you or I!"

After saying this the king went to his palace. He appointed Mudgala the high priest and began to perform a sacrifice to Viṣṇu. The sacrifice was going on with pomp and festivities. Viṣṇudāsa also was immersed in devotion to Viṣṇu to the best of his abilities.

Once Viṣṇudāsa, after his usual prayer and meditation prepared rice-food. But somebody took away the cooked rice unseen by Viṣṇudāsa. Fearing that he would miss the time for his evening prayer, he did not think of cooking food again. Next day also he cooked food and went for evening prayer. On that day also the rice was stolen. This continued. One day after cooking the food, Viṣṇudāsa waited close by in a hidden corner. He saw a low-caste man who was a mere skeleton because of famine, stealing the cooked rice and feeling pity on him he said, "Stop, stop. How can you eat it without any oily thing? See, take this ghee also." Saying so he drew near. The out-caste was terrified at this and ran away. On the way he stumbled and fell. Viṣṇudāsa ran to the spot and fanned him with his cloth. When he rose up the figure in the place of the low-caste was that of the real Śrī Nārāyaṇa with conch, discus and club held in his hands. Because of devotion Viṣṇudāsa stood be-numbed. While the King Cola and the people were looking on, Viṣṇudāsa got into the divine Virāṭ Vimmāna and went to the world of Viṣṇu.

VIṢṆUDĀTA. Son of the Brahmin named Vasudatta. The story of Viṣṇudatta is quoted to prove that bad omens at the beginning of a journey is a warning that the journey would not be fruitful and that it would be rather dangerous.

When Viṣṇudatta became sixteen years old he decided to go to the city of Valabhi for his education. Seven Brahmin boys of his age gathered together and joined him. Deciding not to separate from each other, they started for Valabhi, without the knowledge of their parents. When they proceeded a little further they saw a bad omen. Viṣṇudatta stood undecided, but the others pressed him on and they continued their journey. Next day by evening they reached a village of forest tribes. After walking through the village they reached the house of a woman. They got her permission to stay there for the night. They all lay in a corner. Immediately all slept. Viṣṇudatta alone lay awake. When the night advanced, a man entered the house. The woman and the man talked for a while and carried on sexual sports, and they lay together and slept. A light was burning in the room. Viṣṇudatta saw everything through the cleavage of the shutters, and thought, "I am sorry that we have come to this house. He is not her husband. Sure! she is a harlot." As he was thinking thus, foot-steps were heard in the courtyard. A young man fixed his servants in their places. Then he entered the house and saw Viṣṇudatta and his friends. The new-comer was also a forest-man. He had a sword in his hand. He was the owner of the house. Viṣṇudatta said that they were travellers. When he heard it, without saying anything he got inside and saw his wife sleeping with her lover. With the sword in his hand, he cut off the head of the lover. He did not kill the woman, who did not know that her lover was killed. The forester laid the sword down and lay in the same bed and slept. The light was burning.

After a while the woman woke up, and saw her husband who had cut her lover into two. She stood up quickly and took the trunk of her lover and placed it on her shoulder and taking the head in one hand, went out and hid them in the pile of ashes. Then she returned and lay down. Viṣṇudatta had followed her stealthily and seen what she had done. He also returned and sat in the midst of his friends. She rose up and took the sword of her husband and killed him with it. Then coming out she cried aloud. "Oh dear! These travellers have killed my husband." The servants woke up and came to the house and saw their master lying dead. They tried to attack Viṣṇudatta and his friends. Viṣṇudatta told them everything that he had seen, and showed them the head and the trunk of her lover, hidden in the ashes. When they saw this they understood everything. They tried the woman. At last she admitted the crime. They expelled her and drove her away. After this the travellers returned to their homes. (Kathāsarit-sāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, Tārātāgī 6).

VIŚNUDHARMA. A child of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 13).

VIŚNUJVARA. A great disease used by people to defeat their enemies. The antidote for Viśuṣuvara is Sīvajvara. In ancient days, in the fight between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bāṇa, Viśuṣuvara was sent against Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Bāṇa and to prevent it Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Viśuṣuvara against Bāṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIŚNULOKA. Vaiṣṇuṭha. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, that this world is situated on the top of Mahā Meru along with the worlds of Indra, Agni, Yama, Śiva, Brahmā etc.

VIŚNUMATI. The queen of the king named Satānīka. Sāhāṣṭrānīka was the son born to Viśuṇumatī and Satānīka. (Kathāsarit-sāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tārātāgī 1).

VIŚNUPADA. A place at the source of the river Gaṅgā. See under Gaṅgā.

VIŚNUPADATĪRTHA. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, that by bathing in this place and worshipping Vāmana, one could attain the world of Viṣṇu. This place is on the bank of the river Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Droṇa Parva, Chapter 8, that Arjuna, in his dream, had travelled with Śrī Kṛṣṇa to the world of Śiva and had, on the way, visited this holy place.

VIŚNUPEJĀ. A place at the source of the river Gaṅgā, where Yama was seen, and sacred activities were performed. (Kathāsarit-sāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tārātāgī 1).

VIŚNUPURANDARĀ. A Mantra (spell) taught to Devī Kātyāyani by Śiva. (See under Pārvatī).

VIŚNUPURĀJA. (Form of worshipping Viṣṇu). There are conventions regarding the form of worship of Viṣṇu and his satellite gods. The general form of that, worship is given below:

Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā, Dhātā, Vīḍhātā, Yamunā, Navanidhis (nine treasures), Vāstu-puruṣa, Śakti, Kāма (tortoise) Ananta (serpent) and Pṛthivī (Earth) are the satellites of Viṣṇu. First you must bow before Acyuta, (Viṣṇu) with all his satellites. Then worship Dharma (Virtue) Wisdom, self-renunciation, Supernatural power and Lawlessness, Ignorance, Want of Self-renunciation and want of supernatural powers, and then Bulb, Stall, Lotus, Filament and pericarp of the lotus and, the four Vedas, four Yogas (ages) and the three attributes, Sattva (purity), Rajas (passion) and Tamas (darkness). After this the three Mandala (regions) of Arka (the Sun), Soma (the Moon) and Vahni (Fire). After this the nine powers should be worshipped. Vimala, Utkarṣiṇī, Jñāna, Kriyā, Yoga, Prahva, Satya, Kānti and Iśa are the nine powers. In the same way, Durgā, Sarasvatī, Gānapati and Kṣetrapāla also should be worshipped. As the next step heart, head, lock of hair, armour, eyes and the weapons should be worshipped. Then worship the conch, the Discus the club, the lotus, the mark Śrīvatsa, the Kaustubha, the Vanamālī, the Earth, Guru and Garuda. With prayer and oblations offered to Indra, Agni, Yama, Nīrītī, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera, Iśa, Ananta and Brahmā, who are the guardians of the ten directions and the weapons and conveyance and Kumuda and the others (the four mountains standing near the Mahā Meru) and Viśvaksena (Viṣṇu) Viṣṇu-pūjā will be finished. By performing this worship of Viṣṇu and his satellites, one could attain all one's wishes. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

VIŚNUPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa is the description of the activities in Varāha Kalpa (the age of Varāha—Boar). There are twenty-three thousand granthas in this Purāṇa. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that if this book Viṣṇu Purāṇa is given as a gift along with cow and water on the full moon day of the month of Asāḍha, the giver would attain the city of Viṣṇu. (For further details see under Purāṇa).

VIŚNURĀTĀ. Another name of Pārīkṣit.

VIŚNUŚARMĀ. See under Viṣṇušarmā.

VIŚNUVRATA. A Vrata (fast or vow) taken thinking of Viṣṇu in mind. By taking this vow, one could get what one desires for.

Worship Viṣṇu, after bathing his image on the first day of the vow of four days, beginning with the second day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Pausā, with mustard; on the next day with gingly seeds; on the third day with Orris root and on the fourth day with all the medicinal herbs. ‘All the medicinal herbs’, means medicine such as Māṇī, Oris root, Costus, Bitumen (stone juice), Saffron, Curcuma, bulb of Kacchāri, Flower of Michelia Champaca and bulb of Cyperus grass. After bathing the image as given above, Viṣṇu must be exalted on the first day by the name Kṛṣṇa, on the second day by the name Acyuta, on the third day, by the name Ananta and on the fourth day, by the name Hṛṣikeśa. The worship should be performed by offering flower, on the feet on the first day, on the navel on the second day, on the eyes on the third day and on the head on the fourth day, and Candra should be given oblations and exalted by names such as Saśi on the first day, Candra on the second day, Saśānka on the third day and Indu on the fourth day. It is ordained in Chapter 177, of Agni Purāṇa, that the worship of Viṣṇu-vrata should be conducted in this way. This is a form of worship observed by Kings, women and Devas (gods).

VIŚNUVRDDHA. A King. He was the son of Trasadasya. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that Viṣṇu-vrddha who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Brahmā by penance.

VIŚNYUYASAS. Another name of Kalkī. (For further details see under Kalkī).

VIŚOKA I. The charioteer of Bhīmasena. In the Bhārata-battle Bhagadatta struck him and he fell unconscious. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 76).

VIŚOKA II. A prince of Kekaṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 3, that this prince was killed by Karṇa in the battle of Bhārata.

VIŚOKA III. A Yādava prince born to Kṛṣṇa by Trivakā. This prince who was the disciple of Nārada had written the book, “Sātvatatāntra”. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIŚOKA I. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Bhīṣṇa-yāpatī Parva, Chapter 38, that Śrī Kṛṣṇa had a wife called Viśokā.

VIŚOKA II. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 5).

VIŚRASAV. Father of Rāvaṇa. 1) General Information. Viśrasav was the son born to Pulastya the son of Brahmā, by his wife Havirbhuk. The son Viśrasaṉa was born to him by his wife Iabilā (Idābiḍā) and Rāvana and his brothers by his wife Kaikāsi. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 274, there is a story about the birth of Vaiśravaṇa (Kubera) as son to Vīravas. The son Vaiśravaṇa was born to Pulastya. Vaiśravaṇa rejected his father Pulastya and served his grandfather Brahñā. Pulastya did not like this. He generated another son Vīravas from half of his body. Vīravas tried to wreak vengeance on Vaiśravaṇa, who took refuge near Brahñā, who was much pleased at Vaiśravaṇa and granted him immortality, the state of being the owner of wealth, the position of 'Lokapāla', connection with Śiva, a son named Nakalikābara, the city of Lakākā, the Puspaṇa Iśvaraṇa, the lordship of the Yakṣas and the title Rājarāja (King of Kings).

2) Family Life. Kubera engaged three beautiful Rākṣasas damsels, Puṣpotkata, Rākā and Mālinī to attend on Vīravas. Puṣpotkata had the name Kaikāsi also. Kaikāsi gave birth to Rāvana and Kumbhañakara. Khara and Śūrapānakā were born to Rākā and Mālinī gave birth to Viśvāsana. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 7).

VIŚRAVĀŚRAMA. A holy place situated on the boundary of the country Anartra. Kubera was born in this place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 5).

VIŚUCIKA. See under Brahñā, Para 12).

VIŚUDI. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaśyapa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

VIŚUVAT. The time, when night and day are equal, is called Viśuvat. (Viśu Purāṇa, Anśa 2, Chapter 8).

VIŚVA. A Kṣatriya King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 36, that this King was born from a portion of Mayūra, an asura.

VIŚVA. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 12).

VIŚVABHUK I. A story about the birth of five Indras, on earth, in the form of Pāṇḍavas, is given in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 29. Viśvabhu is one of them. The remaining four were, Bhūtadhāmā, Śibi, Śanti and Tejasvī.

VIŚVABHUk II. The fourth son of Bhṛṣapāti. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 17, that it is this Viśvabhu, who sits in the stomach of all living things and digests food. This Agni (fire) is particularly worshipped in sacrifices. The Purāṇas say that the river Gomati is the wife of this Agni (fire).

VIŚVĀC. An asura. Mention is made in Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 117, that the race of this Asura was destroyed by the Āśvinidevas.

VIŚVĀC. A celestial maid. She is one of the prominent celestial maids such as Urvasī and others. Once King Yāyāti played with Viśvācī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65, that Viśvācī had attended the birth festival of Arjuna and sang some songs. Her duty is to stay in the palace of Kubera and serve him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11).

VIŚVADAMŚTRA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52, that this asura also had been a ruler of this world.

VIŚVADEVAS. A group of Devas. Dharmadeva married ten daughters of Dakṣa, Viśvā was one of them. Viśvadevas are the sons of Viśvā. The Sādhyas were born from Sādhya, the Marutvans from Marutvati, the Vasus from Vāsū, the Bhānas from Bhanū and the Devas who boast about Muhūrta (auspicious moment) were born from Muhūrta. Lambā gave birth to Ghoṣa and Yāmi to Nāgaṇvīthī. (Viśu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 15).

VIŚVĀGAVSA I. An ancient King in India. He was the son of emperor Pṛthu born in the dynasty of Iksvāku and the father of the King Adi. By giving alms of cows, he became famous. Viśvāgavsa was a pure vegetarian. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 3; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 58).

VIŚVĀGAVSA II. A King born in the dynasty of Pūru. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 14, that this King was defeated by Arjuna during his Northern Regional conquest.

VIŚVĀJIT I. A King of the Áṅgā dynasty. He was the son of Jayadratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VIŚVĀJIT II. A King descended from Yayāti. This King was the son of Suvarata and the father of Ripuṇyāya. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VIŚVĀJIT III. The third son of Bhṛṣapāti. He has the intelligence of all the living beings in all the worlds. That is why he was given the name Viśvājī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 16).

VIŚVĀJIT IV. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 33, that in days of yore, this asura had been ruling over the world and that because of his fate he had to leave this world.

VIŚVĀKA. A hermit of the period of Rgveda. Once Viśvādī the son of this hermit was lost. The father praised the Āśvinidevas, who showed him his son as one shows a lost cow. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 8, Sūkta 16).

VIŚVAKĀRMA. The architect of the Devas.

1) Birth. Viśvakārma is the son of Prabhāsa, the eighth of the Eight Vasus. Varāṣtri, the sister of Bhṛṣapāti, a celibate woman who had attained Yogasiddhi (union with the Universal Soul) and travelled all over the world was the wife of Prabhāsa. Prajāpati Viśvakārma was born to Prabhāsa by Varāṣtri. This Viśvakārma was the inventor of innumerable kinds of handicrafts, the architect of the gods, maker of all kinds of ornaments, and the most famous sculptor. He was the maker of all the aerial chariots of the Devas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 15).

2) Children. Though mention is made about many children of Viśvakārma in various Purāṇas, five sons and four daughters are mostly spoken of. When Mahāviśu took the incarnation of Śrī Rāma for a stipulated purpose, the devas took birth as monkeys in forests, to help Mahāviṣṇu. Mention is made in Vaiṣṇavī Rāmâyana, Bīla Kānda, Sarga 18, that Nala a very big monkey was begotten by Viṣvakārma. The other four sons of Viśvakārma are mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 15. Four sons named Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭa and Rudra were born to Viśvakārma. The great hermit and sage Viśvāruṇa was the son of Tvaṣṭa. Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapī, Sambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mrgavyādha, Sarva, and Kapāli are the eleven Rudras. They are the Íśvaras (gods) of the three worlds. It is said that in this way there are one hundred Rudras with shining radiance.

The daughters of Vīśvakarmā:—The four prominent daughters are Sānijā, Citarāṇgadā, Surūpā and Barhiṃmati. The Sun married Sānijā. Sun got three children, Manu, Yama and Yami by Sānijā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 3, Chapter 2). Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda, married Surūpā and Barhiṃmati. Of these the first wife gave birth to ten sons named Agniḍhara, Idmājihva, Yajñābāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghrtraprśītha, Savana, Medhātīthi, Vīṭhūtra and Kavi and last of all a daughter named Uṛjjasvati. Of these Kavi, Savana and Mahāvīra became abstemious and well-versed in Brahmavidyā (theosophy). By the other wife three other sons Uṭtama, Tāmasa and Raivata were born to Priyavrata. These grew up to be famous and gradually became lords of Manvantaras. This Priyavrata lived with his sons and ruled over the country for eleven Arbuda ages (Arbuda—ten crores). In spite of his old age, his faculties or his body did not become weak. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

Citarāṇgadā was the fourth daughter of Vīśvakarmā. Ghrtrāci was her mother. The young and beautiful Citarāṇgadā one day went to bathe in the river in the Naimiṣa forest. When she got into the water the prince Suratha, the son of King Sudeva came there. Their eyes met. Both fell in love with each other. In spite of the advice of her maids she succumbed to the desire of the King. Knowing this her angry father Vīśvakarmā came to her and said, “Since you have deviated from the path of righteousness and abandoned your soul to a libertine, you will not have marriage, and hence you will not enjoy the pleasures of having a husband or child.” As soon as she was cursed, the river Sarasvati carried the prince Suratha thirteen yojanas down along with her current. Because the King was washed away by the current Citraṅgadā fell down unconscious. The maids sprinkled the water from the river Sarasvati on her face. Still she lay there as dead. Thinking that she was dead, her maids went in different ways to fetch firewood and fire. When the maids were gone, she came to herself and looked on all sides. Seeing none of her maids in the vicinity, she felt miserable and jumped into the river Sarasvati, and the current carried her down and pushed her into the great river Gomati. Being aware of her future, the great river Gomati pushed her down and placed her in a big forest where lions, leopards, tigers etc. lived in plenty.

A Guhyaaka (a section of Yakṣa) who was going through the sky, saw Cittāṅgadā in the forest, and in reply to his enquiry she told her story to him. Guhyaaka blessed her and advised her to go to the temple close by and to worship Śrīkaṇṭhesvara, so that every thing might end well. Accordingly Cittāṅgadā reached Śrīkaṇṭhesvara on the south of Kālindī, bathed in the Yamunā at noon and went to the temple and bowed before Śrīkaṇṭha Mahēśvara.

At that time the hermit Ṛṭadhvaja, well-versed in Sānaveda came there to bathe. The hermit called Cittāṅgadā and enquired about her. She told him all that had happened to her. Hearing her story, the hermit became angry and cursed Vīśvakarmā. “Let that Vīśvakarmā who has behaved so cruelly towards his own daughter become a monkey.” Then he called Cittāṅgadā and said to her. “Good girl, go to the holy place called Saptagodāvara and worship Hāṭhakēṣvara Mahādeva. Devavati, the daughter of the asura Kandāramālī the hermit woman Damayantī, the daughter of Anjana, a Guhyaaka, and Vedavatī the daughter of Parjanya would come there. At the time when these three young women meet together at Hāṭhakēṣvara, you will unite with your husband.” Being overjoyed at the words of the hermit, Cittāṅgadā went to Saptagodāvara, lived there and worshipped Śiva. Ṛṭadhvaja went on his way.

Vīśvakarmā, transformed into a huge monkey, was causing havoc and devastation in the forest. Once the five-year-old son of Ṛṭadhvaja, called Jābdī had gone to bathe in the river. The Vīśvakarmā monkey chased this boy and caught him and taking him to the top of a Banyan tree, placed him close to the branches and tied him fast with creepers. After this the monkey went to Mahāmeru. As the second adventure, the monkey separated Damayantī from her father Anjana, a Guhyaaka. Damayantī was born to Anjana by the celestial maid Pramlocā. Hermit Mudgala had once prophesied that this Damayantī would become the prominent wife of a King. The delighted Damayantī was once about to get into the water of the holy bath Hirāpātī, with her maids when the Vīśvakarmā-monkey ran to the spot and the terrified Damayantī jumped into the river and was carried down by the current. She floated down and got into a forest. It was in this forest that Jābdī was tied to the banyan branches. Damayantī saw Jābdī. Each said to the other about the cruel deeds of the monkey. After that according to the advice of Jābdī, Damayantī went to the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhesvara on the basin of the river Yamunā. After worshipping Śrīkaṇṭhesvara, she wrote on the wall of the temple, a poem about the misfortunes of herself and Jābdī and stayed in that place engaged in worshipping god.

The next confrontation of the monkey was with Vedavati the daughter of Parjanya. Vedavati was born to Parjanya by a celestial woman Ghrtrāci. Once while Vedavati was playing in the forest, the monkey saw her. He addressed her Devavati, intentionally mispronouncing her name. She replied, “You monkey, I am not Devavati, I am Vedavati.” Instantly the monkey ran to her. Vedavati quickly climbed on a hibiscus tree. The monkey kicked at the tree and broke it, Vedavati held fast to a strong branch of the tree. The monkey took the branch and threw it on to the sea. Every movable and immovable thing in the world thought a tree was falling down from the sky. Seeing Vedavati falling down, a Gandharva said, “Oh dear, Brahmā himself had said once that this damsel would become the chief wife of Indradyumna, the famous hero, the son of Manu the great King who has completed thousand yāgas (sacrifices).”

Hearing the words of the Gandharva, Indradyumna the son of Manu, broke that branch into thousand pieces by his arrows. Though the branch was destroyed, Indradyumna could not find where Vedavati had fallen. She floated into a part of the forest. All alone she walked on and on and reached the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhesvara, on the bank of Yamunā. Damayantī who had reached the temple earlier and Vedavati met each other and talked about their experiences. Thus due to the wickedness of the Vīśvakarmā-monkey Jābdī the son of Ṛṭadhvaja came to be tied, on to the banyan tree and Damayanti and Vedavati to be staying helpless in the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara.

At this time the hermit Gālava reached the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara. He saw Damayanti and Vedavati and felt pity on them. Next day Gālava started for Saptagāvaša to take a bath in Kārttika. Damayanti and Vedavati followed the hermit. They reached Saptagāvaša and dipped in Puṣkara bath. Under water they saw several Virgin fishes gathered round a whale begging him for love. The whale was saying harsh words to them rejecting their request. The fish virgins again told the whale. “Don’t you see the hermit Gālava going about with two beautiful damsels. If this righteous hermit does not fear slander, why should you, who live under water fear it?” The whale replied. “Gālava doesn’t fear people because he is daring and blind with love.” Hearing these words of the fishes, Gālava became ashamed of himself. So without coming up he stayed under water. The two girls finished bath and got on the bank, and waited for Gālava. Viśvakārmā’s daughter Citrāṅgadā, who had reached the place earlier, met the two girls. They told each other their stories. “As Rādhvaja had prophesied, Damayanti the daughter of Atjana and Vedavati the daughter of Parjanya have arrived.” Thought Citrāṅgadā. “If Devavati the daughter of the asura Kandārmālī, also is come, I could unite with my husband Suratha.” Citrāṅgadā became glad. At this time Devavati, the daughter of Kandārmālī, ran to the spot, being chased by the Viśvakāmā monkey.

The reader might remember that Damayanti had written a poem on the wall of the temple at Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara when she had gone there at the instruction of Jābāli who had been tied on to a branch of a tree. At noon on that day Rādhvaja had gone to the temple at Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara and happened to see the poem. Then only did he understand that his son Jābāli had been tied to a tree by a monkey. By then five hundred years had elapsed. Rādhvaja was aware of the fact that the only person capable of liberating Jābāli, was Śakuni the son of Iksvāku. Rādhvaja reached Ayodhyā instantly and told Iksvāku. “Oh, mighty King I hear me, please! A monkey has made my virtuous and learned son Jābāli, a captive and bound him on a tree, within the boundary of your kingdom. Nobody in the world except your son Śakuni will be capable of rescuing him.” Śakuni accompanied Rādhvaja to the forest. They saw the tall huge banyan tree with bulky roots hanging on all sides and on the top of the tree, on a lofty place, the son of Rādhvaja entangled and entwined by creepers. Seeing the network of creepers around the body of the hermit’s son, Śakuni began to send arrows one after another and cut off all the creeper’s knots. Rādhvaja climbed up the tree. Seeing his father, Jābāli bowed his head to his father. Rādhvaja was not capable of extiricating his son. The prince put down his bow and arrow and tried to unite the knots of the creepers that held his body to the branch. Though a sturdy man he could not do it. At last they cut the branch close to his body and got Jābāli down. A piece of the branch was stuck to his back. Thus with his son Jābāli bearing a piece of lumber on his back and Śakuni bearing bow and arrows, Rādhvaja came to Kālīndi. Rādhvaja, Śakuni and Jābāli wandered about for years in search of Damayanti and the others. After nearly a hundred years, with despair Jābāli bearing the lumber on his back, went with his father to Kosala. The king of that country was Indradyumna, the son of Manu. He welcomed the hermit with hospitality. Rādhvaja talked about Damayanti. Indradyumna claimed that he had once saved a young woman by his arrows from the branch of a tree. They all started in search of the girls. They reached Badarīśrama, where they saw a young hermit. From the conversation it was revealed that the young hermit was Suratha. When he learned everything he stopped penance and accompanied them. Under the leadership of Rādhvaja, they reached Saptagāvaša and saw Citrāṅgadā.

In the meanwhile Gṛṛtācī, sad and miserable, was wandering over the mountain of the rising sun, searching for her lost daughter Citrāṅgadā. She met the cursed monkey form of Viśvakāmā and asked it, “Oh! monkey! have you seen a girl?” The monkey told her every thing that took place. Gṛṛtācī also reached Saptagāvaša. The monkey followed close behind her. As soon as Jābāli saw the monkey he got angry and jumped forward to wreak vengeance. Rādhvaja checked his son and told him the history of Viśvakāmā. The monkey separated the piece of the branch from the back of Jābāli, who had been bearing it on his back for the last thousand years. Rādhvaja was immensely pleased at this and asked the monkey what boon he wanted. The monkey said, “Brahman, if you wish to give me a boon, please recall your curse. Great hermit I am Viśvakāmā the father of Citrāṅgadā. I became a monkey because of your curse. Let all the sins I have incurred because of the mischief of a monkey, be remitted.” Hearing this Rādhvaja said. “Your curse will end when you get a strong and sturdy son by Gṛṛtācī.”

Hearing this Gṛṛtācī rose up in the sky. The monkey also jumped up and followed her. The monkey was attracted by the beauty of Gṛṛtācī. Later, on the mountain named Kolāhala, the monkey enticed Gṛṛtācī and wooed her. She consented and they lived thus for a long time. Then they went to the Vindhya mountain. On the bank of the Godāvari, a sturdy son was born to them. This son was the strong sturdy huge monkey Nala, who helped Śrī Rāma.

On the birth of a son Viśvakāmā regained his former form. He returned to Saptagāvaša with Gṛṛtācī. Gālava also came there. With the hermit Gālava at the head, the priests made burnt offerings and began the performance of the marriage ceremony. The Gandharvas sang and the celestial maidens danced. The first marriage was between Devavati the daughter of Kandāramālī and Jābāli. Then Indradyumna married Vedavati. Next, Śakuni married Damayanti, the daughter of Atjana, and lastly Suratha married Citrāṅgadā. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapters 63 and 64).

in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva Dāksinātyapāṭha, Chapter
7, that he shines in the palace of Indra.

VIŚVAKṣṚSA. A synonym of Viṣṇu.

VIŚVĀMITRA. A royal hermit of immense attainments.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Brahma in the following order Brahma—Atri—Candra—Budha—Putravas-—Vijaya—Hotракa—Jahnu—Puru—Balāka—Ajaka—Kuṣa—Kuṇānāba—Gādhi—Viśvāmitra.
2) Birth. Six beautiful daughters were born to Kuśanāba the son of King Kuśa. The hermit Brahmadatta married them. After this a son named Gādhi was born to Kuṇānāba. Two children named Satyavatī and Viśvāmitra were born to Gādhi. Satyavatī was married to Rācika; as he was born in the family of the famous king Kuśa, Viśvāmitra got the name Kauśika also. His kingdom was Kānyakubja. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 34).
3) Becoming a hermit. Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha were two hermits who were hostile to each other throughout their lives. A quarrel with Vasiṣṭha, persuaded Viśvāmitra to become a hermit.
(Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 51).

The hermit Vasiṣṭha erected his hermitage and did penance in the country of Viśvāmitra. Once, while engaged in hunting Viśvāmitra saw Nandī in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, and wanted to have her. In the battle which ensued between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, the hermit Vasiṣṭha came out victorious. The armed Viśvāmitra gave up his kingdom and went to forest to do penance. Viśvāmitra became a royal hermit of great attainments. There were constant confrontations between the Rājaśi and the Brahmarshi (King-hermit and Brahmin-hermit). (For the detailed story of the quarrels between Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha see under Vasiṣṭha, para 2).

4) Viśvāmitra and Hariścandra. The histories of Viśvāmitra, Vasiṣṭha and Hariścandra are intertwined as a triple string. Viśvāmitra made Hariścandra, the most renowned of the men of veracity, go begging.

Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra. Their history begins from King Trīśaṅku of the Solar dynasty.

Formerly the name of Trīśaṅku was Satyavrata. Aruṇa was the father of Satyavrata. When Aruṇa was reigning the prince Satyavrata was leading a wicked life. He once entered the wedding hall of a Brahmin and carried away the bride by force. When the king knew this, he expelled the prince from the palace. Vasiṣṭha, as the family priest, was behind the cruelty on the part of the king towards his son. It was because of this that Viśvāmitra crossed the path of Satyavrata.

Satyavrata went to the forest and lived like a low-caste man. King Aruṇa repented his rashness. Entrusting his kingdom to Vasiṣṭha, Aruṇa went to the forest to do penance. For twelve years there was no rain in the country.
Famine broke out. Viśvāmitra's wife and three children were in great difficulty. The hermit had been engaged in penance. So the wife of the hermit decided to sell the middle son for the sake of maintaining the rest and started for the market with her children. On the way Satyavrata met them and learned the whole story. He told her not to sell the child. He agreed to give them food till the arrival of Viśvāmitra. The agreement was that he would tie the meat, obtained by hunting, to a tree outside the hermitage, every day. Satyavrata carried out the promise. One day he did not get anything from hunting. He caught hold of Vasiṣṭha's cow which had been grazing in the forest and killed it and gave its flesh to the family of Viśvāmitra. On coming to know this Vasiṣṭha cursed him and changed his form into that of a cāndāla (low-caste). Moreover, as he had incurred three sins such as stealing of a bride, anger of father and cow-slaughter, he came to be told Trīśaṅku from that day onwards. Weighed down by these sins, he tried to commit suicide. Devi appeared before him and gave him back his original form and his kingdom.

After the death of Aruṇa, Trīśaṅku assumed the reign.
Hariścandra was his son. After giving the country to his son, Trīśaṅku requested Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice to send him to heaven bodily. Vasiṣṭha said that it was impossible for him. Vasiṣṭha's enemy Viśvāmitra took up the task. He lifted Trīśaṅku bodily, up to heaven.
But he was denied admittance in heaven and so Viśvāmitra created an artificial heaven between the earth and heaven and made Trīśaṅku stay there.

Viśvāmitra was keeping up hostile attitude towards the kings of the Solar dynasty. In reality it was not the hostility towards the Solar dynasty, but it was his enmity against Vasishtha. Visvamitra did not like Vasishtha's being the family-priest of the kings of the Solar dynasty. So Visvamitra kept up an attitude of antipathy towards them. This is the background of the quarrel between Harischandra and Visvamitra.

Harischandra took Candramati, the daughter of Sibi, as his first wife. Besides her, he had nineteen wives. But they had no children. At last according to the advice of Vasishtha he went to the basin of the Ganges and did penance before Varuna. Visvamitra did not like this. Varuna appeared and said that Harischandra would get a son. The king had promised that he would give his son as a sacrificial animal to Varuna. Candramati became pregnant and delivered a son. He was named Rohitashva. Even after the lapse of a month, the son was not given to Varuna. On several occasions Varuna demanded the child; and Harischandra would give some excuses. Finally the king agreed to hand him over to Varuna at the age of eleven after his Upanayana (investiture with the Brahma string). The boy completed his tenth year. Preparations were being made in the palace, for Upanayana, when Varuna arrived. The prince, who was aware of the fact that his father would sacrifice him after his Upanayana, ran away from the palace at night. Varuna asked the king to hand over the boy to him. The king was in great perplexity. Varuna cursed the king that he would catch the disease called Jalodara (dropsy). Thus the king became a sick man. Rohitashva heard from travellers that his father was ill. On many occasions he wanted to return to the palace. But Indra appeared before him in the form of a Brahmin and dissuaded him from going to the palace. Harischandra called Vasishtha and asked him to suggest a remedy for this woe and misery. Vasishtha advised him to fulfill somehow or other, the promise made to Varuna. The hermit continued, "Sons are of ten types. A son bought for price also is included in this. So it is enough if a son is bought for price and is sacrificed. Some Brahmin may be found, who will be willing to sell his son. If you please Varuna thus, you will be cured." The King was delighted to hear this. He instructed his minister to find out any Brahmin who was willing to sell his son. A greedy Brahmin was found out. His name was Ajigarta. He had three sons. He was prepared to sell the second son, Sunassepha. The minister agreed to give him hundred cows in return.

Up to this time Visvamitra had been waging only a shadow war against the Kings of the Solar dynasty. From this moment he entered the scene of war. The minister bought Sunassepha and brought him to the palace. Visvamitra also arrived at the palace. He sympathised with Sunassepha who was crying pitably. He asked the King to release the boy, and gave a warning that if the boy was not set free, the sacrifice would be obstructed. The King said that he was doing so to get recovery from illness, that he would give Visvamitra a good deal of wealth, and requested him not to cause any hindrance to the sacrifice. These words and the misery of the boy kindled the anger of Visvamitra. He called Sunassepha and taught him Varuna Mantra (spell) and told him to repeat the mantra when he was lying on the slaughter-stone and that he would escape death. Sunassepha did as he was told. Varuna became pleased with him and appearing before the King said, "Leave Sunassepha and perform the sacrifice. You will get recovery." Saying so Varuna disappeared. Immediately the King was cured of his disease. At the order of the King Sunassepha was set free. The sound 'Jaya Jaya' (victory) reverberated in the sacrificial hall. Sunassepha got up and asked, "Oh great men. Who is my father now?" Some said that it was Ajigarta. Some others argued that it was Harischandra. Some said that it was Varuna." At this time Visishtha stood up and said, "Oh, great men, please stop arguing. I shall give reply in accordance with the convention of Vedas. When he bargained on the price of his son and received the cost Ajigarta lost his paternity. Henceforward Harischandra who bought the boy became his father. From the moment he had issued orders to bind the boy and place him on the slaughter-stone, he also had lost his paternity. The claim of Varuna to his paternity, because the boy had been saved from death by him, does not hold good. Any god will be pleased, when praised and glorified with great laudatory mantras and will confer upon the suppliant wealth, life, cow, land, salvation etc. There is nothing unusual in this. But it was Visvamitra who taught him the Varuna-spell in his pitiable and dangerous situation. So Visvamitra alone has claim to the boy's paternity."

Those who were present, accepted this decision. Immediately Visvamitra took Sunassepha with him and went to his hermitage. Hearing about the recovery of the King, Rohitashva returned to the palace from the forest. Harischandra received him with tears of joy. The King, with his wife and son led a happy life and ruled over his subjects with justice and truth. At this time, Harischandra (of Kakutsha's family) accepting Vasishtha as the main priest performed the famous sacrifice of Rajaśuya (Royal) consecration with ceremonies and festivities. With this the fame of Harischandra spread far and wide.

At this point begins the next stage of confrontation between Visvamitra and Harischandra. Vasishtha once reached heaven. Visvamitra also reached there at the same time. The devas greeted both honourably. But Visvamitra saw that Vasishtha was shown some partiality. This was unpalatable to Visvamitra, who asked Vasishtha, "What excellence have you, more than I?" Vasishtha replied, "Have you not heard about Harischandra, the King of the Solar dynasty? It is the noblest dynasty in the world. The family priesthood of this dynasty also is laudable. My disciple Harischandra of that royal family has recently performed the sacrifice of Rajaśuya. I was the Supreme priest of the function. This is a covetable position not attainable to many. Moreover, there is none in the world, more truthful, firm of character, more charitable and more liberal than Harischandra. This is a fact." Visvamitra got up angrily and argued that Harischandra was not truthful. He staked all the fruits of his penance to prove this. From that day onwards Visvamitra began to make moves to instigate Harischandra to deviate from the path of truth. Once Harischandra, while he was hunting, met a lonely woman in the forest. She was moaning. The King asked why she was lamenting. She replied, "Oh King, I am Siddhirūpini (a goddess who helps people to attain
After making all arrangements for the marriage, Viśvāmitra approached King Hariścandra. The King asked him what amount he required. "Give me your kingdom with all the elephants, horses, chariots, jewels and wealth in it", said Viśvāmitra. The King who had been led to this deception by Viśvāmitra, having no go, agreed. Thus Viśvāmitra obtained the kingdom and everything that Hariścandra possessed. It is conventional that whenever a gift is given to Brahmans, a daksīṇa (monetary gift) also should be given along with it. Otherwise the gift will be futile. The King asked the Brahmin what he wanted as daksīṇa. He demanded two and a half Bhāras of gold as daksīṇa. The King agreed to give that also. But where to get this amount from, since he had lost his kingdom and everything? Having sunk deep in misery due to the deceit of Viśvāmitra, the King sat on the soil, cursing his fate. Seeing this, the queen ran to him and cried. While he was telling his wife every thing, Viśvāmitra came there and said:

Viśvāmitra:—Hariścandra! According to the gift hand over your country and everything instantly. I must have the daksīṇa of two and a half Bhāras of gold also just now.

Hariścandra:—"Sir! According to my promise receive everything now. We are leaving the country instantly. But since I have given you everything that I had, how can I give you daksīṇa? Everything I had, has become yours. The amount for daksīṇa has yet to be procured. So receive the gift now. The daksīṇa shall be given as early as possible."

After giving everything to the hermit, the King left the country with only the cloth he had been wearing. His wife and child followed him. The hermit also followed the King compelling him to give him the daksīṇa. The King told him that only after paying this debt would he eat any food, and that he would pay the amount within a month. Viśvāmitra, unwillingly agreed to this.

With his wife Candramati and his young son, Hariścandra reached Kāśi. After a month Viśvāmitra came to Kāśi for the amount of daksīṇa. Finding no go, Candramati said to her husband. "My Lord! I sell to some one and clear off this debt," The King with tears agreed to this proposal. Because of their woe and misery, both fell on the ground and fainted. The child sat near them hungry and crying. Viśvāmitra stood near them compelling them to pay the amount. When Hariścandra came to himself, he sold his beloved wife to a Brahmin in the village close by. The Brahmin who bought Candramati was Viśvāmitra. Hariścandra was not aware of this. After counting out a crore of gold pieces in a cloth and placing it on the ground Viśvāmitra caught hold of Candramati by her hair and dragged her away. He bought the crying child also paying its price. The Brahmin led the mother and the child, beating and dragging them along, like animals. They disappeared from the sight of the King. Viśvāmitra again came before Hariścandra and asked for the money. Hariścandra gave Viśvāmitra, all the money he got. The hermit was not satisfied. Viśvāmitra said that the money given, was not an adequate amount as daksīṇa when the importance of the great sacrifice Rājasūya was considered and that if he was to get the full benefit of the sacrifice he had to satisfy him by... giving him the requisite amount. The King accepted everything the hermit said without any objection. Viśvāmitra compelled him for payment. The King requested for time. Viśvāmitra allowed time till sunset that day.

As soon as Viśvāmitra had gone Hariscandra walked on with bent head, calling out. "Does anybody want me? Will anybody buy me for price?" Instantly Yamadharma came there as an outcaste and bought Hariscandra. The name of the outcaste was Pravira. He bought Hariscandra to guard the funeral ground and to collect tax on dead bodies. Viśvāmitra quickly ran to the place. The outcaste gave Viśvāmitra ten yojanas of land which yielded jewels, in the region of Prayāga and severed his connection. Viśvāmitra went on his way. The outcaste King took Hariscandra to the funeral ground. Day and night Hariscandra had to guard the entrance of the funeral ground.

At this juncture Hariscandra's son died of snake bite, while he was playing with other children on the bank of the Ganges. His mother Candramati fainted and fell down, the moment she heard about it. As soon as she recovered, she lamented over the death of her son for a long time. Then she requested her master for permission to go and see the dead body of her son. But she was not given permission. She repeatedly pleaded crying all the while. Then the Brahmin, her master, got angry and said, "You slave! If your son it dead, let him be dead. Is it any loss to you? It is my money that is lost. You go and do your work. If not I will operate this whip well on you. Remember that. You know the biting pain of this whip. Stop wailing and lamenting." Candramati persisted in her request to allow her to go and see the dead body of her son. Not only did he refuse to allow her to see the dead body of her son, but also beat her. With tears she turned to her duties. It was night. The Brahmin took his meals and lay down to sleep. Candramati was sitting at his feet massaging his legs. When it was nearly midnight that stone-hearted old Brahmin said, "Now you may go. Complete the funeral and return before dawn. Your usual work in the morning should not be left undone. If so, you know the consequences."

Hearing these words, Candramati ran to the place where the dead body of her son lay. The son lay on the grass dead and stiff, with the face and body turned blue due to poison. She saw that face in the flash of a lightning. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry people of the neighbouring houses ran to the spot. Candramati did not give any reply to their questions. Some thought her to be a ghost. Some wanted to kill her. Some caught her by the hair. Some struck her at. At last they tied her with a rope and dragged her to the funeral place. They asked Hariscandra who was standing there, to cut her into pieces. He refused to kill a woman. The outcaste King came there and giving Hariscandra a big sword asked him again and again to cut her into pieces. Candramati and Hariscandra did not recognize each other. At last, finding it difficult to disobey his master, Hariscandra raised the sword to cut her.

Then Candramati shouted. "You outcaste. My son is lying dead on the bank of the Ganges near this town. Let me bring his body and cremate it. Allow me this much time. After that I will come and sit here to be cut into pieces by you." Hariscandra agreed to it. Crying all the way Candramati went to the bank of the Ganges and brought the dead body of her son to the cremation place. Seeing her pitiable condition Hariscandra went close to the dead body and removing the shroud looked at the corpse. Because of poison the body of the child was blue and ugly and as Hariscandra and Candramati had undergone so thorough a change they did not recognize each other. But from her lamentation and talk, he understood that the woman was his wife Candramati. He also cried aloud. Candramati recognized her husband. Stūl Hariscandra said that if the child was cremated without collecting the usual fee, it would be deceiving his master. At last both of them decided to commit suicide before the night ended.

Without loss of time Hariscandra gathered half-burned fire-wood, and built a pile big enough to burn the child's body and for them to jump into it. He laid the child on it and set fire to it. Hariscandra and Candramati stood with closed eyes ready to jump into the burning fire. Then Brahmā appeared there and prevented them from jumping into the fire. Indra and the Devas showered Amṛta (Ambrosia). The child came to life and got out of the fire. The King and the queen regained their shining bodies and royal garments and ornaments. The outcaste who was the master of Hariscandra was really, Dharmadeva. All the Devas blessed Hariscandra and Viśvāmitra returned the kingdom to the truthful Hariscandra. Their subjects were overjoyed at the return of their King and queen. After that Rohita was anointed as the King of Ayodhyā and the Devas went with Hariscandra to heaven. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7)

6) Viśvāmitra and the brothers Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. See under Rāma, Paras 5, 6, 7 and 8.
7) Weapon Training. Viśvāmitra had proficiency in wielding all types of weapons. He taught Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa all that he knew about weapons. See under Astra.
8) Cursing Rambahā. Once Viśvāmitra was doing very severe penance. Indra feared him. So wishing to hinder the penance of Viśvāmitra somehow Indra called Rambahā to him and said to her. "Rambahā, you dress well and dance before Viśvāmitra. Somehow his penance must be hindered. I shall take the form of a cuckoo, and help you by singing."

Indra and Rambahā reached the forest of penance. The cuckoo began to sing and there was the atmosphere of spring season. Rambahā danced before Viśvāmitra. The concentration of the hermit was broken. The hermit got angry and cursed Rambahā and changed her into a rock. She entreated for redemption from the curse. The hermit told her that after ten thousand years a Brahmin named Bhūritejas would touch the rock, by which touch she would get her original form. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 64).

9) Viśvāmitra and Trīśaṅku. See under Trīśaṅku.
10) Viśvāmitra and Menakā. See under Śukuntalā and Kadaliyārābha.
11) Cursing Vidyutprabhā. Once Viśvāmitra did penance to obtain the position of Kubera, who employed the celestial maid Vidyutprabhā to obstruct the penance of Viśvāmitra. She came to the forest in which Viśvāmitra was doing penance and tried to entice the hermit by her beauty. But when she saw that her beauty did not attract the hermit, she assumed a fearful form. Seeing this form, the hermit cursed her. "You shall retain this fearful form and live like a giantess." She requested for redemption. The hermit said that when Śrīdatta, the son of Kālanemi, touched her hair she would be redeemed from the curse.

After many years Kālanemi was born in the country of Mālava as the son of a brahmin named Yajñāsena. A son named Śrīdatta was born to this Kālanemi. Once Śrīdatta happened to see this giantess in a forest and caught hold of her by the hair. Instantly she got her original form. (Kathāśaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tarāṅga 2).

12) Stealing the flesh of a dog. Once, at the end of Tretā Yuga and the beginning of Dwāpara Yuga, there was no rain for twelve years. Famine prevailed everywhere. The people were in utter want and misery. Hermits left their hermitages and wandered about. In a crowd Viśvāmitra lost his wife and children and entered a forest and travelled all alone. He entered the hut of a low-caste (Pandit) and begged for food. But none of them even talked to him. He again requested for something to eat. Nobody cared for him. The hermit fell on the veranda due to weakness.

Viśvāmitra saw in the hut some decayed flesh and intestines of a dog placed in a corner of the kitchen. He decided to steal some of it to appease his hunger. The Candraśas slept when the night advanced. But the lord of the house lay pretending to be asleep. Viśvāmitra slowly entered the kitchen, and opened the pot in which the intestines of the dog was kept. The owner of the house asked, "Who is that?" Viśvāmitra replied that he had stolen because of his hunger. The eyes of the Candrašas were filled with tears because of pity. He said:

"Dog is lower than jackal,
That is what men say,
Of all the parts of its body,
the lowest is its posterior."

Though he said so, he felt glad since he had given Viśvāmitra food. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 141).

13). Cursing the river Sarasvatī. See under Vasiṣṭha, para 2, sub-para 5.

14) Sons. Viśvāmitra had many sons. Their names are given in Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva.

15). Viśvāmitra and Rgveda. Rgveda, Mandala 5, was composed by the Viśvāmitra-family. Variations are observed in the two versions of statements about Viśvāmitra, occurring in Rgveda and the Purāṇas. The confrontations between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra occur in Rgveda also. The last four sections of Sūkta 15 of Rgveda, Maṇḍala 3, Anuvāka 4, are meant to scold Vasiṣṭha. Here Viśvāmitra curses Vasiṣṭha’s family in various ways. In the ‘Annotations of Śāyana’, mention is made that the disciples of Vasiṣṭha freed Viśvāmitra from the vow of silence, and that instantly these mantras (chants) dawned in his mind. Though the enmity between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra is seen in Rgveda, such elaborate stories as seen in the Purāṇas do not occur in Rgveda. But Viśvāmitra procured a prominent place in Rgveda because this hermit rescued Sudāsa from danger and forded him across rivers, and took Śunāṣēpha as his son. Of these two incidents the first is not given much importance in the Purāṇas. Though the second one occurs in the Purāṇas, the version is different from that of Rgveda. From this it is presumed that the storie s taken from Rgveda underwent a thorough change before they appeared in the Purāṇas.

16) Other details.
(i) The famous hermit Gālava was the son and disciple of Viśvāmitra. (For further details see under Gālava).
(ii) It was Viśvāmitra who lighted the torch for Kalmāṣāpāda in his quarrel with Vasiṣṭha. (See under Kalmāṣāpāda).
(iii) Viśvāmitra earned Brahminhood by tapas (penance). (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 40, Stanza 12).
(iv) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 51, that Viśvāmitra was present at the birth festival of Arjuna.
(v) Kalmāṣāpāda killed all the sons of Vasiṣṭha because of the persuasion of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 175, Stanza 41).
(vi) It was at a place on the bank of the river Kaúśikī that Viśvāmitra got Brahminhood. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 13).
(vii) Viśvāmitra and his sons once performed a sacrifice at the forest Utpala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 15).
(viii) Viśvāmitra once drank soma (a liquor) with Indra at a place called Kanyākubja. After that it was proclaimed that Viśvāmitra was no longer a Kṣatriya but a Brahmin. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 17).
(ix) Once Dharmadeva came in the guise of Vasiṣṭha and tested Viśvāmitra, who remained there with food on his head for hundred years. (See under Gālava, para 3)
(x) During the time of the Bhārata-battle Viśvāmitra entered the battle-field and compelled Droṇa to stop the battle forthwith. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 35).

(xiv) Once Viśvāmitra explained the secrets of duty. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 126, Stanza 35).
(xv) Viśvāmitra was one of the hermits who cursed Sāmba to give birth to an iron pestle, when the end of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty drew near. (M.B. Mauṣalā Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 15).

VIŚVĀMITRA (M). A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 131, that those who bathe in this holy place will get the status of a Brāhmaṇa.

VIŚVĀMITRĀŚRAMA. A holy place on the banks of the river Kaúśikī. The hermitage of Viśvāmitra stood in this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 22).

VIŚVĀNARA. A King. For a time this King was miserable as he was childless. But by the blessing of Śiva, Viśvānara got a son named Gṛhapati by his wife Suciṣmitā. Gṛhapati was destined to have life only up to three years. But it is mentioned in Skanda Purāṇa that within this short period Grhapati learned the whole of Sāṅgveda and obtained long life from Śiva.

VIṢVANĀTHA. A Sanskrit literary critic who lived in India in the 14th century A.D. Sāḥityadarpaṇa is the most important work of this poet of Orissa. This work on criticism in ten chapters, deals with all the aspects of a literary work. Kuvalayāśvcarita, Raghuvilāsa, Prabhāvati, Candragalā, Narasimharājavijaya etc. are the other works of this author. Most of these are not yet found. Kuvalayāśvcarita is a poetic work in Prākṛta and Raghuvilāsa is a great poetic work. Prabhāvati and Candragalā are dramas. Narasimharāja is a historic work.

VIṢVAPATI. The second son of the Agni (fire) called Manu. It is mentioned in the Vedas that this fire is the King of all the worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221 Stanza 17).

VIṢVARANDHI. The son of Prthu, a King of the Solar dynasty. He was the father of the King Candra and grandfather of Yuvanāśa. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7)

VIṢVARUCI. A Gandharva King. At the time of emperor Prthu, when the Gandharvas made the earth a cow and milked her for various things; it was the Gandharva Viṣvaruci who did the milking. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 25).

VIṢVARŪPA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14, that this giant sits in the palace of Varuṇa glorifying him.

VIṢVARŪPA II. The son of Tvaṣṭa, the son of Viṣvakarma. This Viṣvarūpa is also known as Trīśiras. (For further details see under Indra, Para 7).

VIṢVARŪPĀ. The wife of Sage Dharma. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa that from sage Dharma, a daughter named Dharmavatrā was born to Viṣvarūpā.

VIṢVASAMBHU. A fire. Rgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 2, Sūkta 24, states that this fire exists in water.

VIṢVAVASU I. A brother of Parasurāma, who had four brothers named Rumaṇvān, Suhotra, Vasu and Viṣvavasu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

VIṢVAVASU II. A Gandharva King. The following information about this king is taken from the Purāṇas.

(i) The father of this Devagandharva was Prajāpati Kaśyapa and his mother was Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 47).

(ii) Pramadvarā was born to Viṣvavasu by the celestial maid Menakā. (See under Pramadvarā).

(iii) Viṣvavasu was present at the Birth-festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 22).

(iv) Viṣvavasu was present at the Birth-festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 22).

(v) This Viṣvavasu learned from Soma, Cākṣuṣiḍīyā (the art of seeing all) and taught Citrara, a Gandharva the same art. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 43).

(vi) He was present at the Svayāṇuvara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 7).

(vii) Viṣvavasu stays in the palace of Indra glorifying him. (M.B. Sāhab Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 22).

(viii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 25, that he stays in the palace of Kubera praising him.

(x) Kabandha, the asura, who stopped Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, was the changed form of Viṣvāvasu by a curse (See under Kabandha).

(xi) It was this Viṣvāvasu who played the lute in the sacrifice performed by emperor Dilipa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 7).

(xii) Once Viṣvāvasu asked hermit Vajñāvalkya twenty-four questions. When he got satisfactory answers, the Gandharva returned to heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 310, Stanza 26).

(xiii) It was Viṣvāvasu and some other Gandharvas who took away Urvāśī from Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

(xiv) At the time of emperor Prthu, when the earth was milked, the thing the Gandharvas got were those befitting them, In the course of the milking Viṣvāvasu stood as the calf. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

VIṢVAVEDI. A minister of King Sauri. This minister wanted the King to be just. Sauri and his four brothers Khānitra, Udāvasu, Sunaya and Mahāratha were the sons of Prājāpati. The main ruler of the kingdom was Khānitra. The others were Governors of the East, West North and South divisions of the kingdom. The four brothers had a priest each named Suhotra, Kuśāvarta, Pramati and Vasiṣṭha respectively.

Viṣvavedi gathered these four priests together and created four wicked fairies and sent them against Khānitra the King. The fierce fairies attacked Khānitra. But because of his purity and cleanliness the fairies had to admit defeat. The fairies came back and attacked their creators, the four priests and Viṣvavedi who had planned the programme, and killed all the five of them. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 314).

VIṢVĀVYU. An eternal Viṣvadeva (gods concerned with offering to the Mānes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

VITĀ. A ball made of wood. The Kaurava boys played with this ball and by accident the Vīṭā fell in a well. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 17, that the teacher Droṇa recovered it from the well by shooting a number of arrows, one upon the tail of another.

VIṬAH. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of the King Manasvī and father of King Śūndu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VIṬAHUTA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 65, that this asura stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and worshipping him.

VIṬĀDHIVAJA. A King of the dynasty of Janaka. He was the son of Dharmaidhaja and the brother of Kṛta-dhaja. Viṭādhivaja had a son named Khaṇḍikya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIṬADRU. A Yādava. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, that Viṭadru was one of the seven Kings of the Yadu dynasty.

VIṬAHAVYĀ. Another name of King Ekavīra, otherwise known as Haṭhayā. (For further details see under Ekavīra).

VIṬALA. A part of Pāṭāla (underworld). (For details see under Pāṭāla).

VIṬĀNDĀVĀDA. When arguments, which do not serve, either to establish one's own points or to cut the points of the opponent, are employed in a debate, it is called Viṭāndāvāda. (M.B. Sāhab Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4).
VITARKA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the Kuru dynasty, (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 58).

VITASTA. A river famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Ṛgveda. Important rivers mentioned in Ṛgveda are, Kubhā, Sindhu, Suvāstū Vitastā, Asikni, Paruṣī, Satadru, Sarasvatī and Yamunā. These rivers were more important than the Ganges in those days. Mention is made about the Ganges only once in Ṛgveda. Perhaps the Āryans were not acquainted with the Gangangetic basin in those days. The region from the rivers Kubhā to Yamunā was Āryadeva (the country of the Āryans). The information about this river Vitastā given in Mahābhārata is given below.—

(i) The river Vitastā is the same river as Jhelum in Kashmir. The deity (goddess) of this river stays in the palace of Varuṇa and praises him. (M.B. Sañjī Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 19).

(ii) By worshipping the Devatās and the Manes after taking bath in this river, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Vājapeya. In Kashmir, Takṣaka the King of the Nāgas has a famous palace known as Vitasta. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 39).

(iii) Once four hundred horses with black ears, owned by Brahmins were caught in the current of this river and carried away. (M.B. Udīyoga Parva, Chapter 119, Stanza 8).

(iv) If anybody bathes in the waves of the river Vitastā, with vow and fasts, for seven days he would become as pure as a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 7).

(v) Once Parvatī made a speech before Śiva on the duties of women, after receiving advice from rivers. The river Vitastā was one of the rivers which advised Parvatī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 18).

VITATHA. Another name of hermit Dirghatamas. This Vitatha was the foster-son of Bharata. (For further details see under Bharata I and Dirghatamas).

VITAYA. Son of Viha, who belonged to the dynasty of Ġṛitaamada. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 62, that Vitayya was the father of King Satya.

VITI. A fire. It is ordained that the offering (Purodāṣṭa) prepared for oblation, should be put in the fire formed by the blending of the fires Gārhapatya and Āhavaniya with Dakṣināgni (a fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 25).

VITIHOтра I. A King in ancient India. Vitihotra was one of the ten sons born to Priyavara by his wife Barhiṣmati, the daughter of Viśvakarma, Agnideva, Indmājīvha, Yaññabāh, Mahārāva, Hiranyakaratā, Ghetprṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi and Kavi were the brothers of Vitihotra. (Śhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VITIHOatra II. The husband of Śabarī in her previous life. (See under Śabarī).

VITIHOatra III. The eldest of the hundred sons of Tālājango. When Tālājango was defeated by Parasūrāma, he and his men went to the Himālayas under the leadership of Vitihotra and hid themselves there. They returned when Parasūrāma had gone to Mahendragiri for penance. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 89).

VITIHOatra IV. A Kingdom of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12, that all the Kṣatriyas of this country were exterminated by Parasūrāma.

VITTADA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Sañjī Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 28).

VIVĀHA. An air (wind) which blows very speedily. This wind will be transformed to a fierce storm which will cause havoc everywhere. At the time of the great flood this Vivaha will blow away the cloud called Valāhaka in consequence of which destruction and devastation will become rampant on earth. (M.B. Sañjī Parva, Chapter 328).

VIVĀHA (MARRIAGE).

1) General information. In ancient India marriage was considered to be a sacrifice performed in accordance with social customs. Marriage was allowed to those who had completed education at the age of sixteen. (Saṁavartana). Father or teacher teaches the pupil the Vedas and Vedaṅgas. When the education is completed the teacher or father makes him sit on a seat decorated with flowers, sandalwood etc. and do Godānavrata. Then he is offered Pañcāmātra (milk, curd, butter, honey and water). This is called Saṁavartana. With this his brahmacarya ends, and he is allowed to marry and lead the life of a house-holder. Marriage is a ceremony with four secondary rites Viz, Kanyādaṇā, Saçyāyā, Vivāha, Caturthikarman. If the husband is dead, or lost, or has denounced the world, or has become a eunuch or is expelled from society, the woman is allowed to take another husband. If the husband dies, the wife should be given to the brother of the husband. If there is no brother she could accept anybody whom she likes.

2) Eight kinds of marriages. The woman and man should not be of the same Gotra (family). One could marry a girl who is above seven generations on the paternal line and above five generations on the maternal line. Eight types of marriages allowed in Manusmṛtu, Chapter 3, are given below:

(i) Brāhma. A man of good qualities and good family is asked to come and receive the damsel. This is Brāhma. The radiance of this marriage will give the man prosperity.

(ii) Ārta. After getting a couple of cows from the bridegroom the bride is given to him.

(iii) Prājapatyā. The virgin is given to the man, who had requested for her hand as a duty.

(iv) Daiva. The virgin is offered to the master who is engaged in performing a sacrifice.

(v) Gāndharva. Marriage between a man and a woman with equal love on either part.

(vi) Āśura. Giving money in return for the damsel and marrying her. This type is mean.

(vii) Rāksasa. Carrying the damsel away by fight or force.

(viii) Paścāa. Marrying a damsel when she is sleeping or lying unconscious.

VIVARDHANA. A King in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sañjī Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21, that this King was a prominent member of the assembly of Yudhishtira.
VIVASVĀN I. The Sun.

1) General information. Sūrya (Sun) has a large number of synonyms. But prominence is given to two of them, Mārtanda and Vivasvān in the Purāṇas. Twelve devas were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. As these twelve were the sons of Aditi they were called Ādityas, the Devādāśādityas (the twelve Ādityas) are Viṣṇu, Śakra, Arjuna, Dvātā, Tvaṣṭā, Puṣā Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aṃśu and Bhagā. These twelve Ādityas were, in the previous Manvantara (Age of Manu) of Manu Cākṣuṣa, twelve Devas called the Tūṣitas. When the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara came to an end and the Vaivasvata Manvantara was about to begin, the twelve Tūṣitas met together and after a consultation, they took birth as the sons of Aditi. In this birth they were known by the name Devādāśādityas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa I, Chapter 15).

2) The name Mārtanda. As Aditi was pregnant, Candra went to the hermitage asking for alms. Due to her difficulties of pregnancy Aditi was not in a position to rise up instantly and greet the visitor. Candra thought that it was due to disrespect. So he cursed her. Let the child in your womb die.” At this Aditi became miserable. Kaśyapa saw her crying incessantly and asked for the cause. Aditi told him all that had happened. Kaśyapa blessed her and said that the infant would not die. Thus the child which was lying dead in the womb came to life again. As the ‘āṇḍa’ (egg-embryo) of Vivasvān went mṛta (died) by the curse of Candra, he came to be called Mārtanda (he who has aṇḍa which has become mṛta). When the child was born he was given the name Vivasvān.

3) Family life. Vivasvān married Sanjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. The first child born to Vivasvān by Sanjñā was Vaivasvata Manu. The Sūrya (Solar) dynasty begins from this Vaivasvata Manu. Sanjñā again gave birth to two children Yama and Yamī. Then finding it difficult to bear the fierce brightness of the sun Sanjñā gave her place to her maid Chāyā otherwise called Savarṇā, and went to the house of her father. Viśvakarmā did not like this action on the part of his daughter. So Sanjñā took the form of a mare and went to the pastures of North Kuru. Thinking Chāyā to be his wife Sanjñā, Vivasvān went to bed with her. She conceived and gave birth to two sons and a daughter. The sons were named Sāvarṇī and Śani and the daughter was named Tapatī. Chāyā loved her own children more. The children of Sanjñā were grieved at this. Yama once lifted his leg to kick her. “Let that leg be broken.” Chāyā cursed him. The miserable Yama ran to his father and said. “Father, this mother hates us and loves Sāvarṇī and Śani more. It is true that I lifted up my leg. But my leg did not touch mother’s head. Father, I request you to pardon the wrong I have done because of my ignorance. Have pity on me and tell me how to save my leg from breaking.” Vivasvān said to Yama that his leg would not be broken, but because of the curse worms would bite his leg. Vivasvān understood that Chāyā was not the real mother. He went to Viśvakarmā. Viśvakarmā put Vivasvān on his turning machine and by turning lessened his brightness. Vivasvān who was made more handsome by turning, found out his wife Sanjñā, and approached her. But thinking him to be somebody else she moved away from him. In the meanwhile two male persons were born from the nostrils of Sanjñā. There is another story that these two persons were the Āśvinidevas. Vivasvān and Sanjñā came home. As a retribution for the wrong he had done, Yama ruled over his subjects justly and earned the name Dharma. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 21; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Chapter 47; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 171).

4) Some details about Vivasvān. (i) In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, the 108 names of Vivasvān are given. (ii) Vivasvān lived in this world and defeated all his enemies. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 313, Stanza 19). (iii) Vivasvān performed sacrifice in strict accordance with the instructions given in the Vedas and gave as Dakṣinā (gift) to the priest, Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the southern quarter. From that day onwards the south got the name Dakṣinādīśa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Stanza 1). (iv) In days of yore Mahāviṃśa advised Vivasvān “Anāvarsatākarma-yoga”. Vivasvān advised this art to his son Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 1). (v) Vivasvān is included among the twenty-eight Prajāpatis. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 36). (vi) He learned from Mahāviṃśa Sāvatadharma and taught his son Vaivasvata Manu the same in Tretāyuga. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 50). (vii) The Āsvinidevas, Nāsaya and Dasra, are the sons of Vivasvān. They were born through the nose of his wife Sanjñā. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 17).

VIVASVĀN II. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 12, that this asura was killed by Garuḍa.

VIVASVĀN III. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

VIVASVĀN IV. The first human being who performed sacrifice. This Vivasvān is considered to be the father of Manu and Yama. (Ṛgveda 8. 52; 10; 14, 16). In Taṇīṭīrvasaniḥīta, mention is made that people of the earth are the children of this Vivasvān. (Taṇīṭīrva Samhitā, 5.5.6).

VIVIDA. An asura who was the follower of Kaṁsa. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that the asuras Pralambaka, Cānūra, Triṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Āriṣṭaka, Keśi, Dhenuka, Agha, Vivida and some others had been the followers of Kaṁsa who caused havoc among the people.

VIVIKTA. A king of Kuśadvípa. He was the son of Hiranyaretas. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VIVIMŚA. The son of king Viṁśa of the Solar dynasty. Viṁśa had fifteen sons beginning with Khaņitmetra. (M.B. Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 4).

VIVIMŚATI. A son of Dhārtarāṣṭra. The following information about him is given in Mahābhārata. (i) This prince was present at the Svayamvāra marriage of Draupadī. (ii) He was caught hold of and bound by the Gandharvas in Dvaitavana (a forest). (See under Ghoṣayatrā). (iii) In the battle between the Viṃśa and the Kauravas following the stealing of cows, this Viṃśatī, was defeated by Arjuna. He ran away from the battle-field. (M.B. Viṁśa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 43).
VIVINDHYA An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Ch. 16, Stanza 22, that this asura fought with Carudesā, the son of Rukmīni and was killed.

VIVITSU. One of the hundred sons of Dīrgharśtra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Kārṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12).

VIYAMA. One of the three sons of the hermit Sātāṅgā. He killed Sudeva, the commander of the army of Ambāriṣa and he also was killed in a battle. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Dākṣināyata Pāṭha, Chapter 98).

VIYATI. A son of Nahuṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

VRAJĀ. A king born in the family of Manu Svāyambhuva. He was the son of Havirṛdahā. Six sons named Pracīnabarhis, Sukra, Gayā, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina, were born to Havirṛdahā by his wife Diśaṇā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VRAJĀNA. A king born to emperor Amajīdhā by his wife Kṛṣṇī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 31, that he was the brother of Jahnū and Rūpīṇa.

VRAJĪRAVĀN. (VRJINAVĀN). A king of the Yadu clan. He was the son of Kṛṣṇuḥ and father of Kuśākūra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VRAṬĀ. Controls ordained by Vedic Śaṁhitās are called Vratas. It is known as tapas (penance) also. Vratas are Avadama etc. When it involves mortifications of the body (tapas) it is called tapas or penance. Controlling the organs of sense is called niyama (control). Vratas, fast and restraining or control are always good. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 175).

VRDDHAṆGARGYA. An ancient hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 77, that this hermit had conversed with the Manes about offerings made to them.

VRDDHAṆKANYĀ. Daughter of the hermit named Kunigarga. (For further details see under Kunigarga).

VRDDHAṆKĀTRA I. The father of Jayadratha, the king of Sindhu. (See under Jayadratha I).

VRDDHAṆKĀTRA II. A king born in the Puru dynasty. He favoured the Pāṇḍavas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 200, Stanza 73, that in the Bhārata battle, Aśvathāmā killed him.

VRDDHAṆKĀTRA III. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. This king took the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle and was killed by Bālhika. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 49).

VRDDHAṆKEMĀ. The king of the country Trigarta. He was the father of Suśarmā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

VRDDHAṆSĀMĀ. One of the five sons, born to the king Ayus by his wife Svarbhāṇu. The remaining four sons were Nahuṣa, Raṇi, Gayā and Anenas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VRDDHIKA. A kind of goblin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 16, that once the semen of Śiva fell scattered over the trees and that these gobins were born from that. Human flesh is the food of these gobins. It is said those who want children need only worship these Vṛddhikās.

VRIDHRAUNĪKA PARVA. A sub-section of Vana Parva, comprising Chapters 259 to 261.

VRAJĀ. A hermit who was born in the family of emperor Prthu. Antardhāna and Vādī were the two sons of Prthu. A son named Havirṛdahā was born to Antar-dhāna by his wife Diśaṇā. Diśaṇā who was born in the family of Agni, became the wife of Havirṛdāna, Pracīnabarhis, Sukra, Gayā, Kṛṣṇa, Vṛja and Ajīna were the six sons of Havirṛdahā by Diśaṇā. Of these, Pracīnabarhis became a great Prajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anāśa 1, Chapter 14).

VRJINIVĀN. The son of Kṛṣṇa who was born in the family of Manu. He was the father of hermit Uṣaṅgu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 23).

VRKA I. A son born to Bhṛṣṭakeṭu, the king of Kekaya by his wife Dūrvā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VRKA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, born by his wife Mitra- vīndā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VRKA III. An asura. This asura wanted to bring the Devas under his control. "How to achieve it? The only way is to please one of the three god-heads." The asura saw Parvati and asked him which of the three god-heads could easily be pleased. Nārada replied, that it was Śiva. Vṛka resolved to please Śiva and began to do penance. He cut each of his organs and offered it in the fire as oblation. At last when Vṛka was beginning to cut off his head, he offered this to Śiva in the fire, Śiva saw his appearance, and asked him what his wish was. The boon he requested for, was that any one whose head he touched with his finger should die instantly. Śiva granted that boon. The asura decided to try the boon, on the giver himself first. Terrified at this, Śiva began to run. The asura chased him. At last Śiva sought protection from Viṣṇu. Assuming the form of a boy, Mahāviṣṇu stood on the way and stopped Vṛka, who was running after Śiva. The boy asked him why he was running. The asura told the boy everything. Then the boy laughed and said "Oh! Asura! What Śiva said was a lie. He has no divine power now. He was making fun of you. Not an ant would die by the touch of your fingers. You just try on your head and see for yourself." Hearing this the asura became dejected. He thought what the boy said was true. The poor creature touched his own head with his finger. The moment he touched his head, he fell down dead. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10). This story has similarity with that of Bhasmāśura. (See under Bhasmāśura).

VRKA IV. A king. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10, that this king had been present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Kārṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 16, that this king was killed by a mountain King in the battle of Bhārata.

VRKA V. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by the teacher Drona in the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 16).

VRKA VI. An ancient King who was a pure vegetarian. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 63).

VRKA VII. One of the sons born to Śūra by his wife Mārīṣā. Vṛka married Dūrvākṣi. Two sons named Takṣa and Puṣkara were born to the couple. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

VRKALA. A grandson of Druva who was the son of Uttanapāda. Two sons named Śiṣṭa and Bhavya were born to Druva by his wife Śambhū. Suchāyā, the wife of Śīti gave birth to five sinless sons named Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Artha 1, Chapter 13).

VṛKATEJAS. A brother of Vṛkala. (See under Vṛkala).

VṛKṢA (S). (TREES). It is stated in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14, Stanza 29, as follows about the origin of Vṛksa (trees).

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Analā, the daughter of Dakṣa. Trees yielding good fruits were given birth to by Analā.

VṛKSAPRAṬIŚṬHĀ. The ancient Indians believed that consecration of Trees and gardens (parks) were means of remission of sins and attainment of heaven. As the consecration of trees is a divine ritual it has to be performed as ordained in the Vedas. The rites are given below:

As the first item of the consecration ceremony of a tree, besmear it with all kinds of medicinal herbs, and adorn it with flour and flower garlands and make it wear good clothes. Then make on it perforations for the ears with golden needle, and anoint ointment for eyes with golden wire. Place on the dais prepared at the foot of each tree, seven fruits and pots (Kalaśas) and make invocations. After this, offerings and sacrifices to Indra and the other gods should be given. Again invocation should be made with burnt offerings to Vanaspati. From the middle of the trees alms of cows should be given. Brahmins should bathe the trees with pots placed on the dais, reciting spells and incantations of anointment, and of Kg, Yajur and Sāma Vedas along with instrumental music. The owner of the trees should be given bathing water by himself. Then the owner should give cows, lands, ornaments and clothes as gift.

After having done so much, food with milk should be given for four days and burnt offerings should be made with gingly etc. and butea. The gift to the priest should be double the gifts given to others. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 70).

VṛKSASAVASI. A Yakṣa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that this Yakṣa lives in the palace of Kubera.

VṛKSAYURVEDA. The name Vṛksayurveda is used for the conventional rules about planting trees near dwelling places. According to Vṛksayurveda it is good to plant Iti (wave-leaved fig-tree) on the North side of the house. Ficus Indica (banyan) should be planted on the east. Mango tree on the south and Ficus Religiosa (banyan) on the west of the house. Thorny trees should grow up by themselves on the south side of the house. Garden should be close to the house. Śvāt, Hasta, Rohini, Śravaṇa and Mūla are considered to be good stars for planting trees. Stars good for taking trees, across river or in vehicle and to take down into ponds, are Hasta, Maghā, Ardrā, Āśvini, Puṣyam and Jyeṣṭhā. The stars mentioned above are good for planting Neem tree, Jonesia Asoca, Calophyllum, Mimosarishra, Acacia Priyari, Syzygium, Mimusops and pomegranate tree. The distance between trees should be twenty rods. This distance is the best. Sixteen rods is medium. But it should never be less than twelve rods. If the tree does not bear fruit, the stem should be examined by cutting with a knife. Then mix powdered vermiculise seeds with ghee and smear it on the cut. Then water the tree. If fruits are destroyed before they ripen, mix the powders of horse-grain, black-grain, green-grain, barley and sesam with ghee and smear the tree and water it. Watering the tree with water and ghee will make the tree flower and yield fruits quickly. Mix powdered dung of sheep, powdered barley, sesam, and cow’s flesh with water and keep it for seven days. Then water the tree with this water. This will make any tree yield more fruits and flowers. Watering the trees with fish-water will make them yield fruits more quickly. Mixture of Vermiculise seed, fish and rice is a good manure. This manure is a good remedy for all diseases of trees. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 281).

VṛNDA I. Wife of the asura named Jalandhara. (See under Maṣāśiva).

VṛNDA II. See under Svarṇā.

VṛNĐARAKA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhrṣṭarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata. Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 33, that he was killed by Bhima sena in the battle of Bhārata.

VṛNĐARAKA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. Abhimanyu killed this warrior. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 12).

VṛṣA I. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

VṛṣA II. An asura (demon). He is included among those who ruled over this earth in days of old. (M.B. Śánti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 51).

VṛṣA III. A King of the family of Bharata who was the son of Sakuntalā. It is stated that he had a brother called Durmarṣaṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VṛṣA IV. An incarnation of Viṣṇu in the form of an ox. The following is a story that occurs in Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudasarītha, about this incarnation.

When the Devas and the Asuras united together and churned the sea of milk, ever so many noble objects rose up to the surface of the sea. Several beautiful damsels also came up. Viṣṇu grew amorous of them and thus thousands of sons were born by them. These sons who were born in the Pāṭalā (Nether world), by and by, came up and began to do harm to the dwellers of the earth. At this time Śiva took the incarnation in the form of an ox to study the situation properly. In this disguise Śiva entered Pāṭalā and took by stealth the Sudarśana (the weapon of Viṣṇu) and drove him to heaven. When Viṣṇu had gone from Pāṭalā, he had advised his sons to stay in Pāṭalā. Vṛṣa who came to know of this, cursed them:— “Any man, other than the peaceful hermits and Dānavas (asuras) who are born from my portion, who enters Pāṭalā shall die.” From that day onwards, the world of Pāṭalā became a forbidden place for men.

VṛṣA V. One of the sons of Kārtavirya-jūra. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, that this prince escaped from the Kṣatriya extermination of Parasurāma.

Vṛṣa. An Indian river famous in the Purāṇas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 35).

VṛṣABHA I. Son of Subala, the King of Gāndhāra. He was the brother of Śakuni. In the battle of Bhārata, this Vṛṣabha, with his five brothers, attacked Irāvān, who killed the five brothers. Vṛṣabha alone escaped death. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 33).

VṛṣABHA II. An asura. Ārīṣṭa was another name of this asura (See under Ārīṣṭa).
Vṛṣabha III. A Vṛṣa King who was the son of Anamitra. This Vṛṣabha married Jayanti, the daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Matsya Purāṇa, 45, 25-26).

Vṛṣabha IV. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

Vṛṣabhanu. A King. When Vṛṣabhanu was cleaning the ground for performing sacrifice, once, he got a girl named Rādham. He brought her up as his own daughter (Padma: Brahma: 7). In Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, Vṛṣabhanu is mentioned as the father of Rādha.

Vṛṣabhekṣaṇa. Another name of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

Vṛṣadamsa. A mountain near the Mandara mountain. Arjuna once dreamt that he travelled to the world of Śiva with Śri Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 33, that in this dream travel they visited this mountain Vṛṣadaṁśa also.

Vṛṣadarbha I.

1) General information. An ancient saintly King in Bhārata. This King Vṛṣadarbha and another King named Seduka were righteous as well as experts in wielding main and subordinate weapons. After completing the education of Vedas, a brahmin once approaching King Seduka and begged as alms some horses for giving gift to his teacher. The brahmin said, “It is my wish that you will give me these horses as alms.” Seduka said that he had not enough wealth or horses to give the teacher's gift. Seduka sent the Brahmin to Vṛṣadarbha. The Brahmin went to Vṛṣadarbha and begged as alms a thousand horses. The King whipped the Brahmin. He asked the King why he was punished as he had done no wrong. The King asked the Brahmin who was beginning to curse. How Brahmin! Whom are you about to curse? Him who has not given you alms or another Brahmin? The brahmin said, “O, King I am sent here by Seduka. I begged as he had instructed.”

   The King said, “This evening I shall give you all the tax-collection of this day. You who have been whipped ought not to be sent empty-handed.” Accordingly the whole of the tax-collection of that day was given to the Brahmin. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 29, that Vṛṣadarbha stays in the palace of Yama glorifying him.

(ii) When he was reigning, he made a law that all his subjects should give gold and silver as alms to Brahmans (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 3).

Vṛṣadarbha II. Another name of Uṣīnara the King of Kāśī. (See under Uṣīnara).

Vṛṣārdarbhī I. A King of Kāśī. Vṛṣārdarbhī who was the son of Vṛṣadarbha, was known by the name Yuvanāśva also. He gave as alms, various kinds of jewels, women, beautiful houses etc. and entered heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Stanza 24).

Vṛṣārdarbhi II. A famous son of Śibi. The following is a story given in Mahābhārata about this Vṛṣārdarbhi.

   Once the seven hermits started going round the earth. At this time Vṛṣārdarbhi had been performing a sacrifice. Vṛṣārdarbhi invoked the seven hermits and gave them his son as a gift. The child died before long. As famine was prevailing everywhere the hermits were weak and worn out by hunger. They wished to eat the flesh of the child. Vṛṣārdarbhi tried to dissuade the hermits from this beastly action in vain. At last the angry King created a wicked fairy to kill the hermits. Though the fairy attacked the hermits, Indra, who had lived with the seven hermits killed the fairy. Vṛṣārdarbhi was not at all behind his father Śibi in liberality. There are various stories in Mahābhārata to illustrate this.

Vṛṣadarpa. A son of emperor Śibi. He had three brothers named Bhadra, Susvira and Kekaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Vṛṣadhvaikajī. A King born in the line of Pravīra. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

Vṛṣadhvaikajī. See under Sītā, Parā 1.

Vṛṣāgīrī. A royal hermit spoken of in Rgveda. Rṛāśva was the son of this hermit. (See under Vṛṣāśva).

Vṛṣaka I. Son of Subala the King of Gāndhāra. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 5). He was present at the Rājaśṭāya sacrifice (royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 7).

(ii) He was a prominent archer of the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 1).

(iii) In the battle of Bhārata this Vṛṣaka was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 2).

(iv) Vṛṣaka also was there among those brave men of the Kuru family who appeared on the surface of the Gangetic water by the invocation of Vyāsa. (M.B. Āṣramavāśika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 12).

Vṛṣaka II. A Kāliṅga prince. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 33, that he also was killed in the battle of Bhārata.

Vṛṣakapi I. One of the eleven Rudras. The eleven Rudras are Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣakapi, Śambhu, Kapardī, Rāivata, Mṛgavānāda, Sarp and Kapāli. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18). (See under Īśāna rudras).

Vṛṣakapi II. Another name of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 342).

Vṛṣakapi III. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 28, that with so many other hermits, he also attended the sacrifice performed by the gods.

Vṛṣaketu. One of the sons of Karna. As he was following the sacrificial horse of Yudhiṣṭhira as its protector, he was killed by Bahhruvāhana. (Jaimini Bhārata, Āsvamedha Parva, 30).

Vṛṣakrāthā. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 33, that this warrior stood in the heart of the Garuḍa-disposition of the army formed by Droṇa.

Vṛṣalākṣa. A King born in the line of Bharata, the son of Duśyanta. He was the son of Caturanga and the grandson of Romapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Vṛṣāmitra. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 24, that this hermit honoured and loved Yudhiṣṭhira.

Vṛṣānaśva. A King praised in Rgveda. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala I, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51, that once Indra took birth as the daughter of this King under the name Menā.

Vṛṣāṇḍa. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that this asura had once ruled over the earth and that because of the attacks of Kāla, he had to leave the earth.

Vṛṣāṇkū. An ancient hermit. When Śrī Rāma returned from his forest life, the hermits such as Vṛṣāṇkū, Kaviṣa, Dhuûmya, Raudreya, Nārada, Vāmadeva, Saurabhi, Aṣṭāvakra, Śrīṣuka, Bṛgū, Lomaśa and Maudgala, from the west came and bowed before him. (Uttara Ramāyaṇa).

Vṛṣāparvā I. A noble Asura. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) Vṛṣāparvā was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 24).

(ii) He took rebirth in the earth as King Dirghaprajñā. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 67, Stanza 15).

(iii) He had a daughter named Śarmīṣṭhā. (See under Devayāni).

Vṛṣāparvā II. An ancient royal hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 15, that an ethereal voice was heard by the Pāṇḍavas, who were living in the forest, that they should visit this royal hermit. Accordingly the Pāṇḍavas visited the hermit and he received them cordially. This King rendered them various helps such as giving them directions for going through the forests. It is stated in Vana Parva, Chapter 177, that on the return journey also the Pāṇḍavas entered the hermitage of this hermit and received hospitality.

Vṛṣāparasthagiri. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 3, that the Pāṇḍavas visited this holy place during their life in the forest.

Vṛṣasena I. A son of Kaṇḍa. The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about him.

(i) Vṛṣasena was a famous warrior in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23).

(ii) In the Bhārata-battle he confronted the prominent archers such as Saṭānika, Pāṇḍya, Abhimanyu, Arjuna, Dragada, Śaṭyaki, Nakula and others. (M.B. Droṇa Parva).

(iii) In the fight with Arjuna, he was killed. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35).

(iv) Among the brave souls of the Kurus who were invited to the surface of the river Gaṅgā by Vṛṣa, Vṛṣasena also was present. (M.B. Āśramaśākṣa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 10).

Vṛṣasena II. A King who shines in the council of Yama. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 13, that this King glorifies Yama.

Vṛṣasena III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23, about a proud and honoured Vṛṣasena who attended the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

Vṛṣṇi. A famous King of the Yadu dynasty.

2) Other details.

(i) The birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was in the family of Vṛṣṇi. (See the genealogy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

(ii) The line of Kings beginning with Vṛṣṇi is called the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Stanza 18).

(iii) Thinking that the jewel Śyamantaka had been stolen by Kṛṣṇa himself, Vṛṣṇi took a hostile mentality towards Kṛṣṇa. (Brahmachanda Purāṇa, 3:71:1).

(iv) Vṛṣṇi had two wives named Gāndhārī and Mādri. Five sons were born to him by Mādri. (Vāyu : 94:14; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 211; 1-2; 5 : 8).

Vṛtra (Vṛtrāsura). A mighty and fierce asura.

1) Reason for his birth. Vṛtra was the rebirth of emperor Citraketu. Citraketu and his wife Kṛtadyuti prayed to Aṅgiras, as a result of which a son was born to them. That son died in his infancy. But Aṅgiras brought him to life again. Brahmā and Nārada taught Citraketu theosophy. Citraketu sat in contemplation for eight days and changing himself to a Gandharva he flew through the sky. As he was flying, he saw Pārvatī sitting on the thigh of Śiva and laughed aloud. Knowing this Pārvatī cursed him to become an asura. Vṛtrāsura was the rebirth of the emperor according to this curse. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

2) Birth. Two stories are mentioned about the birth of Vṛtrāsura. One story is that Kaśyapa created him from fire. The other story is that Vṛtra was the son of Tvaṣṭā. Both are given below:

(i) Hiranyakaśipu was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Danu. Mahāvisūṇa killed him on being requested by the Devas. Danu was grieved at the death of her son. So Kaśyapa gave her another son. He was Vāla or Bala. Indra killed him with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Kaśyapa got angry and plucking a hair from his matted hair, made a burnt offering of it, saying "Let a son who would be the killer of Indra be born." Immediately a huge giant, as black as antimony with yellow eyes was born from the fire. That asura, clad in the hide of antelope with sword in hand, opening his mouth, from which two huge tusks protruded, very wide, and shining with radiance cried out in a voice of thunder, "Oh ! Sage ! Order me, what am I to do ?" Kaśyapa ordered him to kill Indra. He named the monster Vṛtra. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhumī Khāṇḍa, Chapter 23).

(ii) It was Prajāpati Tvaṣṭā who created Vṛtra to kill Indra. He had sufficient reasons for it. From the very beginning Indra and Tvaṣṭā were enemies. Tvaṣṭā got a son named Triśiras otherwise called Viśvarūpa, for the purpose of killing Indra. This Viśvarūpa had three heads. One was meant for drinking Surā (a liquor), the second for drinking Soma (liquor) and the third for eating food. Viśvarūpa was a Brahmāna. Still, as his mother was an asura, he loved the asuras and mingled with them. Indra knew about the behaviour of Viśvarūpa. He concluded that it was blasphemy and wickedness. Indra who was afraid of Viśvarūpa, got angry and cut off his heads. Of the heads of Viśvarūpa, that which drank Soma became a bird called Kapiñja, that which drank Surā became a bird called Kalapiṅga, and that which ate food became the bird Titirī (partridge). Brahmatātā (the sin of killing Brahmin) took shape and went against Indra. Though Indra could have destroyed it, he joined his hands and received it. At the end of the year he cut it into four pieces and divided them among earth, water, tree and woman. The earth received it with the boon that depressions will be filled. That sin is now seen as salt beds. Water got it with the boon, "Will be swollen when joined". That sin is foam and bubbles. The tree got it with the boon, "Will not die even if cut into pieces". That sin is the sap of the tree. Women got it with the boon, "Amour will last without break". That sin is the menstruation of women.

When Tvaṣṭā heard that his righteous son was killed by Indra unreasonably, he became angry and began to make burnt offerings with spells and incantations of Aṣṭarvaveda. This offering continued for eight days. On the eighth day at night, an extremely bright male person arose from the fire pit. He rose higher and higher as the flame of fire. Then that figure of power asked Tvaṣṭā, "Father! what is my name? What have I to do for you? What is the reason for your grief?" He said that he was prepared to drink up the ocean dry or smash the mountains, or prevent the sun and the moon from moving or any such thing for the sake of his father. The father ordered him to kill Indra. From that day onwards Vṛtra got ready to kill Indra. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

3) The slaughter of Vṛtrāṣura. Hearing about the prowess, strength, and the martial radiance of Vṛtrāṣura, Indra grew afraid of him and began to think about means and ways to kill him. Indra called the Saptarṣī (seven hermits) and sent them to Vṛtra. His intention was to make a treaty. The seven hermits approached Vṛtra and requested him to make a treaty with Indra, and told him that Indra was prepared to give half of the position of Indra.

Vṛtra: —Look hermits! If Indra honestly desires to be in peace with me, I have no objection. But what is the surety that Indra will not deceive me?

Hermits: —If Indra proves to be false and deliberately deceives you, he has agreed to bear the sin of Brahmanatya incurred, by himself.

Vṛtra agreed to make a treaty on this condition. The hermits took Vṛtra to the palace of Indra. Seeing Vṛtrāṣura who was coming to be friends with him Indra rose from his royal chair and offered half of it to Vṛtra. Both embraced each other and vowed that they would be brothers born from the same womb.

Thus having engaged Vṛtra in a treaty deceitfully, Indra waited for an opportunity to kill Vṛtra. Once Indra sent Rambha to entice Vṛtra. "Look, beautiful girl! Make Vṛtra senseless somehow that I may kill him." Hearing this, with a beautiful laugh, Rambha went with her maids to the Park Nandana and waited for Vṛtrāṣura. At this time Vṛtra, with some Dānava friends, came to the park Nandana for entertainment. Indra walked beside watching for the opportunity to kill him. Without fearing any danger from Indra, Vṛtra walked through the park, seeing the celestial maids singing and dancing and playing various games in the garden, and they reached a corner where Rambha had been singing sweet songs and swinging with her maids. This sight made Vṛtra amorous. He approached Rambha and prayed to her to become his wife. Under that sandalwood tree Rambha asked him, "Oh handsome youth! I am Rambha. I came here with my maids to play. Who are you, my Lord?"

Vṛtra: "Beautiful maid! I am the son of Kaśyapa and the friend of Indra. I enjoy half the position of Indra. If Vṛtra, have brought the three worlds under my control. I shall be complete in all aspects, if I could marry you."

Rambha agreed to the marriage on condition that Vṛtra would not gainsay her in anything. They engaged in amorous plays and Rambha made the Brahmin drink liquor in large quantities and he became unconscious. Indra took this opportunity and sent his thunderbolt which took away the life of Vṛtra. Instantly Indra became afflicted with sins such as Brahmanatya et al. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikāhāṇḍa, Chapters 23 and 24).

4) Other details.
(i) Indra washed away the sin of Brahmanatya incurred by killing Vṛtra, at the place called Karuṣa. (See under Aṅgāmālada).
(ii) It was at the time of the killing of Vṛtra by Indra, that Jātāyu and Saṃpāti made bets and flew up to the region of the Sun. (Vājmīki Rāmāyana, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 58, Stanza 4).
(iii) Mention about the conflict between Indra and Vṛtrāṣura occurs in various places in the Rgveda. Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 80 refers to the battle between Indra and Vṛtra. In many other Sūktas songs about Indra and Vṛtra occur.
(iv) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33, that Vṛtra was the son born to Prajāpāti Kaśyapa by his wife Danu.
(v) It was Vṛtrāṣura who took rebirth later as King Manimān (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 44).
(vi) The thunderbolt of Indra hit on the head of Vṛtrāṣura and was broken into ten big pieces and hundred small pieces. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 50).
(vii) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 48, that Vṛtrāṣura was born from the fire of Sorcery and witchcraft of Tvaṣṭā.
(viii) In the fight between Indra and Vṛtra, Indra was swallowed by Vṛtra. But Indra contracted the members of his body and became smaller and smaller and came out of Vṛtra's belly. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 52).
(ix) Once the teacher-priest Śūkra asked Vṛtra certain questions to all of which Vṛtra gave proper answers. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 279, Stanza 13).
(x) Vṛtra entered heaven after his death. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 180, Stanza 57).
(xi) Everybody was terrified because the fight of Indra with Vṛtra prolonged without any termination. At last Vṛtra gaped and taking this opportunity, Indra sent his weapon the thunderbolt into the mouth of Vṛtra. Thus Vṛtra met with death. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 15; Udyoga Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 30; Sānti Parva, Chapter 232, Stanza 9; Sānti Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 59).
(xii) In Mahābhārata, the words, Asura, Asurasreṣṭha, Asuraqeta, Daitya, Daityapati, Daityendra, Dānava, Dānavaṇḍa, Ditiṣa, Surārya, Tvāṣṭar, Viśvātmā etc. are used as synonyms of Vṛtra.

VṛTTA. A nāga (serpent) born to Prajāpāti Kaśyapa by his wife Kadru. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 10).

VYĀDH. Vyādhi, Jarā, Skā, Trṣṇā and Krodhā, were the daughters of Mṛtyu (Death). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

Vyāghrabhāta. The minister of King Śrīdatta, described in Kathāsārītāgama. Besides Vyāghrabhāta, he had three more ministers named Mahābāla, Upendrabala and Nīghrūraka.

Vyāghrabhātattā I. A King who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. This King who was a great fighter on the chariot, fought with the teacher Droṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 32, that he was killed by Droṇa.

Vyāghrabhātattā II. A prince of the country of Magadha. He took the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle of bāhārata by Śāyāki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 31).

Vyāghraketu. A warrior of Pāncāla, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. Kaṇḍa wounded him in the battle of bāhārata. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 44).

Vyāghrākṣa. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Śāya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 59).

Vyāghrāpaḍā. An ancient hermit. He was the father of Upamanyu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 45).

Vyālīmukha. An asura who fought against Subrahmanya. In the fight with Subrahmanya this asura was killed. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

Vyāsā. The sage Vyāsa who is the author of the Mahābhārata. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśu in the following order: Brahmā-Vasiṣṭha-Śakti-Parāśara-Vyāsa. 2) Birth. Vyāsa was born to hermit Parāśara by a fisherwoman named Kāli. His name when he was a child was Kṛṣṇa. As his birth took place in an island (Dvīpa) he got the name Kṛṣnadvāpāyana. After dividing the Vedas he got the name Vedavyāsa. He is the composer of Mahābhārata, one of the greatest books in world-literature. The births of great men, generally will be wonderful. Behind the birth of Vyāsa also there is a wonderful story.

As has already been mentioned, Kāli, a fisherwoman was the mother of Vyāsa. There is a story about this Kāli also. When king Vasu of Cedi went to the forest for hunting, he saw the coition of animals and he had seminal discharge. The king sent that semen to his queen. But on the way it fell in the river Kālindī and was eaten by a fish. This fish was a celestial maid named Adrikā transformed to fish by a curse. The fish conceived and got into the net of a fisherman, who lived on the banks of Kālindī. When this fish was cut open a male and a female infant were seen inside. The male child was given to the king himself. The fisherman brought up the girl naming her Kāli. As the girl had the gandha (smell) of matsya (fish), she got the name 'Matsya-gandhā', also. This fisherman was also a ferryman. Kāli used to help her father in ferrying people across the river Kālindī. She grew up and became a young woman.

Once the hermit Parāśara came by that way to go to the other side of the river. At that time, the fisherman who has been taking people across the river, was sitting on the bank of the river and having his meals. As soon as Parāśara came, the innocent fisherman—the foster-father of Matsyagandhā—called her, who was standing close by and asked her to take the hermit across the river. The hermit got into the boat, Matsyagandhā began to row the boat. The beauty of the damsel sitting in front of him and the little waves of the river, combined together had the effect of arousing passion in the hermit. He became sexually excited and sat close to her. Discerning his intention she moved away from him and prayed to him humbly not to violate her chastity. She repeated her prayer. The hermit Parāśara created an artificial fog around the boat. The smell of fish was gone from her and the fragrance of Musk took its place. The hermit created an artificial island in the middle of the river. They got down on the island and acted a love drama. She became pregnant. Parāśara said to her: "Beautiful girl! Even after your confinement you shall remain a virgin. A son, who will be a portion of Viśu, a man of purity, famous throughout the three worlds, highly learned, the teacher-priest of the whole world, shall be born to you. He will divide the Vedas and will be exalted by the people of the world."

After this the great hermit took his bath in Yamunā and went away. The pregnancy of Kāli was completed instantly and she gave birth to a very handsome boy in that island of Yamunā. As soon as he was born, he grew up and became a hermit radiant with devotion and assuming a vow of purity and abstinence he said to his mother, "Mother! You can go anywhere, as you please. You need have no worry on my account. I am about to go for penance. When anything unpleasant happens to you, just think of me. The moment you wish to see me, I will be there by you. I wish you a happy life. I am going," Saying thus the brave boy walked away. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapters 60 to 63).

3) Spiritual life.
   i) Introduction. Two sides, the spiritual as well as the material, are seen in the life of Vyāsa. It was after the marriage of Sāntanu, a king of the Lunar dynasty, with his mother Kāli, otherwise known as Satyavatī, that Vyāsa came into contact with Hastināpura. Participating in all the vicissitudes of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas was the worldly side of the life of Vyāsa. But the major part of his life was spent in living as a hermit in his hermitage in the forest with a large group of disciples; teaching them the Vedas. A small description of that spiritual life is given below:
   ii) In the forest. We do not see Kṛṣṇadvāpāyana, who had grown up to a youth at the time of his birth, for many years after his departure, bidding adieu to his mother. He might have been living with hermits in the forests, learning Vedas from them. After this he appears on the banks of river Sarasvatī as a teacher and Priest. As he was doing penance there, he saw two sparrows, legs and beaks red, without even down feathers, crying for food, and the parent birds, with the utmost care and tenderness feeding them. They flew about here and there and gathered food and came back quickly. Because of joy at the sight of their parents, the little ones opened their ruby-red mouths with tears and throbbing. They kissed the young ones and fed them. The young sparrows hid under the wings of their father and mother and enjoyed the surroundings by thrusting out their heads and looking on all sides.
   iii) Birth of son. Seeing this, the paternity instinct in him was aroused. He understood that love of children was merely for the sake of love, that this love was pure and simple. Moreover there is the maxim that a man without a son has no right to aspire for heaven. Sad and silent, thinking of these things he walked on unwillingly and reached the vicinity of the Himālayas. Still, he was doubtful. He began to consider about the deity, before whom he had to do penance for the fulfilment of his wish. He could not decide. As he was sitting in thought, Nārada came there. From the talk of Vyāsa, Nārada knew that childlessness was the cause of his sorrow. Nārada advised him that for the attainment of Puruṣārthas (objects of life) penance was to be done before Devī. Accepting that advice, Vyāsa went to a place near Mahāmeru to do penance.

When Vyāsa began penance, the celestial maids also commenced their work of hindering the penance. It was Ghrācī who confronted Vyāsa. She took the form of a parrot of five colours and flew in front of Vyāsa. The hermit was excited at the beauty of Ghrācī and sat forgetting himself. As he sat there thinking of the infatuating beauty of the parrot, seminal discharge occurred to him. He became a slave to this infatuation, when he was engaged in making fire by attrition. In this amorous state of mind he was quite unaware of the seminal discharge or its falling on the pieces of wood used for attrition. He continued attrition. Then a very bright, divine person appeared from the pieces of wood. At the birth of a person, without attachment to a womb, all the worlds were delighted. The hide of black antelope, water pot, hermit’s rod etc. fell from the sky. Birth rituals and ceremonies, according to the custom, were conducted by Vyāsa. As he was born from the semen discharged at the sight of the Suka (parrot) the infant was named Suka. As soon as he was born Suka began to grow by divine power and shortly became a boy of shining radiance. After investiture with the Brahma-string, the boy was sent for education to the hermitage of Bhṛgaspati, the teacher of the devas. Suka completed his education with Bhṛgaspati and having performed Samāvarta and offering of gift to the teacher, he returned home to his father.

iv) Disciples. Suka commenced advanced study under his father Vyāsa. Besides Suka, Vyāsa had disciples such as Vaśāmpyāna, Sūta, Paǐla, Jaimini and others also, living with him. The hermitage of Vyāsa soon grew up to be a great educational institution, with plenty of disciples.

v) Separation of son. In the meanwhile Suka married and lived the life of a householder in the hermitage of his father, for a time. Then forsaking his family and his father, Suka went to the peak of Kailāsa and began to do penance meditating on Śiva. At last he became a divine person who had obtained complete attainments, and breaking the top of the peak open, he rose up into the sky and shone there as a second Sun. The devas who saw Suka rising up by breaking the peak of Kailāsa and staying up in the sky, praised him.

This untimely separation of his son had undermined the firmness of the mind of Vyāsa. Filled with grief, he left his hermitage and wandered here and there calling out his son by name. He could not find his son. At last he reached the peak of Kailāsa where his son had been doing penance. Standing there he called aloud his son by name cryingly. Paramāśīva appeared before the lamenting father and consoled him. Thus getting a little bit of peace of mind, Vyāsa returned to his hermitage and lived there. The sorrowing Vyāsa, was made still more sorrowful by the departure of his beloved disciples, Asita, Deva, Vaśāmpyāna, Sumanu, Jaimini and others who had been living in the hermitage and who had departed, having finished their education. All the surroundings of the hermitage seemed to him filled with pain. At last he thought about his mother. (Devi Bhāgavata Skandha 1).

4) His terrestrial life.

i) Preface. Within this period many changes had taken place in Hastināpura and the bank of Yumān. Santanu the king of the Lunar dynasty had married Gaṅgādevī, who had disappeared after giving the king a son named Devavrata (Bhīṣma). Bhīṣma grew up. Once Santanu was hunting in the forest when he was attracted by the sweet smell of musk. Tracing the origin of that smell, the king reached the fisherman’s hut on the banks of the Yumān. That smell proceeded from Kastūrīgandhā (Satyavatī) the mother of Vyāsa. The king fell in love with her. He returned to the palace, sad and silent. Learning the cause of his father’s sadness, Devavrata went to the fisherman’s hut and took Satyavatī to the palace to be given to his father. Devavrata had taken a vow that the kingdom would be given to the son born to Satyavatī and that he would remain unmarried, throughout his life. Because he had taken so terrible a vow, Devavrata came to be called Bhīṣma from that day onwards.

Two sons named Cittāṅgada and Vicitravirya, were born to Satyavatī. Cittāṅgada died when he was young. Vicitravirya married Ambikā and Ambālīkā, daughters of the King of Kaśi. Vicitravirya also died before any children were born to him. It seemed as if the family was about to become extinct. At this juncture Satyavatī thought about her son Vyāsa.

ii) Vyāsa in Hastināpura. The mother thought about him, and instantly he reached Hastināpura. Because of her compulsion, two sons were born, one each to Ambi-kā and Ambālīkā from Vyāsa. The son of Ambikā was Dhrārasthra and the son of Ambālīkā was Pāṇḍu. Vidurvā was the son born to Vyāsa by their maid.

iii) Vyāsa and the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava. From this time onwards we see Vyāsa as the spiritual teacher of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Behind all the movements of these two families we could see the hand of Vyāsa. Thus though he came to Hastināpura and gave advice to the members of the family frequently, his main abode was his hermitage. Vyāsa’s contact with Hastināpura could be seen up to the Mahāprasthāna (the great departure) of the Pāṇḍavas. In all the administrative affairs up to this period, Vyāsa also had a part. The situations in which Vyāsa had taken part in the life-voyage of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas are given below.

(i) Vyāsa gave the boon that hundred sons would be born to Gāndhārī. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 8).

(ii) Vyāsa cut the mass of flesh given birth to by Gāndhārī into a hundred pieces and kept them in hundred pots. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 17).

(iii) Vyāsa consoled Gāndhārī by telling her that over and above hundred sons a daughter also would be born to her. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 16).
(iv) Vyāsa consoled the Pāṇḍavas who had been living in the forest with their mother Kunfī, after the death of Pāṇḍu their father. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 5).
(v) On another occasion Vyāsa came to the Pāṇḍavas and told them the stories of the previous births of Pāṇcāli. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 168).
(vi) Vyāsa rendered all possible help to the Pāṇḍavas to marry Pāṇcāli. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 195).
(vii) Very often Vyāsa was a member of the council of Dharmaputra. (M. B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).
(viii) It was Vyāsa who sent Arjuna to the north, Bāhmasena to the east, Sahadeva to the south and Nakula to the west for regional conquest. (M. B. Sābhā Parva, Dākīnītyapātha, Chapter 26).
(ix) Vyāsa engaged himself in making various arrangements in the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhishthira. (M. B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(x) At the end of the Rājasūya, Vyāsa predicted the future of Yudhishthira. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 1).
(xi) When the Rājasūya ended, Vyāsa anointed Yudhishthira. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(xii) Vyāsa advised Dhrūtaraṣṭra to prevent Duryodhana from doing injustice. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapters 7 and 8).
(xiii) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Dvaitavana (forest) Vyāsa visited them and taught Yudhishthira the art of Pratīṣṭrī. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 24).
(xiv) He sent Saṅjaya to Dhrūtaraṣṭra to tell him about the greatness of Arjuna and Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 11).
(xv) He gave Saṅjaya the power of having the eye of a seer penetrating beyond time and space (Divya drṣṭi). (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 10).
(xvi) Vyāsa consoled Yudhishthira who was stricken with grief in the course of the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 23).
(xvii) When Yudhishthira cried over the death of Ghaṭotkaca in the battle of Bhārata, Vyāsa came to Yudhishthira and consoled him. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 58).
(xviii) He talked to Asvatthamā about the greatness of Śiva and Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 201, Stanza 56).
(xix) When Śaśyaki was about to kill Saṅjaya, Vyāsa turned him back from the attempt and rescued Saṅjaya. (M. B. Śaśy Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 39).
(xx) Vyāsa argued and established that the act of cursing Asvatthamā on the part of Śri Kṛṣṇa was correct. (M. B. Saupātika Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 17).
(xxi) Vyāsa prevented Gāndhārī from her intention to curse the Pāṇḍavas. (M. B. Śrī Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 7).
(xxii) When the battle of Bhārata was over, Vyāsa advised Yudhishthira about matters regarding the administration of the country.
(xxiii) Yudhishthira felt grieved at the death of relatives and friends in the battle of Bhārata and he decided to commit suicide. But Vyāsa dissuaded him from that attempt. (M. B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 28).
(xxiv) Vyāsa walked to the place where Bhīṣma lay on the bed of arrows and visited him. (M. B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 3).
(xxv) Vyāsa advised Yudhishthira to perform Āśvamedha (horse sacrifice). (M. B. Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 8).
(xxvi) Vyāsa advised the Pāṇḍavas to go to King Marutā for wealth when the battle of Bhārata was over. (Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 20).
(xxvii) Vyāsa consoled Uṭṭarā, who was lamenting over the death of her husband. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 11).
(xxviii) He consoled Arjuna who was crying over the death of his son. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 14).
(xxix) Vyāsa advised Yudhishthira on the various arrangements which were to be made for the conducting of horse-sacrifice. (Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapters 62 to 79).
(xxx) Vyāsa went to Dhrūtaraṣṭra, who had gone to the forest after the Bhārata-battle and pacified him. (M. B. Āśramavāśika Parva, Chapter 28).
(xxxi) Vyāsa brought the spirits of those who died in the Bhārata-battle, to the surface of the river Ganges, by the power of his penance and Dhrūtaraṣṭra and the others saw them. (See under Dhrūtaraṣṭra, Parā 7).
(xxxii) At the instruction of Vyāsa, all the Kṣatriya widows immersed themselves in the river Ganges and everyone of them entered into the world of her husband. (M. B. Āśramavāśika Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 18).
(xxxiii) When the Yadu-clan was completely destroyed, Arjuna went to the hermitage of Vyāsa and talked with him. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8).
(xxxiv) Vyāsa had been an adviser of King Janamejaya. (See under Janamejaya).
5) Saving a worm. Once a wicked man took rebirth as a worm. This worm was crawling in haste for life in front of a cart coming at great speed. He saved the worm and gave it Brahminhood, and in the next birth it became a Brahmin who lived in peace and comfort. (M. B. Anuśāsaṇa Parva, Chapter 117).
6) The literary life of Vyāsa. Towards the close of his life Vyāsa again entered the caves of Himālayas. Vyāsa who had steered through a very wide and rough sea of life, was in a position to understand clearly the various sides of human life. In the mind of that sage, who sat in deep contemplation in the eternally silent caves of the Himālayas, the events of his past life began to line up one after the other. From that inward instigation the Purāṇa-sthāpas (the Myths and legends) took form. It might have been during this period that Vyāsa divided the Vedas and composed Purāṇas and Upaniṣads.
One does not go wrong in saying that it was the composing of the Mahabharata that brought Vyāsa very close to the later generations. The stories of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, flowed through his mind as a river flows down crushing down the banks on either side. A scribe was necessary to take them down in the form of verses. Vyāsa informed Brahma of this need. Brahma replied "Gaṇapati is the only person capable of taking down everything that you sing." Accordingly Vyāsa thought of Gaṇapati, who came to the side of Vyāsa, and he informed Gaṇapati of his need. Gaṇapati said that he was willing to do the work on condition that Vyāsa would go on singing unceasingly, so that he might not have to stop the iron pen. Vyāsa said that while he would be singing the poems without stopping, Gaṇapati should not take down this and that without grasping the meaning. Both agreed to this condition and the composing of the Mahābhārata commenced. Within two years and a half the great poetic work was finished. The great disciples of Vyāsa, such as Vaiśampāyana, Jaimini and others sang them and learned them by heart and published them in the world. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).

7) Many Vyāsas. It is stated in the Purāṇas that in every Manu's age, a Vyāsa will be born. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 3, Chapter 3, as to who were the persons who took birth as Vyāsa in a particular Manu's age and which were the Vedas and branches of Vedas they had divided. It is given below: During the age of Manu Vaivasvata, in each of the past Dwāparaayugas, the Veda had been divided by great hermits, twentyeight times. Twentyeight Vedas Vyāsas have passed, each of whom had divided the Veda into four parts in each Dwāpara Yuga. It was Brahmā himself who had divided the Veda into four in the first Dwāparaayuga. Prajāpati was the Vedavyāsa in the second Dwāparaayuga. In the third, Vyāsa was the teacher-priest Śukra; in the fourth Bhṛṣpati; in the fifth the Sun; and in the sixth the all powerful Dharmarāja. It was Indra in the seventh, Vasiṣṭha in the eighth, Śārasvata in the ninth, and Tridhāmā in the tenth. It was Triśikhā in the eleventh, Bharadvāja in the twelfth, Antariṣṭa in the thirteenth, Vāraṇī in the fourteenth, Trayaḥṣūpa in the fifteenth, Dhanaiṣṭha in the sixteenth, Kratuṣṭha in the seventeenth and Jaya in the eighteenth. Next Bharadvāja comes as Vedavyāsa and Gautama after Bharadvāja. It was hermit Haryātmā who was the next Vyāsa, and then comes Vājaśrávas. The Next Vyāsa was Trṣabindu born in the clan of Somaśūma. He was followed by Rṣa. otherwise called Vālmikī born in the family of Bhrigu. Sakti is the Next Vyāsa. After that Parāśara, then Jātukiarna and then Kṛṣṇadaivipāyana. They are the twentyeight Vedavyāsas. Each one of these had divided the Veda which had been one at the beginning of each Dwāpara-yuga, into four Vedas. It is Aśvatthāmā, the son of Drona, who is going to be the Vedavyāsa of the coming Dwāpara-yuga.

8) Other details.

(i) Most of the scholars are of opinion that the period of Vyāsa was between 1800 and 1500 B.C.

(ii) Apāntaratamas was the rebirth of Vyāsa. (See under Apāntaratamas).

(iii) In Mahābhārata, the word Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇadaivipāyana, Dvaipāyana, Satyavatīsutura, Satyavatītāmaja, Parāśarya, Parāśaratāmaja, Bādarayāṇa, Vedavyāsa etc. are used as synonyms of Vyāsa.

(iv) The word Vyāsa means he who describes elaborately.

"He became Vyāsa because he had described all the Vedas". (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 88). Vyās=describe (Differentiate the branches and divide).

VYĀSASTHALI. An ancient holy place on the border of Kurukṣetra. It is said that because of his grief due to the separation of his son, Vyāsa tried to commit suicide at this place. He who visits this place would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 93).

VYĀSAVANA. A forest near Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 93, that he who bathes in the holy bath named Manojavatītirtha in this forest, would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms.

VYĀSVĀ. A King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śaṇti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3, that this King remains in the palace of Yama.

VYAVAHĀRA. It is mentioned in Manusmrtī, Chapter 8, that administering the law was of eighteen types in ancient India.

(i) Pertaining to giving and taking.

(ii) Pertaining to the property entrusted to another for keeping.

(iii) Selling the property by anybody other than its owner.

(iv) Appropriating gain to oneself in a combined transaction.

(v) Not handing over the property which was given as a gift.

(vi) Non-payment of salary.

(vii) Disobeying orders.

(viii) Retaining and doubting the ownership after the completion of a transaction of selling or buying.

(ix) A law suit between the owner of the cattle and the cowherd or shepherd.

(x) Dispute about boundary.

(xi) Striking another.

(xii) Reviling others.

(xiii) Theft and robbery.

(xiv) Violence.

(xv) Stealing another's wife.

(xvi) Matrimonial responsibilities.

(xvii) Partition.

(xviii) Gambling.

Whenever difference of opinion arises between two persons on any of the matter given above, the King should interfere and make a decision. For one reason or another, if the King could not attend the court, three learned Brahmans should enter the court and conduct the trial sitting or standing, and they should not conduct the trial walking to and fro. This was the practice of courts in ancient India.

VYOMA. A King born in the dynasty of Bharata, the son of Duṣṣanta. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Vyoma was the son of Dāsārha and the father of Jimpūta.

VYOMĀRI. An eternal Viśvadeva (deity concerned with offerings to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 35).

VYOMĀSURA. Son of Māyāsura. For the story how Kṛṣṇa killed this asura, see under Kṛṣṇa, para 24.

VYŪDHORU (VYŪDHORASKA). One of the hundred sons of Dvārātṛṣaṇa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 23, that Vyūdhoru was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VYŪCHA. (Disposition of an army). Disposition of an army of four parts, (infantry, cavalry, elephants and chariots) in the battlefield, the arrangement of it, in various forms. It is said that during the period of Mahābhārata, there were various forms of disposition of the army. Some of them are given below:
i) Ardhacandravyuha. (like a Crescent moon) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 56)
ii) Garudavyuha. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 56).
iii) Kraunchavyuha. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 60).
iv) Cakravyuha. (wheel-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).
v) Makaravyuha. (shark-like) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 69).
vi) Mandalavyuha. (circular) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 81).
vii) Mandalarādhavyuha. (Semi circular) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20). viii) Vajravyuha. (Diamond-shaped) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 81).
ix) Śakatavyuha. (cart-shaped) (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 7).
x) Śyena vyuha. (Vulture-like) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 69).
xii) Sarvabhadra vyuha. (fortified all-round) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 99).
xii) Suparnavyuha. (kite-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20). xiii) Śūcinukhavyuha. (Like the needle-eye) (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 77).

VYÜKA. A country of ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 31).

VYÜSTASVA. A King of the Puru dynasty, who was righteous and just. He performed many sacrifices. His wife was Bhadrā, daughter of King Kākšiṇi. It is said that this Bhadrā was the most beautiful woman in India. As the King led a libidinous life with this queen Bhadrā he met with an untimely death. When the King died, he had no children. Bhadrā cried for a long while embracing the dead body of the King. Then the spirit of Vyūśitasva, without the body, said to her, “My love. Lie with me in your own bed on the eighth or fourteenth day of your menstruation. I will give you sons.” She acted according to the wish of the King and got seven sons from the dead body. Her sons were three Satvas and the four Madras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 120).

VYŪŚṬA. A King of the dynasty of Dhrupa. This King was the son of King Puipārṇa, by his wife Prabhā. Pradoṣa, Niśitha and others were brothers of Vyūsta. A son named Sarvatejas was born to this King. (Bhāgarava, Skandha 4).

VYŪŚṬI. Another name for day-time.

Y

YA. (q) This letter means “Yāga”,”Yātā” (one who goes) or “hero”. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

YĀDĀVA. See under Yaduvarsā.

YĀDĀVĪ. Mother of the King Sagara. (For more details see under Sagara).

YADU I. The founder of Yādava Varsa or Yadu Varsa.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order:—Brahma—Atri—Candra—Buddha—Puruṛavas—Ayus—Nahusa—Yāyāti—Yadu.
2) Yadu Varsa (Yādava Varsa). The origin of Yadu Varsa is from Atri. Candra, Durvásas and Dattatreya Muni were the sons of Atri by Anāṣyā. Buddha was born to Candra. Purūravas was born to Budha, Ayus was born to Purūravas, and Nahusa was born to Ayus. Two children, Ayati and Yayati were born to Nahusa. Yayati had two wives, Sarṁśthā and Devayāni. Three sons, Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Puru were born to Sarṁśthā. The Puru vāniśa takes its origin from Puru. Yayāti had two sons by Devayāni. They were Yadu and Turvasu. The descendants of Yadu are the Yādavas.

Four sons, Sahasrajit, Kroṣṭa, Nala and Ripu were born to Yadu. Sahasrajit had a son, Satājit. Three sons Mahābhaya, Vepuḥaya and Hehaya were born to Satājit. Of them Hehaya became famous under the name of Ekavīra and founded the Hehaya vāniśa. The Hehayas and Bhārgavas were on terms of enmity. Dharma was born to Hehaya, and Kunti or Kupi was born to Dharma. Kupi had four sons—Sādājīt, Māhīśmān, Bhadrāsena and Durdama. Dhanaka was the son of Bhadrāsena and Dhanaka had four sons—Kṛtvāryīra, Kṛtvāgīni, Kṛtvāvarmā and Kṛtvājūisi. Of them, Kṛtvāryīra who was the eldest, was the father of Kārtaṇvīyajrūna. From here, Yadu vāniśa continues from Kārtaṇvīyajrūna. He had five sons, Jayadhvaja, Śrārasa, Viṣṇabha, Madhu and Īṛ jitra. Viṣṇi was the son of Madhu, the fourth of them. From this point, Yadu vāniśa continues from Viṣṇi. Yadava vāniśa from this stage is also known as Viṣṇi vāniśa. Viṣṇi had four sons—Sumitra, Yudhājīt, Vasu and Sārvabhauma. Yadu vāniśa continues from Yudhājīta. He had two sons, Sini and Nimna. Sini’s son was Śātyāka and Śātya’s son was Śātyaki. Śātyaki had another name, Yuvudhāna. Jaya was Śātyaki’s son. Kupi was the son of Jaya, Anamitra was the son of Kupi and Prāṇi was the son of Anamitra. Prāṇi’s sons were Cītrarathā and Śvapahā. Viṣṇarathā and Kukūra were born to Cītrarathā. Śūra was the son of Viṣṇarathah. Śūra was the son of Śūra, Buddhistha was the son of Sīni, Īṛdika was the son of Bhōja. Four sons, Devavāha, Gādāḥanāvā, Kṛtarparvā and Śīra, were born to Īṛdika. Śūra married Māriśa and their children were Vasu, Devabhāga, Devārasvā, Anāka, Śrājyā, Kākānika, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kavūka and Vasuvea. Vasudeva married Devakī, the sister of Karīsas. Śrī Karīsa was their son. Pradyumna was the son of Śrī Karīsas. Aniruddha was the son of Pradyumna and Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. The last known link of that branch of Yadu vāniśa was Vajra.

Karīsa also belonged to Yadu vāniśa. Kukūra who was the brother of Viṣṇarathah was the ancestor of Karīsa. Ugrasena who was a lineal descendant of Kukūra, was the father of Karīsa. The Purāṇas mention Devakī, the mother of Śrī Karīsa as Karīsa’s sister. But in fact she was not his direct sister. Ugrasena, Karīsa’s father, had a brother named Devakī. This Devakī had three sons, Devāpā, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devakī, Śrī Karīsa’s mother was the daughter of Devāpā. Devakī had six sisters who were—Srūtadeva, Śāntideva, Upadeva, Śrīdeva, Devarakīta and Sahadeva. Akīrā who went to Ambādi also belonged to another branch of Yadu vāniśa. Prāṇi who was of the ninth generation from Viṣṇi, had two sons—Cītrarathā and Śvapahā. Akīrā was the son of Śvapahā. 3) Other details about Yadu Varsa

(i) Once Yāyāti wanted his son Yadu to transfer the latter’s youthfulness to Yāyāti. The son refused to oblige the father who therefore pronounced a curse that Yadu’s descendants would not enjoy kingship. (For detailed story, see under Yāyāti).

(ii) Yadu’s descendants are called Yādavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 10).
(iii) Yadu was the son of Devayānī and the grandson of Śukrācārya. Although Yadu was a hero, he was dull-witted. He did not obey his father. He used to despise his father and brothers. His capital city was Hastinā-pura. He became dull-witted after the loss of his kingdom by the curse of his father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

4) The end of Yadu Vaniśa. Śri Kṛṣṇa was one of the most important members of the Yadu Vaniśa. That family continued—only for 36 years more after the end of the Bhārata Yuddha. At the end of the thirty-six years, evil omens began to appear in Dvārakā. Whirlwinds began to blow furiously. Frightened birds began to fly helter-skelter. Rivers began to flow upwards. The whole land was enveloped in mist. Comets continued to drop from heaven, scattering sparks of fire. The sun’s disc was eclipsed with clouds of dust.

At that time, one day, the sages Viśvāmitra, Kaṇva and Nārada happened to come to Dvārakā. A band of Yadavas, under the leadership of Śamba, gathered round the sages to make fun of them. They dressed Śamba like a pregnant woman and asked the sages what child “she” would bear. The enraged sages replied that the “Child” would be an iron pestle which would be the cause of the death of all the Yadavas. Besides, they added that, with the exception of Rāma, (Balabhadra Rāma) and Kṛṣṇa, the whole of Yādava Vaniśa would come to ruin.

Next day Śamba did give birth to an iron pestle. The frightened Yadavas recalled the curse of the sages. They reported the matter to their king. The king, in deep gloom, had the pestle filed into dust and ordered his men to throw the dust into the sea.

People recalled Gándhari’s curse on Śri Kṛṣṇa after the Bhārata Yuddha. The curse was that the family of Śri Kṛṣṇa who was the cause of all mischief, would be wiped out within a period of 36 years.

At that time, women began to steal from Dvārakā every night by a dark woman monster. Śri Kṛṣṇa’s weapon, Cakra slipped out of Kṛṣṇa’s grip and rose up to heaven, in the very presence of the Vṛṣṇis. Seeing these evil omens, the alarmed Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas began to leave the place on a pilgrimage. They reached the shore of Prabhāsa tīrtha. The Uddhasavas parted company with the Yadavas there. Nobody prevented the Uddhavas. Śri Kṛṣṇa who saw that the end of the Yadavas was approaching, also kept silent. The Yadava leaders in despair, took to drinking. Intoxicated by drinking they began to quarrel. The particles of the iron pestle thrown into the sea, were carried and deposited on the shore by the waves. They began to sprout into a kind of grass. The blades of this grass soon transformed themselves into iron pestles. The Yadavas pulled them out and began attacking each other with them. Most of them were beaten to death by their own kinsfolk. Śri Kṛṣṇa who was in a state of trance in “Yogāśana”, was hit on his toe by an arrow shot by a hunter and he fell into Samādhi. Balabhadra Rāma denounced his body and went to Pātāla.

After that the sea advanced and submerged the whole of Dvārakā. (M.B. Mausala Parva).

YADU II. There is another Yadu mentioned in the Purāṇas, who was the son of Uparicara Vasu. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 31, says that this Vasu was never defeated by anyone at any time.

YADU III. King of Yadus. There are references to this king in many places in the 1st Manḍala of Ṛgveda.

YĀJA. A sage born in Kaśyapa gotra. (For further details, see the word Upayāja and Pāṇiṭā).

YAJJATA. A Yajñakarāṭa (Performer of Yajnas) celebrated in the Yajurveda.

YAJNĀ. An incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu, Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons, Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters, Akūṭi, Devahūti and Prasūti. Ruci Prajāpati married Akūṭi. Yajña was their son. Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that this Yajña was an incarnation of Ādi Nārāyaṇa.

Yajña had a sister named Dakṣīṇa. They were twins. They married each other. The twelve sons who were born to them were the Devas known as Yāmas, during the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 7).

Yajña’s twelve sons were:—Toṣa, Pratoṣa, Saniṣṭha, Bhadra, Śan[t]i, Idaṭapi, Iddhima, Kavi, Vibhū, Sraghna, Sudeva and Virocaka. Their father Yajña was the Indra of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YAJNĀBĀHU. An ancient sage who was the son of Priyavrata and grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu. Svāyambhuva Manu had two famous sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of these, Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmāti, the two daughters of Viśvakarmā. Yajnabāhu was the son of Priyavrata by Surūpā. The ten sons born to Priyavrata and Surūpā were:—Agndhira, Iddhmajihva, Yajnabāhu, Mahāvira, Rukmāukra, Ghṛtrapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhāṭiti, Vitihotra and Kavi. They had a daughter, Urjaśvati. Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

YAJNADATTĀ I. A youthful sage. In Agni Purāṇa. Chapter 6, it is stated that this youth was shot dead with an arrow by Daśaratha, mistaking him for an elephant, on the bank of the river Sarayu. But Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa says that the name of the boy-sage who was shot dead by Daśaratha was “Śravaṇa”. For more details see 3rd Para under Daśaratha.

YAJNADATTĀ II. A Brāhmaṇa. There was a Brāhmaṇa village called Mahat at the foot of the Yāmuna mountain, between the rivers Gaṅgā and Yumunā. This Brāhmaṇa was born and brought up here. There is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 92, about him, which says that by mistake he was taken to hell by Kāla’s messenger and that he was reluctant to leave hell. The story is as follows:—

Once Yama (Kāla) ordered his agent to bring the Brāhmaṇa named Yajnadatta, who lived in Mahat village, born in Vasīṣṭha gotra and was gentle, scholarly and well-versed in Yajña practices. He was specially warned that he should not make a mistake as there was another Brāhmaṇa with the same name who lived in the neighbourhood and who resembled Yajnādatta in appearance, learning and in every other respect. But in spite of Yama’s specific warning, his agent brought the wrong person. Yama, with his sense of justice, received him with due respect and allowed him to return to the world. But Yajnādatta was not willing to return to the world.

YAJNADATTĀ III. See under Pāṭaliputra.

YAJṆASĀRMĀ. A Brāhmaṇa made famous in the Purāṇas. He was the son of Śivaśarmā. (For detailed story, see under Śivaśarmā).
YAJŅASASTRU. A Rākṣasa who fought against Rāma and Lakṣmana in the forest. Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Trīśiras were the three Rākṣasas who declared war on Śrī Rāma. Yajñasatru was one of the twelve military commanders of Khara. Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga, mentions that the twelve heroes who were Khara’s commanders were: Śyenagāmi, Prthuṛgrīva, Yajñasatru, Vihaṅgama, Durjaya, Karavīrakṣa, Paruṣa, Kālakārṇuka, Meghamālī, Mahāmālī, Sarpaṣya and Rudhirāsana.

YAJÑASENA I. See under Pañcatantra.

YAJÑASENA II. Drupada, the son of King of Pañcāla. (For more details see under Drupada).

YAJṆAVĀHA. A warrior of Subrahmatya. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 80.

YAJṆAVALKYA. An ancient sage who was a profound scholar.
1) General. Purāṇas say that this sage spent the major part of his life at the court of King Janaka. He was also King Janaka’s priest. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16, it is mentioned that Kalki was Yajñavalkya’s priest. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51, mentions that Yajñavalkya was a “Brahmavādi son” of Viśvāmitra.

2) Thousand cows. Once King Janaka conducted a Yāga. At that time he wished to find out the most eminent among the sages. He promised to present a thousand cows to the sage who was a consummate scholar. A bag of gold coins was also tied to each horn of the cows. Janaka announced that the sage who claimed to be a consummate scholar might come forward and take the cows with him. No one among the numerous sages who were present, dared to come forward. Yajñavalkya, however, ordered his disciple to take the cows home with him. The other sages questioned his right to claim the cows. Yajñavalkya asserted his right to do so. One of the sages named Arthabhāga stood up and asked him the following question:—

Arthabhāga:—When a man who has not acquired divine knowledge dies, his “Jñānendriyas” (senses of knowledge) are also merged with it. How is it possible for him to accept another body afterwards? “Yajñavalkya:—Karma (action) becomes the cause of his re-birth.”

Next Kahola and many other sages put various questions to him. The substance of their talk is given below:—

Kahola:—What have you to say about the invisible and omnipresent Brahman?

Yajñavalkya:—Your soul is the omnipresent Brahman. The soul has no hunger or thirst, fear or desire, old age or death. Those who wish to know the soul, become sages after transcending love of wife, children or worldly riches. The two qualities essential for sages are scholarship and spiritual knowledge.

Gārgi:—Who is the warp and woof of everything?

Yajña:—It is Brahman. Do not ask further; if you do, your head will be broken to pieces.

Ārupi:—Who is he who exists within? (Antaryāmi).

Yajña:—He who is contained in Jagat (the universe) without the knowledge of Jagat, he whose body is Jagat, he who controls Jagat as antaryāmi, he is within every one. He cannot be seen, but he sees. He cannot be heard; but he hears. He is capable of thinking; but he is beyond our thoughts. He exists as one who sees, hears and thinks, in all creatures.

Gārgi:—I have two questions to ask. They are as sharp and pointed as two arrows. By what force is fixed that which is above Heaven, below the earth and that which is between them, like warp and woof?

Yajña:—by the sky.

Gārgi:—by what force is the sky held in position like warp and woof?

Yajña:—Under the command of God, the sun and moon do not deviate from their orbits. The sky and the earth remain in their respective places. Rivers run making the fields fertile. One who lives and works without the ability to know God does not obtain immortality. He who dies without knowing God is a Kṛpana (spiritual bankrupt). On the contrary, he who knows God attains Mukta.

Sākalya:—How many gods are there?

Yajña:—Thirty three. They are—8 Vāsūs, 11 Rudras, 12 Ādiyās, Indra and Prajapati. The 8 Vāsūs are—Agni, Prthvī, Vāyu, Antarikṣa, Āditya, Dyau (Heaven), Candrá and Stars. The 11 Rudras are the combination of the 10 Jñānendriyas and the working of the mind. The ruling deities of the 12 months are known as the 12 Ādiyās. They receive into their lives and our Karmans (actions).

Yajñavalkya gave suitable answers to all other questions of Sākalya. At last, he asked Sākalya:—“Now I will ask you a question. Whom do the Upanishads describe? If you do not answer, your head will break.”

Sākalya could not answer it. He dropped down with a broken head. He asked the other scholars who had gathered there, if any of them wanted to ask him more questions. But no one came forward. All remained dumb. Then he continued:—“Fresh leaves sprout from a tree which has been cut. If the seed is destroyed, the tree does not grow out of it. How is it that a man is born again after his death?”

No one was able to answer that question. Thus after defeating all of them in argument, Yajñavalkya went home with the cows.

3) In Janaka’s court again. On another occasion, Yajñavalkya went to see King Janaka. The King asked him whether he had come for getting cows or to ask abstruse question. The sage answered that he had come for both. Their conversation continued as follows:—

Janaka:—Jīta Muni has said that “Vacana” (word) is Brahman or God. What is your opinion?

Yajña:—It is correct. But did he say which is the body and abode of God?

Janaka:—No.

Yajña:—In that case he has said only one fourth about God. Vacana is god’s body and sky, his abode. Brahmadvidyā depends on the word. The word is Parabrahman. Janaka was highly pleased. He decided to give a thousand bulls to the sage. But Yajñavalkya said that his father’s principle was to give effective knowledge to the pupil and not to receive any daksina (Payment) from him. Janaka again wanted Yajñavalkya to explain clearly what “Brahma Vidya” means.

Yajña:—Just as a person can reach his destination by walking or by travelling in a chariot or by sailing in a boat, in order to secure peace for the soul, you are depending on the Upanishads. But although one is learned in Vedas and Āgamas, or adored by others or wealthy, or well-versed in Upaniṣads, unless one has known God—unless one acquired Brahmajñāna—one cannot be said to be gratified. Do you know where you will go after renouncing your body?
Janaka:—I do not know.
Yājñavalkya:—I shall tell you. The deity of the right eye is “Inda” (light). People call it “Indra”. The deity of the left eye is Indrāṇi, the wife of Indra. Indra is eater and Indrāṇi is food. In a state of consciousness they are separated. (Then the soul is called Vaśvānara).
In a state of dream, the two are united. (Then the soul is called Taijasa). In a state of slumber, the soul is in “Prajñā” state. (Since there is no activity it is called Prājñā). In the fourth or “Turiya” state, one becomes capable of transcending the three other states and to attain Parabrahman. It is a state of fearlessness transcending birth and death.
The King who was pleased by this teaching dedicated the kingdom of Videha and even himself to the sage.
4) In Janaka’s court for the third time.
After some years Yājñavalkya went again to Janaka’s court. At that time also there was a philosophical discussion between the King and the sage in the form of questions and answers.
Janaka:—Which is the light that gives us guidance during the day time?
Yājñavalkya:—The Sun.
Janaka:—After sunset which is the light that guides us?
Yājñavalkya:—The Moon.
Janaka:—And in the absence of the sun and moon?
Yājñavalkya:—Agni.
Janaka:—Which is the light that guides us in the absence of the sun, moon and Agni?
Yājñavalkya:—Vacana.
Janaka:—Which is the light that shines in the absence of all these luminaries?
Yājñavalkya:—Ātmajyotis (soul’s light).
Janaka:—Who is Ātmā?
Yājñavalkya:—“Puruṣa” who is formed by the union of “vyāna” in prānas (lives) and jyotis (light) in the heart. The soul is disposed to action with the help of intelligence. In the end it transcends the body, senses and mind and attains Mokṣa. In the state of consciousness the soul’s activities become manifest to us. When in sleep, after deputing “Prāṇa” for the protection of the body, the soul remains outside the body. The senses become inactive. Therefore we should never wake up one who is asleep. When the soul remains in the body and the senses are active, it is in a most vigilant state.
Thus the soul is above the states of wakefulness, dream and slumber. The soul is the divine light of pure energy.
Janaka who was pleased, gave the sage a thousand cows more. After that Yājñavalkya spoke about liberation from worldly bonds.
Yājñavalkya:—The soul has no connection with the three conditions. Just as the actions in a dream do not affect the soul, the actions in a wakeful state also do not affect it. Just as a fish jumps from one side of the river to the other and back again, life keeps jumping from the state of wakefulness to the state of slumber and vice versa.
Just as a kite goes up flying and then comes back to its nest, one moves from the state of wakefulness to sleep and back again. In deep slumber, he merges with God, but he does not know that. In that state, the father or the mother does not have the knowledge that they are the father or mother.
After that Yājñavalkya explained the nature of the soul and the various aspects of its working in a state of wake-fulness and of slumber. He added:—“As long as there is “Kāma” (desire) there is “Karman” also. Life goes on passing from birth to death and from death to birth.
One attains perfection when one is above all desires, and acquires the highest divine knowledge. He is liberated from birth and death and becomes immortal.
By jīva, dāna and tapas we become self-purified and thus become worthy of the highest divine grace. We have to go from the world of Karman (action) to the world of Ātmā (soul). One who has acquired Brahmajanā (knowledge of Brahman) becomes a Brahmaṇa.
Hearing these famous teachings of Yājñavalkya, Janaka became his permanent disciple.
5) His end. Yājñavalkya had two wives named Kalyāṇi and Maitreyī. After giving his all to his wives he passed into immortality. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka: M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapters 3-9).
6) His works. Yājñavalkya has written a Śrīmṛtī on the subject of law. “Mitakṣarā” is its famous commentary.
Mitakṣarā is the highest authoritative treatise on Law in South India.
7) Other details.
(i) Yājñavalkya flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira’s assembly.
(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).
(ii) He was also a member of Indra’s assembly. (M.B.
Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).
(iii) Yājñavalkya was the priest at the Rājasūya Yajña of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 35).
(iv) Yājñavalkya had his knowledge of Vedas from Śūryadeva. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).
YAJURVEDA.
1) General. The Caturvedas are:—Rg veda, Yajurveda
Śāmaveda and Atharvaveda. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 3, mentions that Vaśisḻapaṇa, the disciple of Vedavyāṣa, divided Yajurveda into twentyseven branchishes and taught them to his disciples. Among those disciples there was Yājñavalkya, the son of Brahmarāṇa.
It was Vyāṣa who divided the Vedas into four parts. After passing them, the sage Vyāṣa taught Rgveda to Paila, Yajurveda to Vaśisḻapaṇa, Śāmaveda to Jaimini and Atharvaveda to Sumantu.
The rules for Japa, Homa etc. of Yajurveda were taught to Vyāṣa by Agniodeva. If all the rules of Yajurveda are correctly observed, all desires will be fulfilled.
There are special rules for the observance of homa for the fulfilment of particular desires.
YAKRLLOMA. An Indian town. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).
YAKSHA.
1) General. A class of Semi-gods. There are chiefly three classes of inhabitants in Heaven:—Devas, Gaṇa-devalas and Upadevalas. Gaṇadevalas consist of the 12 Ādityas, 10 Viśvadevalas, 8 Vaṣus, 36 Tūṣitas, 64 Ābhās-varas, 49 Anilas 220 Mahārājikas, 12 Sādhyas and 11 Rudras.
Among the Upadevalas there are 10 subdivisions. They are, Vidyādharas, Apsaras, Yaksas, Rāksasas, Gandharavas, Kinnaras, Piśācas, Gufyakas, Siddhas and Bhūtas.
2) Origin. There are different views relating to the origin of the Yakṣas. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1 we find that the Yakṣas took birth after Brahmā’s birth from “Virāt Puruṣa’s” anda. According to a statement in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19, Yakṣas and Rākṣasas were born from Muni, the grand daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati. Thus Yakṣas and Rākṣasas are related as brothers. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 7, there is another passage which says that Yakṣas are the progeny of the sage Pulastya.

3) Other details.

i) Once Śukadeva sang the story of Mahābhārata to the Yakṣas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 108).

ii) Lakhs of Yakṣas remain in Kubera’s assembly, worshipping him. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18).

iii) There are Yakṣas in Brahmā’s assembly also. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 56).

iv) Kubera is the King of Yakṣas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 10).

v) Bhūmasena once drove away Yakṣas and Rākṣasas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 57).

vi) On another occasion, Sunda and Upasunda defeated and persecuted the Yakṣas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208, verse 7).

YAKṢAGRAHA. A Graha (Evil Spirit) connected with Yakṣas. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 53, mentions that people become mad owing to the adverse influence of this Graha.

YAKṢAVĀṬA. A place made famous in the Purāṇas. In Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha, there is a statement saying that it was at this place that the Dānava called Rambaha took a she-buffalo as his wife.

YAKṢAYUDDHAPARVA. A sub-division of Vana Parva, in Mahābhārata, Chapters 158 to 164 of Vana Parva, are included in this sub-division.

YAKṢEṢVARA. An incarnation of Śiva. The devas were puffed with pride when they secured Amṛta by churning the ocean of milk. In order to allay their pride, Śiva took birth as Yakṣeṣvara. One day he put a blade of grass on the ground before them and asked them to take it up. Although the Devas tried their best, they were not able even to move it. It was only then that they became convinced of their own incapacity. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudra Saṁhitā).

YAKṢI (YAŚI). Women folk of Yakṣas. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50 mentions that the images of Yakṣi to be installed in temples should have fixed and long eyes. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 103, states that Yakṣi is a Devi and by eating the prasāda (naivedya) of the Devī one would be absolved of the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brāhmaṇa).

YAKṢIṬRĪTHA. A famous sacred place situated on the borders of Kurukṣetra. By bathing at this place one’s desires would be fulfilled. The place is also famous for offering worship to the Pitr. A visit to this place will be rewarded with the benefit of Ásvamedha Yāga. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 23 mentions that this tirtha was founded by Parasurāma.

YAKṢMĀ (RĀJAYAKṢMĀ). The disease of consumption (Tuberculosis). There is a story in Mahābhārata which says that this disease was created by Dakṣa Prajāpati. (For more details see under Candra). marvellous performance of the monkey. Isvaravarna explained that the monkey was capable of giving in this way, 1,000 Ni< shkas daily. Sundari made up her mind to purchase the wonderful animal at any price. She requested Isvaravarna to give her the monkey in exchange for the crores of Ni<shkas she had taken from him earlier. But he turned down her request. At last she persuaded him to sell the monkey to her for the entire wealth she possessed. Isvaravarna secretly made the monkey swallow 2,000 Ni<shkas before handing it over to Sundari and left the place at once to go to Svarnadipa for trade.

A, the monkey gave Sundari 1,000 Ni<shkas on each of the first two days, but on the third day she was disillusioned. In her disappointment and anger, she beat A. The enraged monkey attacked both Sundari and Makaraka< and harmed them by biting and tearing with its nails. They in turn, beat him to death. Thus Sundari lost all her ill-gotten wealth and was reduced to utter poverty and distress.

YAMAKA. A region in ancient India. The inhabitants of this place were called "Yamakas", Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 52, refers to the presents offered by the princes and people of Yamaka at Yudhishtira's Ashvamedhayajna.

YAMASABHA. Yama's assembly. This assembly is described in Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 8. It was Visvakarma who built Yamasabha. It is 100 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in width. Although it is illuminated with sun-light it has an equable temperature. Sadness, old age, hunger or thirst are unknown there. There is a dense growth of Kalpavykas. All the dead people who were famous in ancient times are members of this assembly.

YAMI. A daughter of Surya. One of the wives of Surya was Sarjna, the daughter of Visvakarma. Three children, Manu, Yama and Yam, were born to Surya by Sarjna. (Vis< u Purana, Part 3, Chapter 2).

YAMI. A wife of Dharmadeva. The ten wives of Dharmadeva are—Arundhati, Vasu, Yami, Lamb<, Bh<nu, Manuvati, Saikalp<, Muhurt<, Sadyha and Vis<. (Vis< u Purana, Part I, Chapter 15).

YAMINIM. A daughter of Daksha Prajapat<. She was one of the wives of Ka<yapa. (Bhagavata, 6th Skandha).

YAMUNA. Another name for the river K<lindi. (See also under K<lindi).

1) How the water in K<lindi turned Black :-The water in the river K<lindi is black in colour. There is a story behind the changing of the colour of this river-water into black. Originally it was clear. After the death of Sati, Daksha's daughter, Siva broke up Daksha's yaga and went about rambling round the world. K<nadeva who saw Siva who had lost his wife (Sati) shot him with "Unm<dastra" (an arrow causing madness and excitement). Siva, in his excitement, always thinking about Sati, wandered about, finding peace and rest nowhere. In his excited and restless state he plunged himself into K<lindi river. Just then, the clear water of the river turned black. (Vamana Purana, Chapter 6).

2) The greatness of K<lindi (Yamuna). The Puran<\nas declare that by bathing in the holy K<lindi one attains heaven. There is a story illustrating this in Padma Purana, Chapter 30, as follows:—

Long ago, in Kr<tyayuga, there lived in the country of Nishada, a very wealthy Vaisya, by name Hemakunda. By doing various kinds of business, he had earned eight crores of golden coins. By that time he was advancing in age. At this stage he began to think of the transitoriness of worldly pleasures and set apart one-sixth of his entire wealth for charitable purposes. He built two temples—one for Vishu and the other for Siva. He offered daily worship to the gods and spent money in generous hospitality. His two sons, Sriku<ndala and Viku<ndala were growing up. He entrusted the burden of domestic affairs to them and went to the forest to perform austere tapas, after which he attained Vishula.

His sons, who were intoxicated with their affluent and luxurious life, deviated from the path of virtue and began to indulge in all kinds of sensual pleasures. It did not take long for them to be reduced to utter poverty. Their relatives and dependants left them to their fate, and at last, they began to resort to stealing. For fear of the King, the public and the law, they changed their residence to the woods. One of them went to a mountain and the other to a forest. One day, the elder brother was caught by a tiger and the younger was bit by a snake. Both of them died on the same day. Yama's agents took both to Yamaloka. Dharmaraja (Yama) ordered the elder brother to be sent to Naraka (Hell) and the younger one (Viku<ndala) to be sent to Heaven.

Viku<ndala who knew that he did not deserve Heaven by any standards, asked Yama's agent how this had happened. The agent gave him this answer:—"There was a Brahmana well-versed in Vedic lore, who was the son of Harimitra. His a<rama was on the southern bank of Yamuna. While you were living in the forest, you were associated with him. As a result of that contact, it so happened that you bathed for two months in the holy river K<lindi, the waters of which have the power of absolving sinners. By your bath in the first month you were liberated from all sins. By the second you have become eligible for Heaven. You have qualified yourself for the eternal bliss of Heaven, by that holy act."

Yamuna is being worshipped as a goddess. Devotees of this goddess imagine her as riding on a tortoise, carrying a water pot in her hand and is of black complexion. (Agni Purana, Chapter 50).

YAMUNA I. A town in ancient India. (Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

YAMUNA II. A mountain, made famous in the Puranas, standing between the rivers Gang< and Yamuna. (M.B. A<us<ana Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3).

YAMUNADVIPA. An island in the river Yamuna. It was on this island that Vy<sa was conceived as the result of the union of sage Par<ara with Satyavati. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 2).

YAMUNAPRBHA. A sacred place. Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 44, mentions that the man who bathes here obtains the reward of Ashvamedha Yaga and enters Heaven.

YAMUNATIRTHA. A holy tirtha on the bank of the river Sarasvat<. Mahabharata, Salya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 11, refers to a R<jas<ya Yajna performed at this place by Varu<na, the son of Aditi.

YANA. One of the royal qualities like Sandhi, Vignaha etc. (For more details see under Sa<gu<nas).
YĀNASANDHIPARVA. A subdivision of Mahābhārata, Udyaoga Parva, Chapters 47-71 of Udyaoga Parva, are included in this Parva.

YĀSAHKETU. A king of the city called Śobhāvatī. He was one of the chief characters in the sixth story told by the famous Veṭāla in Kathāsarasāgara.

YĀŚAS. Father of Kalki, the tenth incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16, mentions that towards the end of Kaliyuga all people will become atheists, there will be an intermixture of castes and all people will become thieves and devoid of virtue. At that time, the 15 branches of the Veda called Vājasaneyas alone will be the authority. Mlecchas (low-class people) assuming the form of Kings will begin to eat human beings. Agni Purāṇa states further that at that time, Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Yāśas and Yājñavalkya's priest and after training himself in archery and weapons, annihilate all Mlecchas.

YĀŚASVINI I. A woman follower of Subrahmānaya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

YĀŚASVINI II. A sister of Pāṇcālī. (Bāgavata, 9th Skandha).

YĀŚKA. A famous Sanskrit Grammarian of ancient times. Although the people of India always believed in the greatness of the Vedas, the Vedas became unintelligible even to scholars owing to changes in language and differences in grammar. It was Yāśaka and Sāyana who saved the country from that plight. Yāśaka became famous by composing "Nirukta" (etymology). There is a reference to this ancient sage in Mahābhārata, Chapter 342, Verse 72.

YĀSOBHADRA. A king of King Manobhadra, Padma-Purāṇa, Kriyākhaṇḍa mentions that Yāsobhadra happened to be born in a royal family because in his previous birth he had bathed in the Gaṅgā.

YĀŚODĀ. Foster-mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. How she became Śrī Kṛṣṇa's fostermother, is explained in a story given in Bāgavata, 10th Skandha:—

Once Drōṇa, one of the Aṣṭavasus, and his wife Dharā, caused displeasure to Brahmā. In his anger, Brahmā cursed them to be born in the world as human beings and to spend a life-time on earth, tending cattle. Drōṇa became sad and with tears in his eyes, prayed to Brahmā that during his life on earth he should be blessed with Viṣṇu's darśana. Brahmā granted that prayer. It was in fulfilment of this prayer that Drōṇa was born as Nandagopa and Dharā as Yaśodā in Ambāḍi.

YĀŚODHARA I. Son of Durmukha, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 184, Verse 5).

YĀŚODHARA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇidevi. (M.B. Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

YĀŚODHARA. Daughter of King Trigarta. She was married by Hasti, King of the Puru dynasty and they a had a son named Vīkaṇṭha. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 35).

YĀSOVATI I. The name of Iśāna's city. DevīBāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that god Iśāna, the ruler of the north-eastern part, lives in the city called Yaśovatī.

YĀSOVATI II. A princess. (See under Eka-Vatī).

YATHĀVĀSA. A muni (sage) who followed the Vānaprasthadharma. He attained Heaven as a Vānaprasthadhar. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

YATI I. A king who was the eldest son of Nāhuṣa and the eldest brother of Yāyāti. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 31, mentions that he became a yogi and lived in the forest.

YATI II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

YATI III. A community-group. They were perhaps enemies of yājñas. There are references to them in various parts of the Rgveda.

YATINĀTHA. An incarnation of Śiva. Āhuka, a forest-dweller and his wife who lived in Arbuda (Abu) mountain were blessed by Yatīnātha and as a result of the blessing they were born as Nala and Damayantī in their next birth. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudra Sanhitā).

YĀṬUDHĀNA. One of the sons of Kaśyapa and Surāsa. All Rākṣasas who were born in this family are known as "Yāṭudhānas".

YĀṬUDHĀNA. A Rākṣasa who was born from the sacrificial fire when King Vṛṣādarbha performed a yāja. As directed by the king, she proceeded to the forest to destroy the Saptarṣi. She remained there as the owner of the tanks in which the sages used to take bath. Seeing her standing alone there, they enquired who she was. She answered that she was guarding the tank. She allowed them to enter into the tank after each of them explained the meaning of his name. Accordingly, the sages Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Kaśyapa, Viśvāmitra, Gautama and Bhradvāja explained the meaning of their names before getting down into the tank. At last when sage Sunassakha's turn came, he said that he was not prepared to explain in detail, the meaning of his name and that she should be satisfied with his statement that he was the sage Sunassakha. Yāṭudhāna became angry on hearing it and insisted on his giving the meaning of his name. Sunassakha with a single stroke with his "trīdāṇḍa" (trident) killed her. Sunassakha was really Indra himself. (M.B. Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

YĀṬUKARNA. A Devaguru. (See under Guruparamparā).

YĀUDEHYA I. A son of Dharmaputra. Mahābhārata. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76, states that this prince was born to Dharmaputra by Devikādevī, daughter of Govāsana, king of Śibi land.

YĀUDEHYA II. A native of Yauḍhya country. Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14, mentions, that the Yauḍhyas had participated in Yuddhiṣṭhīra's Rājasūya.

YĀUDEHYA III. A king. According to Matsya Purāṇa, he was the son of Pratīvindhya.

YĀUGANDHARĀVANA. Minister of Prince Udayana who is celebrated in the Purāṇas.

YAYA. A particular caste. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 207, states that they were Cāṇḍālas and were as ignorant as animals and birds.

YAYA. Māndhātā, the son of Yuvanāsava. (For more information see under Māndhātā).

YAYUDHĀNI. Son of Sātyaki the Yādava King. This hero who escaped from the ruin of the Yādava dynasty was presented with the region lying in the Sarasvatī river valley, by Yuddhiṣṭhīra. (M.B. Mauśala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).

YAYAVAKRITA I. A sage. (See under Avāvras).

YAYAVAKRITA II. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 26, refers to Yayavakrīta who was the son of Aṅgiras and the supporter of the eastern land.

YAYAVAKŚA. A famous river in Bhāratavarṣa (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 30).
YAVANA.

1) General. There are many references to Yavanas and the land of Yavanas in the Purāgas. There is a statement in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 34, that the Yavana race takes its source from Turuvasu, the son of Yayāti. There is another version in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 36, that Yavanas were born from the womb and the sides of Nandīni.

2) Other details.
(i) Arjuna's brother Sahadeva once conquered the Yavana land. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 73).
(ii) Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 17; mentions that on another occasion, Naka defeated the Yavanas.
(iii) According to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 35, the world will be filled with Yavanas and other Mleccha (low class) kings.
(iv) In the course of his conquests, Karṇa once subdued the Yavanas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 8).
(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21; mentions that king Sudakṣina of Kāmboja approached Duryodhana with an "Aksauhini" along with the Yavanas, to take part in Bhārata Yuddha.
(vi) Mahābhārata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65 states that at the time of Mahābhārata, Yavana land was part of India.
(vii) Originally Yavanas were Kṣatriyas. But they became Śūdras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 18).
(viii) Once there was a duel between a Yavana king and Mucukunda. (For further details, see under Mucukunda).

YAVASA. A particular region of Plaksadvipa, Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha says that Plaksadvipa had seven divisions which were - Śivam, Yavasam, Subhadrām, Sāntam, Mokṣam, Aṃrata and Abhayam.

YAVINARA. A king of the Pūru dynasty. Bāhyāsva was his father. Five sons were born to Bāhyāsva. They were Mukula, Śrījaya, Bhadrāṣṭra, Yavinara and Kramila. These five persons became famous in later ages under the name of Pāṇḍīlas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

YAYĀTA. An ancient holy place in India. King Yayāti conducted a Yāga at this place. From that time the place became sacred. (M. B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 32).

YAYĀTI. An eminent king of the lunar dynasty.
1.) Genealogy and Birth. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order - Brahmā - Atri - Candras - Budha - Purūravas - Āyuṣ - Nahuṣa - Yayāti. Sage Atri had three sons - Candras, Durvāsas and Dattātreya - by his wife Anasūyā. Candras's son was Budha, Budha's son was Purūravas. Purūravas's son was Āyuṣ. Āyuṣ's son was Nahuṣa who had six sons - Yati, Yayāti, Sāmyāti, Ayāti, Ayati and Dhrūva. Yayāti had two wives, Devayāni and Sarmiṣṭhā. Two sons, Yadu and Turvasu, were born to Devayāni. Of them, Yadu became the founder of Yaduvānī. Sarmiṣṭhā had three sons who were Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Puru. The Puruvānī trayes its origin to Puru.

2.) Yayāti's marriage. Yayāti married Devayāni, the daughter of sage Śukra and Sarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā. There is a story behind this marriage, given in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 76.

Once there was keen rivalry between Devas and Asuras. For achieving victory Devas accepted Bṛhaspati and Asuras accepted Śukra as their preceptors. Although Devas slaughtered all Asuras they were restored to life by Śukra by the power of his mantra. Devas and Asuras resumed their battle. "Mṛtasaṇjitīvāni" (the art of reviving the dead) was then unknown to the gods. Devas sent the handsome youth Kaca to Śukra, to learn Mṛtasaṇjitīvāni from him. There, Kaca fell in love with Devayāni, Śukra's daughter. But after acquiring the knowledge about Mṛtasaṇjitīvāni he returned, without marrying Devayāni. At the time of his departure, Kaca and Devayāni cursed each other. Devayāni's curse was that Kaca's newly acquired knowledge would not produce the desired result, while Kaca's curse was that Devayāni would not be married by any youthful rṣi. Sarmiṣṭhā was the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā, the Daitya king. Devayāni was the daughter of Śukra, the Daitya preceptor. One day they were enjoying a bath in a forest brook with their maids, after leaving their clothes on the bank of the stream. At that time Devendra who came that way, transformed himself into a strong wind and carried all the clothes to a place and put all of them in a heap. Seeing this, the women rushed out of the water and in the hurried confusion in snatching their garments Devayāni and Sarmiṣṭhā happened to put on each other's clothes. A quarrel took place between them on this mistake and the angry Sarmiṣṭhā pushed Devayāni into an unused well. Thinking that Devayāni was dead, Sarmiṣṭhā and her maids went to the palace.

At this time, Yayāti who was a king of the lunar dynasty happened to come there exhausted after his hunting. After rescuing Devayāni from the well and enquiring about her identity and the circumstances in which she fell into the well, he returned to his palace. Devayāni sent her maid Ghūriṣkā to her father and informed him about her mishap. The father, sage Śukra became angry towards Vṛṣaparvā, and came down from Daityalokā and settled down in the forest with his daughter. Afraid of his preceptor's curse and anger, Vṛṣaparvā came to Śukra and offered profuse apologies to him for his daughter's misconduct. But Śukra answered that he would be prepared to forgive only if Sarmiṣṭhā with 1000 maids would go and serve Devayāni. Finding no other way, Vṛṣaparvā yielded to the condition. Soon Sarmiṣṭhā and her 1000 maids went to the forest and began to serve Devayāni. Śukra returned to Daityalokā. Some time after this, Yayāti came to the forest one day for hunting. There he met Devayāni, being attended by many maids. In the conversation that followed, Devayāni was able to recognize Yayāti. She fell in love with him. But Yayāti insisted that he was not prepared to marry her without the consent of Śukrāēarya. So she sent one of her maids to her father and informed him of her desire. The sage readily agreed and had their marriage performed. He also presented them 1,000 maids. After the ceremony, Yayāti returned to his palace with his bride. Sarmiṣṭhā and the 2,000 maids also accompanied them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 76-81).

3.) Yayāti's domestic Life. After his arrival in his capital city, Yayāti made arrangements for Devayāni's residence in his own palace while Sarmiṣṭhā took up her residence.
in Aśokavanikā. In due course, Devayāni gave birth to a son. The sight of the child roused the motherly instincts of Sarmiṣṭhā who spent a thousand years in heartburning. One day, while she was brooding alone in her garden, Yayāti happened to come there. As they met, their hearts were moved by tender feelings. Sarmiṣṭhā approached Yayāti and begged for a son. But he tried to evade her by pleading that it was not proper to do anything in violation of Dharma. But in the end, he had to yield to her earnest supplications and philosophical arguments. Thus Sarmiṣṭhā conceived a son in secret.

When the child was born and it grew up, Devayāni’s mind was constantly vexed with the thought as to who was the father. Once in an angry mood she questioned Sarmiṣṭhā about it. She answered that the child’s father was a sage whose identity she could not ascertain in the excitement of her union with him. Any way, this answer satisfied Devayāni.

Soon after, another son was born to Devayāni. The first boy was named Yadu and the second son, Turvasu. As a result of the secret relations between Yayāti and Sarmiṣṭhā, three boys were born to her and they were named Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru, respectively. These boys also grew up in Aśokavanikā.

Once Devayāni was in her garden with her husband and children. Just then, Sarmiṣṭhā’s children also happened to come there. Devayāni who somehow had her own suspicions, enquired of them their parentage and the innocent children replied that their mother was Sarmiṣṭhā and their father was Yayāti. Devayāni who became furious, immediately went to Asuraloka and informed her father Śukra about it. On hearing it, the sage who was beside himself with anger owing to his paternal affection, cursed Yayāti so that he fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. Yayāti entreated Śukra to withdraw the curse since he had not enjoyed his youth to the full.

Śukra lifted the curse by assuring him that one of Yayāti’s sons would accept his father’s old age in exchange for his youth and the son would be crowned King after Yayāti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 82 and 83).

4) Rejuvenation. Yayāti asked his eldest son Yadu for his youthfulness. But the latter was not prepared to exchange it for his father’s old age. Next the father approached his younger sons, Turvasu, Druhyu, and Anudruhyu, with the same request, but all of them in turn refused to oblige him. Even though Yayāti promised to return the youthfulness to them after a thousand years, they refused to exchange it for his old age. Yayāti in his anger, cursed Yadu that his progeny would never become Kings. Turvasu’s family would be completely destroyed and Druhyu would float down the river, with unfulfilled desires and faded prosperity. Pūru wholeheartedly accepted his father’s old age in exchange for his youth and went to the forest. From that day Yayāti began his reign with a cheerful heart. (M.B. Ādi parva, Chapters 84 and 85).

In Pādma Purāṇa, there is a slightly different version about the way in which Yayāti fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. It is as follows:—Seeing the rigorous observance of Yayāti’s virtuous life, Devendra began to be alarmed at the thought that he might be dislodged from his place. He called his charioteer Mātali and ordered him to bring Yayāti with him to Indraloka.
his fall he did not crash to the ground. He explained his story to them. They allowed him to accept the fruit of their Yajña and to go to Heaven. But since he was a Ksatriya he told them he had no right to it. Just then, his daughter Mādhavī arrived there. She allowed him to take half of the divine grace which she had earned and with the help of it Yayātī ascended to Heaven again. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 120).

6) Other details.

(i) Yayātī witnessed the battle between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas which was fought as a result of the theft of King Virāṭa’s cows. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8, it is stated that King Yayātī continues to be in Yama’s assembly.

(iii) Yayātī once gave 1,000 cows to a Brāhmaṇa as ‘Gurudakṣiṇā’. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(iv) He came riding in Indra’s chariot and witnessed the battle between Arjuna and Kṛpācarya, from the sky. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 115, mentions that Yayātī had conducted 1,000 Yāgas and that he was the leader of all Kings.

YAYĀTIPATANA. A holy place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 48, mentions that a visit to this place will give the same reward as an Āśvamedha Yāga.

YAYĀVARA(S). A particular section of Brahmins. Their special feature is that they wander about here and there, following the course of life of the sages. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 13, mentions that the reputed sage Jāratkārū was a Yayāvara.

YODHYA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, we read that this country was conquered by Karṇa.

YOGA I. A sage who was the grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu and son of Śraddhā. Yoga was born to Śraddhā by Dharma. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YOGA II. It is Jñāna that reveals Brahman. Yoga is the concentration on Brahman. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 372, mentions that Yoga is the perfect union of Jīvātman and Paramātman.

In fact Yoga is activity with the body as its basis. It may be doubted how a mere physical carman helps Parabrahmārṣaṇa. But Mahārsis assert that there is an inseparable connection between matter and soul. Matter and soul are merely the two phases of the single “Astitva”. The object of Yoga is to achieve union with Parabrahman; in other words, to attain Mokṣa. The recitation of mantras is important in many disciplines connected with the practice of Yoga. The letters and words of mantras are so arranged that their recitation in the proper manner produces profound and favourable effects in the body. The habitual recitation of mantras helps the practice of Yoga.

There are two broad divisions of Yoga—Hatha Yoga and Rāja Yoga. The two are interconnected and have to be practised simultaneously. Hatha Yoga is mainly concerned with disciplining the body by various kinds of exercises. Standing in Pañcāgni with the arms held aloft; standing on one leg or standing on the head are some of these exercises. Rāja Yoga aims at arousing Prajñā by control of the senses.

Rāja Yoga involves the practice of eight disciplines. They are:—Yama, Niyama, Asana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi. An account of each of these is given below:—

i) Yama. Yama means refraining from evil courses or sinful things like cruelty or dishonesty. Yama demands the practice of Ahīṃsā, satya, asteya, brahmacyara and aparigraha. (Ahīṃsā = non-violence or not killing any creature. Satya = truth; practising truth in thoughts, words and deeds. Asteya = not stealing. Brahmacyara = sexual continence. Aparigraha = not coveting wealth or pleasures which are not absolutely necessary).

ii) Niyama. While Yama is a negative discipline, Niyama is a positive one. It requires the positive practice of virtuous courses. Niyama includes five things:—Sauca (cleanliness), Santosha (contentment), Tapas (penance and austerities), Śvādhyāya (study of the Vedas and incantations or mantras) and Īśvarapraṇidhāna (prayer and meditating on God). Sauca means not only cleanliness of the body, but also of the mind. The mind must be purged of all ‘malas’ like kāma, krodha and lobha. Tapas means ability to endure opposites (dvandvas) like heat and cold or joy and sorrow. Śvādhyāya is “study of philosophical works.” Īśvarapraṇidhāna—dedicating all actions unto God.

iii) Asana. The way of sitting or posture. Different postures have been prescribed for different actions. First of all, the yogi must choose a suitable place. (The place must be level, neat, free from stones, fire or gravel, agreeable to the mind and not causing irritation to the eyes). (Śvetāsvatara).

Different āsanas like Padmāsana, Svastikāsana and Siddhāsana have been prescribed for the practice of Yoga.

Putting the left leg on the right thigh and the right leg on the left thigh, holding the right hand with the left hand and the left toe with the right hand, place the chin on the chest and look at the tip of the nose. This is Padmāsana.

Sitting upright with the feet tucked under the hips is Svastikāsana.

Placing the left leg under the genitals, put the right leg on it. Insert the chin into the pit of the throat; control the senses; with steady eyes look at the point between the eye-brows. This is Siddhāsana which will break open the doors to Mokṣa.

iv) Prāṇāyāma. This is regulation of breathing. Inhale air through the left nostril, retain the air in the lungs for a few minutes and then exhale it through the right nostril. The process may be reversed—that is inhalation through the right nostril and exhalation through the left. This is the first step in Prāṇāyāma. Exhaling the breath and then not inhaling for some time is called recaka; the opposite process is called pūraka. The object of prāṇāyāma is to awaken Kūṇḍalini.

v) Pratyāhāra. This is a process of withdrawing the five senses from the outer world. A man who practises Pratyāhāra becomes oblivious of the outer world. This helps the concentration of the mind on the Ātman.

vi) Dhāraṇā. Withdrawing the mind from outer objects and concentrating it on the self.

vii) Dhyāna. Meditation, concentrating the mind on several places like Bhrūmadhyā and nābhičakra. Repeating the sacred syllable OM is very useful in dhyāna.
viii) Samādhī. In Samādhī the soul and mind unite, the mind merging into the soul. Samādhī is defined thus:—
When the mind and soul unite just as salt and water unite, that state is called Samādhī.

YOGAMĀYĀDEVĪ. The form of Dvī in the state of Yoga. It was Yogamāyādevī who transferred the seventh child of Devaki (Balabhadrarrāma) from her womb to that of Rohiṇī. (Devi Bhāgavata 4th, Skandha).

YOGAVATI. Third daughter of Menā. She was the wife of the sage Jaigaśavaya. (Padma Purāṇa, Śrṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

YOGĪṢVARA (S). A community of famous yogins. Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Drumila, Camasa and Karakhojana belonged to this community. They were the sons of the sage Kṣaṇa and used to go about naked, everywhere. This community of yogins participated in the yajñas of Nimi, King of Mithila and gave him advice on Bhāgavata-dharmarāja. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YONIDVĀRA. A sacred place on the Udaya mountain. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 95).

YONITĪRTHA. A sacred place in North India. A bath in this place will make a person handsome and he will get the reward of a gift of 1000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 84).

YOTIMATSAKA (POTIMATSUKA). A king in ancient India. There is a passage in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 20, which mentions that the Pāṇḍavas has sent an invitation to this king to take part in the war.

YUDDHA (WAR). (i) In ancient times in India war was considered a “Rājadharmā”. A war declared under this law was known as “Dharmayuddha”.
(ii) It is forbidden to use a weapon describing it falsely as another weapon. The use of arrows heated in fire, is also against Dharmayuddha.
(iii) It is also against the rules of Dharmayuddha to kill a person who gets down from the chariot, a eunuch, one with joined palms, one who squats on the ground, one who seeks refuge, one who is asleep, one who is naked, an unarm ed person, one who has come to witness the fight, one who is fighting with another, one whose weapon is broken, one who is bereaved by the death of a son or other relative, one who is vanquished, one who flies from battle, and one who refuses to attack in return etc.
(iv) If a warrior fleeing from battlefield is killed by his enemy, he carries with him his master's sins.
(v) All the glory earned by the young man who flees from battle, passes to his master.
(vi) The soldier himself may take all booty in the battle except chariots, horses, elephants, umbrellas, wealth, corn, cows, women, weapons, silver and gold.
(vii) All costly articles, seized in battle, such as gold, silver, jewels etc. are to be handed over to the King, according to the Vedas. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 7).

YUDHĀJIT I. A Kekaya King. This Yudhājīt was the brother of Kaikēyi, Daśaratha’s wife, and the uncle of Bharata. Daśaratha’s death took place at the time when Bharata was living in Kekaya country, at the invitation of Yudhājīt. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 73rd Sarga).

YUDHĀJIT II. A King of Avanti. Līlāvatī, the daughter of Yudhājīt was married by Sudarśana of the Iksvāku dynasty. In course of time their relations became hostile and they separated. At last Yudhājīt exiled Sudarśana from his country and crowned his own brother, Śatrūjit as King of Ayodhya. (See under Dhruvasandhi).

YUDHĀJITRA. A Yādava King. In Padma Purāṇa, Śrṣṭikhaṇḍa and in Matsya Purāṇa, it is stated that Yudhājītra was the son of Anamitra by Pṛthvi.

YUDHĀMANYU. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the side of the Pāṇḍavas. The following references are made to him in the Mahābhārata.
(i) Yudhāmanyu was a prince of the Pāṇcāla royal family. (M.B. Ṣudra Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).
(ii) He took his position in the battle as the bodyguard of Arjuna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 19).
(iii) Yudhāmānyu’s war-horse was a wonderful animal, both in spirit and shape. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 3).
(iv) In Bhārata Yuddha he fought against Kṛtavarmā, Durudhānana, Kṛpācarya, Citrasena the brother of Karna, and Aśvatthāmā. Kṛpācarya defeated him. He (Yudhāmānyu) killed Karna’s brother Citrasena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapters 92, 130; Karna Parva, Chapters 61, 63).
(v) Yudhāmānyu met with his death in his fight against Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Saucita Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 38).

YUDHIṢṬHIRA. See under Dharmaṇuputra.

UYA. See under Manvantara.

YUGANDHARA I (YUGANDHARAS). In the Purāṇas there are references to a mountain called Yugandhara. The inhabitants of that place were known as Yugandharas. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9, there is a statement that these people used to drink the milk of camels and donkeys.

YUGANDHARA II. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the Pāṇḍava party. He attacked Dronācārya in the battle and was killed by him in the end. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 30).

YUGAPA. A Deva Gandharva. Mahābhārata, Ađi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 56, mentions that he participated in Arjuna’s birth festival.

YUKTĀSA. A sage who was a Sāmavedin. There is a story about this sage in Paśca-vināśa Brāhmaṇa as Yuktāsā who was a scholar in Vedas and Śāstras once abducted two new-born babies and killed them. As a result of that sin, he lost all his Vedic knowledge. To recover his lost learning, he started an austere tapas. After many years of tapas, he got back the whole of his Vedic knowledge.

YŪPĀKṢA I. A military commander of Rāvaṇa. In the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa, he was killed by Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Sundara Kāṇḍa, 46 : 32).

YŪPĀKṢA II. A Rāksasa. In the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa, this Rāksasa was killed by the monkey Maṅḍa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa 76 : 34).

YUTAJIT. A son of King Bhoja of the Yaduvanśa. King Bhoja had six sons, who were—Nimroci, Kīkhaṇa, Vṛṣṇi, Sahasrajit, Śatājit and Yutajit. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

YUVANĀṢVA I. A King of the Iksvāku dynasty.
1) Genealogy. From Viśu were descended in the following order:—Brahmā-Mārici-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata Manu-Iksvaku-Vikṣi-Śaśāda - Kakutsthā (Puraṇāyana)-Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasena-Jit - Yuvanāśva. This Yuvanāśva was the father of Māndhātā.

2) Other details.

(i) Yuvanāśva performed many Yāgas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 5).

(ii) Once he drank water which had been subjected to special mantras (incantations) and as a result he became pregnant. Māndhātā was born by cutting open his belly. (For more details see under Māndhātā).

(iii) Yuvanāśva once received a wonderful sword from King Raivata. He presented that sword to King Raghu. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 78).

(iv) In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 61, it is stated that he had received "Pārava-rattva" (ability to know the highest and the lowest) because he had renounced meat-eating.

YUVANĀŚVA II. Another Yuvanāśva was the grandson of Visvagāśva of the Iksvāku dynasty and the son of Adri. This Yuvanāśva was the father of King Śrāva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).

YUVANĀŚVA III. Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 15, refers to another Yuvanāśva who was the son of Vṛṣadarbha. He attained Heaven by offering gifts of jewels, women and dwelling houses.

YUVANĀŚVA IV. A King of the Iksvāku dynasty who was the grandson of Māndhātā. There is reference to him in the Rgveda. (Rgveda, 10; 134).

YUYUDHANA. Another name for Śātyaki. For further details, see under Śātyaki.

YUYUTSU I.

1) General. Son of Dhrṛtarāṣṭra by a Vaiśya woman. He is not included in the 100 sons of Dhrṛtarāṣṭra. Yuyutsu is referred to by another name, "Karaṇa" in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 113.

2) Other details.

(i) It was Yuyutsu who disclosed to the Pāṇḍavas that once Duryodhana gave poisoned food to Bhīmasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 37).

(ii) Yuyutsu was present at the Svayānvar of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 2).

(iii) In Bhārata Yuddha, Yuyutsu joined the Pāṇḍava party. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 100).

(iv) He was an eminent warrior and an honest and mighty hero. Many Kings attacked him in the city Vārāgavata. He was not able to fulfil his desire to kill all of them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 58).

(v) In Bhārata Yuddha he fought with Subāhu and cut off his hands. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

(vi) The bullocks tied to Yuyutsu’s chariot were killed by Bhagadatta’s elephant. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 56).

(vii) Yuyutsu severely rebuked the Kauravas who rejoiced over the death of Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 60).

(viii) Yuyutsu was defeated in his fight with Ulāka. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 11).

(ix) As advised by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu went to Hastināpura with the ladies of the royal family. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 86).

(x) On his return after the battle, Yuyutsu described the details of the battle to Vīdura. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 21).

(xi) At the suggestion of Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu began to attend on Dhrṛtarāṣṭra to serve him. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).

(xii) Yuyutsu was guarding Hastināpura when the Pāṇḍavas went to the Himālayas to get money from Marutta. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 24).

(xiii) Under the leadership of Yuyutsu, the Pāṇḍavas offered Jalāṇjali (offering libations of water) to Dhrṛtarāṣṭra. (Āśravamāsika Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 12).

(xiv) When the Pāṇḍavas departed on their Mahāprāsthāna after handing over the reign of the country to Parīkṣit, it was Yuyutsu who was entrusted with the task of supervising Parīkṣit and the country. (M.B. Mahāprāsthāna Parva Chapter 1, Verse 6).

(xv) In Mahābhārata the following names are given for Yuyutsu :—Dhrṛtarāṣṭra, Dhrṛtarāṣṭraja, Dhrṛtarāṣṭraputra, Karna, Kauravya, Kaurava and Vaiśyāputra.

YUYUTSU II. There is a reference to another Yuyutsu who was the son of Dhrṛtarāṣṭra by his wife Gāndhārī in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 93.
